HOME BEAUTY.

"Who is on?" "Joy the boys of city,
On the lawn that is built by Miss Greensward,
Where the willows bow and the roses are red,
And the birds are gay in the blue overhead;
And the dear little Misses in frocks and frills
Go running about at their own sweet wills,
And play with the gentlemen, and talk to the boys,
Just as though they were girls and were not ladies,
"Miss" and "Mister" and "Hoity-toiteen,"
To wish bring the evil on the expectant.

O Act of the Household! Men may praise
Of Herb and "Infusion" and Redoubts;
They may talk of Home Rule, and Home Rule, and Home Rule
Of the State and the Home country;
Till the Day can shake in the bed-fit weal,
Tho the Act of the Dove-bird will please the best;
To the end of Time "will be still the same,
For the Earth and Heaven when the Children Cease.
—Austin Dobson in Harper's Young People.

The Record.

From the Detroit Free Press.

The New York Tribune, responding to the Democratic "rant about corruption," appeals to the "record" and says: "The plain people take note of the fact that most of the officials do not run away or get suddenly rich. Two United States treasurers, after handling untold millions, have died poor; not a single secretary of the treasury, or postmaster general in twenty years has left office with more evidence of wealth than he had when he entered it."

Whereupon the New York World produces the "record," as follows:

Who was secretary of the treasury before Mr. Folger?

William Windom, of Minnesota.

Mr. Windom went to Washington a poor man. When he came out of the treasury he was a millionaire. He built himself a mansion in Washington fit for the residence of a Vanderbilt. No one knew where his sudden wealth came from. But it came. He was a prominent candidate for the republican nomination for the presidency, and was voted for through more than thirty ballots. He went to Minnesota for an endorsement, and asked to be re-elected to the United States senate. The "plain people" had "taken note of the fact" that "Billy Windom," who had lived in a small house on a limited income at home, had grown into a millionaire at Washington. They circulated a lithograph of the Windom palace at Washington. The ex-secretary of the treasury was repudiated by his constituents. Then he came to New York and embarked in a scheme to establish a new stock exchange, which was a failure. This is one republican secretary's record.

Who was secretary of the treasury before William Windom?

John Sherman.

The name is enough. Entering Washington life literally without a dollar, John Sherman retired from the United States treasury six times a millionaire. Yet the petty larcenies of the fraudulent president's administration permeated the treasury department under John Sherman as thoroughly as they could if it had been presided over by a needy man. This is the record of another secretary of the treasury.

Who before John Sherman?

Benjamin H. Bristow.

Here indeed was an honest secretary. But how did he leave? The republican administration, finding that besides being honest himself he was determined to make other public officials honest and to root and root out the thieves, whether in a whisky distillery or the white house, kicked him out. The republican politicians punished and killed him for daring to stop stealing. Politically, Benjamin H. Bristow is dead and buried.

Then the postmasters general.

Was not Mr. Cresswell postmaster general? He certainly enriched himself while in office and came out with a very gratifying addition to his worldly means.

There was a postmaster general named Tyner. The general belief is that he made it pay handsomely.

Then there was postmaster general Brady! Practically he was postmaster general. Key was a mere figurehead. Certainly he ruled the department. Everybody bowed to his authority. Does the Tribune mean to say that Brady came out of the post-office department no richer than he went into it? How, then, did he obtain money enough to buy three republican papers in Washington to be run in the interest of the republican administration and the star route defense? Where did he get the $250,000 or $300,000 to pay his share of the expenses of the trial?

But why does our esteemed contemporary continue its tribute to the honesty of secretaries of the treasury and postmasters general? Why not include other cabinet officers? May not the slighted secretaries consider that the Tribune, by indirection and omission, is "mum-shugging" at them?

W. W. Belknap, of Iowa, for instance, was secretary of war. Why overlook him? Did he not develop the resources of post-traderships and deeply interest the public in these profitable assignments? Was there not some proceeding representing an impeachment to add point and flavor to his slighted secretaryship?

George M. Robeson, of New Jersey, also. Was he not secretary of the navy? Why should he be ignored by the Tribune? The purchasers of worthless government vessels and hosts of patriotic, enriched contractors will rise up indignantly against the slight.

The Tribune should be more careful and not make recklessly absurd statements.

John Bright on Protection and Labor.

The following extract from a recent speech of John Bright gives his opinion of the effect of free trade on the British workingmen:

It is a very interesting fact, that wherever a system of protection prevails it is defended by the same arguments and by the same misstatements. I will not give them a shorter word, though it would not be unpleasable. In our time these very gentlemen who were opposed to us had the people [illegible] and carried foreign commerce to some many millions, people would be thrown out of employment, land would go to waste, and the laborer would be worse paid than he was before. They are an ingenious people. I suppose they have looked on maps, but they have never read anything of the history of the countries to which they refer, because I have never found in history a map where a people [illegible] who had not to be taxed. It is the universal happy, in some cases unhappy, condition of all people, but now in the United States the very same argument is used. The protection party in the United States say to the people, what will become of you if you allow the manufacture products of any foreign country of England to come into the United States? What will become of your labor, and what will become of your wages? And so they say exactly what our country gentlemen said forty years ago, only talking of pauper labor instead of untaxed labor. But our pauper labor, I think, has for the most part vanished, and if wages have doubled during the last forty years, and everything upon which wages are expended is reduced, what can be more monstrous than to speak of the pauper labor of England? Perhaps, though I am speaking here in this vast assembly of my own countrymen, I may be permitted to address a word to the working artisan class of the United States of America. I am not an enemy of the United States. I have fought her battles in this country when for a time I was not sure that the contest would not go against her. I have as much sympathy with the United States now as I had then, and as much, I think, almost as if I had been born upon her soil. I will say this to the workingmen and artisans of the United States: that countries of legislation in this country have not done so much, conferred so great benefits upon the labor of England, as have been conferred by that great minister of forty years ago, Sir Robert Peel, and by Mr. Gladstone, the great minister of to-day.

Work and Wages.

The high-tariffites never grow tired of assuring the workingmen that the high taxes placed upon many of the necessaries of life are mainly for their benefit—they proclaimed this loudly just prior to the election of 1880 again in 1882, and they put forth the same plea in order to capture their votes in 1884—all the time asserting that the object of the high tax policy is to protect them from the pauper labor of Europe and to insure high wages.

It is evident, however, that the workingmen are beginning to entertain serious doubts as to the truthfulness of this claim, and it is not at all unnatural that they should express their doubts, as they did in the labor congress at Cleveland a few weeks since, at a time when food, rent, fuel, clothing, groceries, etc., are about as high as they ever have been, and wages are lower. They begin to realize that they do not get any of the money extorted from consumers by the tariff laws, and this is one of the most hopeful indications that the era of licensed spoliation is almost at an end.

Protection is having its legitimate effect upon the business of the country. Manufacturers find themselves with stocks on hand which they cannot dispose of, as the home market is supplied and they are excluded from foreign markets by the tariff restrictions upon trade, and hence they are compelled to diminish production and put down wages where they do not cease entirely add furnish labor no employment.

For a large share of this depression of business the protective-tariff policy is the cause. It places limitations and restrictions upon trade, and by confining our manufacturers to a single market restrains production and is therefore the worst enemy in the form of legislation of the workingmen.

A protective tariff is a mere pretense of low wages and no wages than it is of high wages and permanent wages. Experience, the dearest and surest of all teachers, is demonstrating this to be true.—[Ex.

How Protection Protects.

It was a cruel thing which a cigarmaker did at a meeting called in the interests of protection at Brooklyn. He was the last of several speakers, all of whom had advocated high tariff as a means of sustaining wages, and he was heartless enough to say that no trade was so well protected as that of the cigarmakers, while the bricklayers had no protection at all; yet cigarmakers in Brooklyn got but $7 a week, and the unprotected bricklayer earns $4 per day. This was such a striking and unanswerable illustration of the effect of protection on wages, that the managers of the meeting could not well be otherwise than disgusted. Yet the cigarmaker was right, and he might have carried his argument still further. It can be shown that just in proportion as industries are protected are wages low, and labor degraded all through the list. Tariff does nothing which its advocates claim for it except to enhance the price of the necessaries of life to the poor. It does not sustain wages; it does not diversify industry; it does not increase the wealth of the country; it does not promote enterprise; it, in fact, does the very opposite of all these things.—[Evening News.

The Place for Prohibitionists.

Prohibitionists will remember that a few weeks since we asserted that the place for them was in the prohibition party, that the pronouncements made by the republican party for their privileges on the claim of being "moral" was but such a scheme as satan devises. Our contemporary was "shocked" at our boldness, and thought we had evil designs on the prohibitionists, and argued that we were trying to make democratic votes, reiterated its statement that the temperance vote should be with the republican party. But the proceedings of the last few days will probably change the Advertiser's tune. The republican conference in Detroit decided that in the future they would leave the question to "the churches and prohibition fanatics."—[Cass Jeffersonian.

Must Not Count their Chickens Too Soon.

If the republicans are wise they will not regard as absolutely certain that Ohio and Illinois, or even that Michigan and Wisconsin will, give their votes to the republican nominees in 1884. It is just possible that these states, or two or three of them, will go the other way. The democrats certainly will not claim any of these states before the election is over. But if the republicans undertake to fight the next national campaign on the sectional issue it will be possible for the democratic party not only to carry these four states, but also to pick up one or two of the others now placed in the "republican column."—[Buffalo Courier.

Give the Mechanic a Chance.

The Ovid Register comments as follows upon a statement of the St. Johns Republican that the wool growers of Clinton county are out $15,000 by the reduction of the duty on wool:

Then protection makes wool dear and keeps it dear. If Clinton county wool growers are out that amount, then Clinton county clothing wearers are so much ahead. But protectionists have always argued that competition in wool growing would make wool cheap; that had to be argued to gain the vote of the mechanic. Why should the Republican mourn now that the mechanic is promised clothing for less money?

No Morality unless with Votes.

The republican office-holders' conference at Detroit decided to do away with all kinds of morality not accompanied with votes. In other words, the temperance question having become burdensome and heavy, they will discard it. Morality must seek a new market, and for the first time since the war the churches will have to pray for something else besides the republican party, as the leaders of that party are to try a scheme to obtain power into which religion and temperance do not enter.—[Dowagiac Times.

THE EAST.

GOV. BARSTOW, of Vermont, ordered four companies of militia to quell a labor disturbance at Hic, in the Green Mountain State. Three hundred troops, armed with pistols and knives, took possession of the mine explosives threatened to destroy the mine and blow the town sky-high, but they resisted their prey, which is large enough, owing to the mining company being humanely embalmed. October 30 accounts were received from Honolulu, Ha., to a tidal wave, landed in the Lahaina, and had a terrible existence.

THE heat in New York last week was most intense. There were many cases of sunstroke. The street-cry companies erected temporary shels for their horses. Each street was painted by each hand with blocks of ice and covered by tarpaulin. The greatest suffering was among the immigrants at Castle Garden. No less than 675 children under the age of one year died in the city during the week, according to Health Bulletin, officer of the Weather Bureau Nov. 30 dead. He served three terms in Congress and was a member of the National Republican Convention at Chicago in 1880. He died at the Washington Athenaeum at Baltimore. Six hundred lunatics were in the asylum. It is reported that the confederate was started by numerous suicide. The loss is $150,000. E. R. Morgan, the cotton member of the New York Stock Exchange, is dead. Two hanging prisoners at Lockport, N. Y., were drowned in the Schuylkill river while swimming.

NEAR Pittsville, Ct., a passenger train dashed into a gravel train, causing the death of two men, injuring one fatally, and badly shaking up the passengers. The bodies of two of the victims were thrown forty feet over the telegraph wires. A telegraph operator caused the disaster by failing to give the passenger conductor necessary instructions. Four apartment buildings, eleven stories high, are to be erected in Twenty-fourth and Fifty-ninth street, New York, at a cost of $2,000,000.

THOMAS J. MAHER, Jr., of the management of the Tewksbury (Mass.) Almshouse, refuses to produce his memorandum book, showing what disposition was made of the earnings of the institution. The investigating committee, March will level over the book if the owners of the dairy give up for dissection are not published. He leaves Massachusetts at the breakout of their friends.

A TRAIN containing Masonic excursionists collided with a freight on the Buffalo and Southwestern railroad near Jamestown, two trails hole is being kicked and one fatally injured. Both passengers and several freight cars were completely wrecked. All the excursionists escaped without injury. Dr. Hequem, the American horse which won the English derby, has arrived at New York with Aquera and Parthenia.

THE WEST.

KANSAS again has the first car-load of winter wheat to Chicago. It bagged 55, 2, and weighed fifty-nine and a half pounds to the measured bushel. Nelson Stewart, colored, killed an official of the Wabash road, near Lake Ridge, Ill., on the Fourth of July, and fled. Lynch winds in being captured he was jailed at Mound City, where a mob tried to take the prisoner out of a trial and execution by lynching him.

AN outbreak in the penitentiary at Salem, Ore., resulted in the death of three convicts, the fatal shooting of three, and the escape of eight. As the ex Astoria, Ore., swept away property valued at estimated value of $250,000. The pomodoro house of Whitcomb & Keeble's clothing house were closed on account of the death of D. Armour. The Bank Bill one of the bank robbers was shot $10,000 Wooden Open House at St. Paul, Minn., was destroyed by fire. Twenty-six buildings at Evansville, Minn., were burned, entailing a loss of $150,000.

The death is announced of Mlle. Marie Latta, the well-known operatic and concert singer of Bloomington, Ill. The cause of her death was a complication of troubles, resulting in endless and medicines. She had been ill for two or more, during which time she visited her professional career and accumulated a handsome fortune. Her last appearance was at Castle Garden. No less than 675 children under the age of one year died in the city during the week, according to Health Bulletin, officer of the Weather Bureau Nov. 30 dead. THE JOURNAL

BY CHAR. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN.

SALUTATORY.

Well, here at last is the first number of the much-talked-of democratic newspaper. How do you like it?

CHAS. J. STRANG.

Notes and News.

If anyone fails to discover the policy and purpose of this paper by this first issue, let them come and interview the editor.

The Ohio republicans approve the submission of a constitutional amendment prohibiting the liquor traffic. So did the Michigan republicans last year.

The platform of the Ohio republicans demands a tariff for the protection of American producers. How about the consumers? Don't they have rights worth considering?

New Hampshire is still balloting for U. S. senator. This contest, like the one in our own state, will rent the republican party many votes, if it does not lose to them the entire state.

The Burlington Hawkeye says the republicans "have their little closet squeeze," which is "not caused by differences on the proper policy to pursue, but a quarrel growing out of general differences."

Apollo commandery K. T., of Chicago, 145 strong, have started on a pilgrimage to Europe. At London they will be tendered a reception, after which they will visit the continent in small parties, as inclination dictates.

Protection is the right thing. Yes, indeed. We want protection—but it is wanted by the consumers against the crushing monopolies and rings. This is the kind of protection that the democrats propose to give the country.—[Chippewa Democrat.

From time to time various state papers contain mutterings of dissatisfaction with certain decisions of the supreme court, plainly indicating that the tide is not distant when some new and younger blood will be infused in to that august body.

The recent action in regard to the trade dollar is an excellent groundback argument. It goes far to prove that it is not the "value" of a piece of money that gives it circulation, but the pledge of the government that it is receivable for all debts and dues.

The Manistee Democrat was sold on a mortgage July 5th, and was laid in by Representative Blacker. A. B. Carrier, of the Frankfort Express, has been engaged as business manager, at a salary of $1,500, and it is expected he will build up the paper and make it successful.

It having been charged that architect Hill was paid $5,000 for locating a government building on the property of Senator Tabor, of Denver, Colo., the Detroit Free Press suggests that it might be well to investigate the peculiarly selection of a site in Detroit unworthy so fine a building.

Secretary Teller has decided that lands now closed to settlement to enable the Northern Pacific R. R. Co. to make selections shall be opened in three months from service of notice on the company, and that where contests arise in the selection, settlers shall have an equal right with the company.

John W. McGrath, of Detroit, has been appointed commissioner of labor statistics, with office at Lansing. Representative Devlin has been appointed deputy. The duty of the "bureau" is to collect and present in annual reports to the governor statistical details relating to all the departments of labor in the State.

If the republican leaders desire to make a protective tariff law that will help the American laborer, let them put a prohibitory tariff on pauper immigration. Then, and only then, will a protective policy benefit all classes alike. While the manufactured goods are taxed, almost without limit, the paupers themselves are brought here by hundreds and thousands to compete with us on our own soil.

S. W. Dorsey, ex-secretary of the republican national committee, has written a letter in reply to a request for records of the expenditures and transactions of that committee, in which he says he has no records to give—none were delivered to him by his predecessors, and none were kept by himself in condition to be transferred to his successor; a "hamlet of forgetfulness was built to cast upon what they had a right to measure with the evidence of honesty at the end of each campaign."

The statistics of the charity organizations of New York and Brooklyn show that 250,000 persons in these cities receive charitable assistance. In London, with a population more than twice as great, there are only 100,000 such persons. If free trade is responsible for the pauperism of London, as the protectionists assert and from time immemorial have asserted, then the five-fold poverty of New York, the paupers numbering many in the United States, must be due to protection.—[Free Press.

In the Hill investigation last Thursday, Stimemetz testified that T. J. Hayward, of the firm of Bartlett, Hayward & Co., was paid $4,800 for plans and specifications and superintending work connected with the heating apparatus of the Chicago custom house. Hayward sublet the job of making plans to draughtsmen at $4.50 per day, and Stimemetz said he could do the work in two weeks. Hayward's superintendency consisted in visiting the Chicago building once, his expenses being paid by the government.

The next time a protectionist says that protected manufacturers make goods as cheap in this country as they are made abroad, ask him why Mr. Robert Porter took pains to report, and protection papers take pains to repeat the following extract from a British manufacturer: We can make goods cheaper than you can; and, give us off a chance we will beat you out of your home markets! That is to say, protection makes every man too big in Michigan pay a premium on everything they buy for the enrichment of the tenth man. Let awesome reform come, put by and make use of this frank admission of the protectionists.—[Free Press.

A late number of the Detroit Free Press details the horrors of a night in the tenement district of New York, and concludes with the following paragraph: "New York, according to the census, is the greatest manufacturing city in the United States. Nothing that the New York Tribune's protection agent, Mr. Porter, can find to say of the English workingmen is more horrible than can be told of the tenement districts in New York. And if any English paper should care to advocate free trade as the Tribune advocates protection, it need only have one of its representatives write up these crowded New York streets in the great manufacturing center of the United States."

Do a Little Good Missionary Work and Do it Now.

The idea is wide-spread and well-founded belief that the democrats are going to carry Michigan in 1884. This is a very pleasurable feeling, but it will not be realized without thorough organization and active labor by every democrat. It is not that democrats are a very naughty set, or to work successfully they must be in terrorist. There are democrats in this county who do not vote, and many who do not take their home paper. Continual defeats have discouraged them, and they take no interest in politics. Let our workers in every neighborhood see to it that such persons at least take their county paper. The republican party owes much of its success to its party papers. In this work every democrat can do good by seeing that his neighbor, particularly if he is a democrat, takes some democratic newspaper, and keeps posted on the live issues of the day.—[Michigan Democrat.

In some respects this will apply to Charlevoix county. In THE JOURNAL, the democrats will have a paper which will aim at all times to keep them informed on the political affairs of the county and state, and if a little effort is made by every man interested, it can be thoroughly circulated and of great value to the party in the county.

Dorsey's Disclosures.

The crushed worm turns. So does Dorsey, though he is not by any means a crushed worm. He is simply a worm which the administration has pretended to try to crush. But the material fact is, that he turns. The long threatened disclosures are begun and the republican leaders are beginning to hunt their holes.

Thus far Dorsey has disclosed nothing which has not been fully anticipated or guessed at. The worst charge he brings is the charge that Stanley Matthews was brought into the supreme court for $150,000; and this has been so long suspected that there will be no surprise. There will, however, be deep regret; for even among those whose suspicions were strongest there has always been a faint hope that it might prove unfounded. There is something so utterly degrading in the fact of corruption like this in the highest tribunal in the land, that the most earnest opponent of the republican party would prefer the loss of such capital as the proof of the transaction brings to the shame of it. For, while the responsibility falls upon the republican party and its leaders, the shame of a degraded and corrupted court fall, in a measure, upon the whole people.

Dorsey's statement, of course, is not final. But coming as it does from one of the leading participants in the nefarious transactions whereof the sale of a seat on the bench was but a part, it has all the weight of a confession. If it is to be met, it must be met at once, and with the most convincing refutation. Failing this, Stanley Matthews owes it to his associates on the supreme bench, to his party, and above all to the people, to step down and out. There can be no confidence in the administration of justice when the stream is polluted at its source.—[Free Press.

The fourth was celebrated here in the usual manner, with speeches, free lemonade, fireworks, etc., which drew a crowd. Very little demonstrations were made in the village, which is towards evening, which prevented the display of fireworks which was anticipated, but a dance at Bartholomew's hall, held the younger portion of our people till the "small hours."

O. B. Weed & Co. relate an interesting story to our advertising columns which our readers will not fail to notice. They are live men, and are prosperous and increasingly so every day, and take a more medical of making it still greater. Read their card, and especially enlarged their department, let the citizens subscribe for a more and larger share of their patronage, and they will doubtless have to hood their business, goodness.

The resources of Charlevoix county are equal to the best in the state. The hardwood timber adjacent to this lake and South Arm is unsurpassed in quality, and can be converted into manufactured articles much more cheaply than that of inferior counties without water facilities. The fishing grounds are unsurpassed, if equaled, and the land when cleared, if properly tilled, will make as good farms as any in the state.

The entire outfit of type and machinery of the Jackson Citizen was freighted on the City Line & Co., of Chicago, which is a sufficient guarantee that it was "good." The type is nonpareil, No. 1 and minion, No. 2, and strictly uniform, but well adapted to the work of a country newspaper. In connection with the newspaper, is a small output for job work, for which new styles will be added from time to time as necessity demands.

We have no apology to offer for any shortcomings in this paper. Our entire outfit arrived by the steamer Lawrence on Monday, July 4th. Since that time it has been carried to the Bridge Street office, set up, proofs taken, corrected, and form, and personals written, everything set up and printed, and the paper ready for mailing on the 12th. This is scarcely four days since the 4th, and Mr. C. J. Grier as "foreman." If anyone can do better, let him show up.

The announcement of the pioneer merchant of Charlevoix, Mr. Amos Pew, will be found on the eighth page. Mr. Pew was one of the first to place in his, that the old dock extending into the lake, a portion of which is still standing, and established himself in the old building still standing near the channel, west of the Fountain City House, and drive to the interests and necessities of the customers, he has grown with the town, and now occupies one of the largest and most completely stocked stores in Charlevoix, besides caring for the constantly increasing whole business of over his dock in the rear of his store.

Of the value of a narrow-gauge railroad as a business investment the Detroit Free Press says: "The Port Huron & North Western Narrow Gauge R. R. Co., controls 210 miles of road, and has built within the past three years. The outlay for this has been very profitable to its proprietors. It is a fact that they are eager to build more lines. The road is a comprehensive scheme which is capable of being developed with the increased prosperity of the lower peninsula and reached by railroads. Every mile of road built in Lower Michigan will improve nothing that has so well by Port Huron as the enterprise of these men.

It has been intimated that Charlevoix is big enough for a population and business to support two papers. It is a common expression that "competition is the life of trade," and cures that there is room for more than one paper. The first to grab the best wins. The JOURNAL, the last mind do the best he can, offers having a very unmerchantable position. In a business point of view the contested financing, a forlorn chance of getting on good a seat as any in the city. So far as we know, we are the only paper in a long journey, and we can't find a seat we will stand up; but we propose to hold on and try to ride in this way and take the hard knocks and rocks. And our time will come by and by.

An old river captain who has known the lake and its commerce for a long time, says that there is "always room for one more." Well, we don't know about that, but we do know that there is room for a good one, and we propose to be that one. We are here to stay, and we can't find a seat we will stand up; but we propose to hold on and try to ride in this way and take the hard knocks and rocks. And our time will come by and by.

this place from its beginning, asserts as his belief that if the people at the mouth of the river were made eligible for the landing of passengers and freight, in fair weather from the largest lake steamers, they would bring to our village a class of business men able to influence and secure an appropriation from the government for a good harbor. Our harbor improvements permit these steamers to reach the harbor inside in a storm. Would it not be policy to suggest this to Uncle Sam, "and have him cover the pier on the north side so that it could be reached for passengers and freight, and thus make it possible to secure a larger business?

The first jury case was Orrin D. Wood against the township of Norwood and was watched with considerable interest, being a case brought to recover an illegal tax paid under protest. The illegality alleged was that the township raised a certain amount to repay the township treasurer an amount stolen from him.

"SEEMS."

BY SAMUEL W. DUFFIELD.

When days are bright and joys is high,
When sun and wind are merry,
The little rippling dancing sky
Of a placid sea of my life,
And I sail on the tide of song for
Is a boat with a white-winged time.

My heart is light; I laugh and sing
As by my side I lie,
Thinking of the golden hair, wind,
Blown from the west the
I look and see the dimpled face
That's mine—and herein

But!, against that dimpled image
Which paints the sky and sea,
Shadows of coming ills begin to urge
Their sombre presence
They seem, the world's divine sense,
Through storm and

And yet the mariner in the sand
The tide is all in vain
To turn from its flow and land,
Or, wanting, to change
And, weed and shell floating up to land,
Will mind no one's

O sail of my life! from all a
By which the storm
A broken wheel or
Or a broken compass
Why should I when the
Which gives me? I

O sail of mine! thou idlest well
The storm and
I will throw be
I will throw the idle one
I have the idle wings behind
Thou shalt storm proof.

THE WRECKER'S DAUGHTER.

BY M. CROSBY FARRER.

"You hear that, do you, madam?" asked the old man, guard in a low tone, as the awful sound shake over the rolling water. "It is an omen of evil, and we must heed it, we must return at once.

"Pshaw!" I exclaimed, carelessly, "How superstitious you coast people are. I would not miss this sunset for anything. It is only the simple tolling of a bell somewhere near us that you hear."

The old man glanced uneasily out over the glittering waves. Far away, small clouds began to pile themselves up in a long black line against the horizon, and a flock of gulls, that had been idly floating in the air, now went circling and whooping and screaming over the broad expanse of troubled sea around us.

"For sixty years, madam," he retorted, with a sort of nervous determination, "I've lived on this coast, and I know by this time that, when the toll of the bell is heard, there is sure to be trouble on the sea."

"Nonsense!" said I, laughing heartily, "I'll risk it if you will."

He shook his head.

"No, no. God forbid it!" he said, turning the boat about and making for the shore. "Terrible things have happened here, and if there was not a cloud in sight nor the ghost of a sigh in the breeze, yet if that bell tolled I should make for a safe haven. It means trouble, storm and shipwreck."

And the obstinate old man shook his grizzled head with a gravity that impressed me, in spite of my disappointment. The wind, which had been gradually rising as he spoke, now came in money gusts upon the waters, piling the waves up higher and higher and making our frail boat rock as if it were bewitched, while above the tremulous roar of the sea and the shrill scream of the gulls, as they swept in sidling circles over our heads, came the mournful stroke of the mysterious bell.

"It is St. Quentyn's," said the old man, in an awed tone, as if in reply to my remonstrance.

"Not St. Quentyn's-on-the-Point," exclaimed I, in astonishment. "Why, man, you're crazy. St. Quentyn's is only an old ruin. I saw it yesterday, and nothing much is left of it save the tower, and even that is crumbling down. The bell itself is covered with rust and looks as if it hadn't been rung in a century."

"It is the same, however," he persisted, as he turned the boat forward with long strokes.

"It is that which warns us. No man pulls the rope, indeed, there is no rope to pull; no one is ever seen about the ruins, yet, surely as a creature comes up, you may hear that bell toll. It has been so through my time, and my father's time before me, and for years before that. St. Quentyn's bell is haunted, ma'am, and has been, as the story goes, since the time of Wolfgang, the wrecker, a hundred years ago."

I laughed at the piece of news. Haunted things, I did not believe in, much less, a reputed "haunted bell." Still, I could not deny, that it was very slender of the old stone-covered bell at St. Quentyn's, which I had seen the day before swinging, high up in the ruined belfry, so that once had been a monastery, long-ground a mile of warning to mariners upon the sea.

"You shall hear me the story," I said, "if we ever reach the shore again. It must be worth hearing, even if I do not quite believe its germ-means.

As the frail bark leaped on the crest of a wave to safe landing on the gravelled beach, a flash of lightning, followed by a peal of thunder, told that the storm was indeed upon us.

As we hurried, in this manner, to the shore, the thunder of the surf was ringing in my ears, the thunder of the story of St. Quentyn's-on-the-Point.

It was before, on this coast, more than a hundred years ago, if our dates are correct, began the old ex-coast grand, that Wonder Wolfgang and his band of rovers established themselves and engaged in the wicked business of luring ships to this beach, for the sake of plundering them. Many is the strong vessel that, attracted by the beacon fires lighted on St. Quentyn's Point, has come to pieces on the hidden rocks, and Wolfgang, and his band, have grown rich and powerful on the plunder. Well, stay a time, there came a Spanish galleon, driven out of her course by adverse winds, and with the doubloons and bars of gold, and chests of silks, with which she was loaded, was a greater treasure to the mind of the wrecker chief, than all else put together. The daughter of a rich old Spanish Don, was a passenger on the luckless ship, and fell a prey to the rapacious freebooter.

For the first time, he felt his lessons filled with the burning fires of love, and he conducted his wooing in the fiery, bold, temperamental fashion, natural to him.

At St. Quentyn's, then, lived a priest, and when the unhappy dame discovered the fate in store for her, she fell upon her knees and prayed Wolfgang to send for him and have the marriage solemnized according to the forms of her church.

Nothing loth, he complied with her request, and so, clothed in costly apparel and sparkling with jewels, one fine morning the Spanish girl found herself bound in wedlock to the wild leader. In little more than a year, however, the lady died, leaving a little daughter, and each year of her life had been a year from the child of the idols one should be sent to a convent and reared in ignorance of her father's occupation.

Wolfgang passionately loved his wife, and his grief, when she died, was carried out. The infant was taken to France and there was carefully nurtured and reared in one of the celebrated convents. She goes to manhood, a fair favored lead enriched with a glorious beauty and a nature having disposition that was at the same time powerful and shadowed by the influence of her sex. At the age of 17 she was taken from the convent, and, through the influence of a friend of her father, a home was secured for her for a time, in the house of a gentleman in her native country. She was a spoiled beauty, and soon received about her, attracted by her wonderful beauty, her guileless manners and her tantalizing ways, a coterie of admirers, clothed in splendid attire. Wolfgang found his child, lying upon her all the love of his barbarous nature. For his child nothing was too good, and he poured out his gold in a manner that astonished his followers. And she flourished at all. Though clothed in magnificent array and endowed by heaven with an intensely earthly loveliness of face and form, her heart was kept inexperienced from the world. She succeeded the pose and the pouts, and the fans of her grandmas were trying, the bad.

Wonder-eyed, leaving the fascinations lavished upon her child, grew still more proud and fond of her, and guarded from her knowledge with selfishness care the secret of his dreadful occupation.

And she worshiped him. Seeing her father only at long intervals, and encouraged by him in the dispensation of her charities, enjoying his society only when he was in his best and gentlest moods, the Lady Christobel grew to womanhood, believing him to be the best and greatest of men.

She went about doing good. Emulating the example of the gentle Nazarene, she left the crowded city and went into the byways and forgotten places.

In this manner, place unknown to Wolfgang, she unconsciously made her way to St. Quentyn's.

The hamlet then, as now, was but a collection of rude huts—the abode of a simple, poor people. None knew her to be the daughter of their lawless lord, and she labored among them, teaching them and administering comfort to alleviate the distress she saw on every side.

Wolfgang himself, with some of his most valued followers, was away on a journey, when his daughter came to St. Quentyn's. So there was none to oppose her in her work for the salvation of souls. It was at this time that she caused the bell to be rung in the old monastery; the bell which, since the sad tragedy enacted there a little later, has never ceased to send out its solemn warning whenever there is to be any severe storm upon the sea.

It was there, high upon that rocky cliff, in the very shadow of the ruined monastery—a ruin almost as great then as now, that the heaven fires were lighted by the wreckers to entice the ships upon the sunken rocks.

The Lady Christobel saw with horror what the real occupation of the people was, by the frantic hurrying too and fro, the many anxious eyes turned seaward, and, above all, the low muffled words of which inadvertently escaped their lips whenever a ship's sails showed themselves in sight.

To turn them from the wickedness of their ways, she strove with mind and soul; but it was with a sick heart that she discovered the lawless wreckers acknowledged a superior authority in the commands of their ferocious chief, a being to her, terrible and dread.

There came, at length, one of those sudden, unacountable hurricanes which, sweeping the sea, hurl ships and people into nothingness in the twinkling of an eye.

She saw preparations going on on the shore, that boded no good for any, she set left afloat by the storm, and she determined that so far as her in her power she would succor the helpless.

Secretly, she left the crowded hut, and, unaccompanied, hurried to the waters, where she was soon lost to sight quickly to and fro on the beach, and people, and the fanes of her goodness went through, the bad.

Wonder-eyed, hearing the fascinations lavished upon his

News Brevities.

Under this head we would like a news-letter from every township in the county.

Boyne City has a cigar factory in operation.

Dogs recently interviewed C. Mayhew's flock of sheep, killing two.

Boyne City and Advance were without mails the first week of the current quarter.

The township of South Arm has purchased a $300 fire and burglar proof safe.

Farmers report crops as looking favorable. The hay crop will largely exceed that of previous years.

Sporting men from the outside are daily finding their way to the Jordan, where the fishing is said to be excellent.

A laughable feature of the Boyne City celebration was walking a greased pole suspended over the water. Of course the unsuccessful adventurers got wet.

During the gale at Beaver Island on the 8th, the schooners Six Brothers, W. A. Smith, and H. E. Fisher, and a large three-master, dragged their anchors, the latter over a mile; and at High Island one fish boat was beached, besides damage to buildings, nets, etc.

The fourth was patriotically observed by the citizens of Boyne City. H. A. Jersey was the orator for the occasion, and his remarks were heartily applauded. Races and games were freely indulged in, and decided without "argument," as is sometimes the case in small towns.

The fourth was celebrated at Beaver Island by a boat race, for which there were fifteen entries. The prizes were a hunting case watch, a boat compass, an alarm clock, and a piece of jewelry. Joe Smith's boat took first, John Shabatese of High Island second, another High Island Indian third, and James Gordon fourth. A dance at the O'Malley house and fireworks on the point were the attractions of the evening.

Giving Away a Republican State.

When the heat of fanatical enthusiasm with which the prohibitionists carried their point in the Iowa republican convention has cooled, when its members come to look around among the voters, and begin their Sunday-school and blue-ribbon campaign, they are likely to realize that they have made no ordinary blunder in coupling protection with prohibition in the platform. If there is any state in the union which has a strong and well-organized body of independent thinkers who believe in free trade principles, that state is Iowa. No other state was more largely and influentially represented at the Detroit conference. There are many free trade clubs throughout the state. And yet in a purely state election the managers of the party have been guilty of the colossal folly of making an issue on a point of national policy probably contrary to the views of a large majority of the party. A year ago any man would have been laughed at who spoke of the possibility of Iowa's going democratic this year. To-day such a thing is more than possible. It is probable. The Germans and low tariff republicans have been driven from the party without its gaining a single accession from any direction.—[Chicago Herald.

What do they Mean?

What do the Iowa republicans mean by "such revenue laws as will encourage American industries and protect American labor in order that the American workingman shall have a fair day's wages for a fair day's labor?" It sounds well, but what does it mean? What kind of "revenue laws" are they which work this result? We have some revenue laws now of republican framing and the profession has always been that they "encourage American industries and protect American labor." But under their operation one of the most important of American industries, the iron business, is very far from being encouraged. It is, in fact, hopelessly discouraged; while American labor is clamoring all over the land that it is not protected, and does not get a fair day's wages for a fair day's labor.

Are these the revenue laws which the Iowa republicans demand in their platform? Or have they some ideal laws in their minds which are to succeed where the existing laws have so hopelessly failed? They ought to explain themselves.—[Det. Free Press.

What is Still to Be Known.

The query of the Chicago Tribune, "What can the democrats tell the people about the star route business that is not already known?" The New York World thus answers:

A great deal! By a searching investigation they can discover the real position held by both the Garfield and Arthur administrations toward the so-called prosecution of the star route cases. They can show why Bliss and Brewster were drawn into the prosecution by MacVeagh. They can unearth the tricks by which the trials were needlessly protracted and the extent to which the government was plundered by the expenses of the prosecution. They can make clear the amount stolen by star route thievery. They can find out the secrets of "settlements" engineered by the prosecuting attorneys with some of the star route rascals, and why some rich men's names were left out of the indictments.

The Republicans on the Wrong Side.

The Free Press gave a very humorous account of the recent meeting held in Detroit by the leaders of the republican party in a joint effort to concert measures to resuscitate their worn-out machine and give it a new lease of power. It is very natural that these gentlemen should strive to retain power, forgetting, apparently, that a great mass of their party adherents have lost faith in their machine leaders, and do not intend to replace them in power. The old war issues don't hold the masses any longer, and these leaders are all on the wrong side on the tariff, railroad monopolies, centralization of power in the federal government, and every economic question of the day. The workingmen of the country have been saddled with the burdens of government long enough, and will now insist that all shall share alike.—[Marshall Expounder.

Reasonable for the Republicans.

The republican council of war, which was held in Detroit last week, came to the conclusion that the salvation of the party depended upon the indorsement of ultra protection principles. This is eminently reasonable and appropriate. That organization has for fifteen years been subsidizing capitalists and monopolists out of the hard earnings of labor, and it would be unreasonable and inconsistent to forsake the monopoly cause at this late day.—[Lansing Journal.

Political Notes.

The Philadelphia papers scold the Philadelphians for trading in New York, and those benighted citizens continue to trade in New York because they can get goods cheaper there. Let Philadelphia put a protective tariff upon all goods brought from New York.—[Free Press.

If the state of Ohio should go democratic this fall, as at present there are indications, it would be very discouraging to the republicans. If it was to go republican, the democrats could afford to stand it with their usual christian fortitude. It is a republican state, having elected republican governors, with two exceptions, for twenty-eight years.—[Charlotte Leader.

Judge Foraker, republican candidate for governor of Ohio, says that "the republican party has acted upon the idea that American labor ought to be protected," and that "the wisdom of this policy of the republican party is attested by the unexampled prosperity all the time it has been in power." Does Judge Foraker recall the period from 1873 to 1878 "of unexampled prosperity," or was the republican party out of power during that period.—[Free Press.

The statistics of the charity organizations of New York and Brooklyn show that 250,000 persons in those cities receive charitable assistance. In London, with a population more than twice as great, there are only 100,000 such persons. If free trade is responsible for the pauperism of London, as the protectionists assert and from time immemorial have asserted, then the five-fold poverty of New York, the greatest manufacturing city in the United States, must be due to protection.—[Free Press.

The next time a protectionist says that protected manufacturers make goods as cheap in this country as they are made abroad, ask him why Mr. Robert Porter took pains to report, and protection papers take pains to repeat the following remark from a British manufacturer:" We can make goods cheaper than you can and, give us half a chance we will beat you out of your home markets!" That is to say, protection makes every nine men in Michigan pay a premium on everything they buy for the enrichment of the tenth man. Let revenue reformers put by and make use of this frank admission of the protectionists.—[Free Press.

The platform of the Ohio democracy does not suit the protectionists or their organs. They find it contradictory in that it demands a tariff so as to prevent unequal burdens. One of the organs criticising it says:

"A tariff for revenue must of necessity ignore everything but revenue. It cannot be performed its sole purpose, to produce revenue."

Yet it does not seem to occur to this critical protectionist that this criticism bears just as hardly upon the republican platform, which he commends, as upon the democratic platform he condemns. The republican platform says.

"We believe in the maintenance of a tariff system which will provide a revenue for the government and at the same time will protect American producers and American labor."

If "a tariff for revenue must of necessity ignore everything but revenue," the republican demand for protection in a tariff for revenue is a gross absurdity; and the upholders of the republican platform are in no position to criticise the democratic platform.—[Free Press.

The New York Sun prophesies as follows: There is every reason to expect the election of Judge Headley as Governor of Ohio by a sufficient majority. When John Sherman refused to become a candidate, and took the chair of the republican convention to prevent his own nomination, he substantially gave up the contest and confessed defeat.

The German-Americans, who holds the balance of power between the two parties, and gave the long control in the state, have cut loose from that party entirely, and transferred their votes to the other side. Besides, this defection is not confined to Ohio. It exists in most of the northern states, and extends largely in the east.

All the present signs justify the opinion that the elections this fall will reaffirm those of last year, though without a tidal wave to give sweeping majorities. The people will report calmly their verdict of intense resentment in 1882 against the outrages of the republican party.—[Charlotte Leader.

"SHE LOVED ME FOR MYSELF."

BY I. A. PAUL.

Amidst the roses, by my door wife stands,
Herself the fairest, sweetest flower of all,
Hides, as from her slender, snow-white hands
She lets the hoary-petalled blossoms fall.

Amidst the roses while the daylight pales,
Our home stands golden in the setting sun;
And 'neath our vine-wreathed porch she never fails
To give me welcome when the day is done.

And when I meet her (upon heavily every
I know it comes for thought well pay)
That I love was no "fancy" sweet revealed prize—
She loved and took me for—myself!

Amidst the roses, let my darling stands!
Herself the fairest, fairest flower of all
Hides, as from my slender, snow-white hands
She lets the hoary-petalled blossoms fall.

Dorsey's Dynamite.

The New York Sun recently published a long article purporting to be Stephen W. Dorsey's account of the manner in which Gen. Garfield secured his nomination and election. While we have no desire to bring odium on the fair name of the dead, it is necessary to show up the methods and practices by the aid of which the highest offices of trust in this republic are bargained and sold for cash as so much merchandise. We have room for but a few extracts from the Sun article:

"At the conference facts and figures were presented as coolly and frequently as a bargain for the sale of a railroad. Garfield was told that he must appoint a secretary of the treasury, a New York man, prominently identified with the government faction. Garfield promised to appoint Levi P. Morton, but this was a trifle compared with that which followed. It is asserted that another memorandum was drawn up, and that the candidate for president of the republican party agreed that the operation of refunding government fives and sixes, which must soon take place should be given to such a syndicate of New York bankers as should be designated by the stalwarts and at such commission as should be fair. The stalwarts had for a price been won, all but Mr. Conkling, who cared not to have part nor share in it.

"Then followed the Indiana campaign, in which $432,000 was spent, and this carried the election, but this was not enough. More money must be raised, and the republicans remembered the star route contractors. Jay Hubbell told Brady that they must subscribe at least $40,000, and that he must collect the money. He consented, and it was done. This was what led to the 'My dear Hubbell' letter.

"Another remarkable event in the canvass of 1880 was Mr. Gould's subscription. When asked if he would contribute to the republican fund he replied: I can have no interest in an administration, at the head of which is a man who denounced me as corrupt and compared me with Catiline as the corruptor of youth of Rome. Gould, however, said that he had no political party interests, but all his interests lay in certain great corporations which were threatened by a recent act of congress, known as the 'Thurman act, an act whose constitutionality was to be passed upon by the supreme court. Garfield promised to appoint the right kind of a man, whereupon Mr. Gould subscribed $250,000. This money was taken to Cleveland and there divided. Part was used in Indiana and part in Ohio."

"Dorsey had presented to the republican managers, including Garfield, his views respecting the canvass. To his thinking there were two necessities. One was money, the other was the co-operation of the New York stalwarts. The two were linked. Dorsey said that no money could be raised without the co-operation of the New York men, and on the other hand, with that co-operation, combined with certain honeyed inducements, any amount could be raised. Dorsey said that the necessity of making the battle in Indiana in October, * * * Garfield did not know how the money was to be raised. Dorsey did, and he told Garfield that he must meet the New York politicians. He told that when he met these men there must be no political diplomacy about it. The meeting must be a practical business meeting. There must be no generalities, no vague suggests, but positive pledged assurances. He told him that the New York politicians were ready to give, but that they were business men, and would expect to receive. It must be a quid pro quo meeting, and there must be no trifling. Besides the New York men could not be basely pensioned. Garfield held off for a long while from a face-to-face meeting, and at length suggested that he would meet certain influential New York stalwarts in Mentor. Dorsey told him in the plainest terms that he must come to New York—that the New Yorkers would not run after him, and that he must come to them. So Garfield at last consented. The Fifth Avenue hotel conference was arranged. Conkling had promised to be present, but he was the only one of those who were expected to take part in the conference who kept away. Why he did so will appear later.

"The great republican party had come to this at last. It had nominated a credit mobilier man for president, and its candidate to win was obliged to meet with the representative of a powerful faction and dicker and bargain with them for the price of their support. Dorsey had told Garfield that this (Fifth Avenue hotel) conference would be a climax of the canvass if it was successful. Dorsey promised no success in November if it failed. Dorsey said that they might as well close their committee rooms and let the campaign go by default. Time was pressing. It wanted but a few weeks to the great preliminary contest in Indiana. Garfield had been greatly impressed by Dorsey's earnestness, and when he met the representatives of the great stalwart faction in the Fifth Avenue parlors it was noticed that the smiling hail-fellow-well-met manner was absent. He was most serious and seemed to be thoroughly in earnest. He made a plain, seemingly perfectly frank statement to the grim politicians in front of him, who had his fate in their hands. He acknowledged as much to them. He said, as he had said before to Dorsey, that New York had a right to expect the largest recognition at his hands; that it was his earnest desire to shape his course so that all differences in the party would be reconciled and that no one would expect that he would for a moment entertain any idea but that of learning what the wishes of the friends in New York were, and if they were consistent with what was fair he would give his hearty assent to them. But generalities were not indulged in very long. Facts and figures were presented as coolly and as free from hints as a bargain for the sale of a railroad. They told him first that it was expected that he would agree to appoint as secretary of the treasury a New York man, prominently identified with the part of that party that favored the nomination of Grant. He said that the demand was not only not unreasonable, but entirely proper. * * * The cool and determined politicians, with whom the candidate for the presidency was dealing, kept up the business at this point of the proceeding, by making duplicate memoranda of what had been promised. It was a formal document, frigid as a bill of sale, but this was a trifle compared with that which followed. This only secured the active support of the stalwarts. That was nothing without money. Whether Garfield made or received first the proposition that men say was made, it is now asserted by those who know that another memoranda was drawn up. In that it is asserted that the candidate for the presidency of the republican party agreed with the cool, remorseless politicians who had him in their power that the operation of refunding the government fives and sixes, which must soon take place, should be given to such syndicate of New York bankers as should be designated by the stalwarts, and at such commission as should be fair. There were millions in prospect. The operation, as has since been shown, was an enormous one, and at an apparently trifling commission would have given the fortunate syndicate profits such as has not been realized since the days when the great government loans were placed with such an agreement. The problem of raising campaign funds was solved, and the mysterious Fifth Avenue conference was ended. The bargain was made. The stalwarts had for a price been won, all but one. * * * Within a week after the Fifth Avenue conference Wall street had subscribed a very large amount of money, not far from $500,000. At the same time began that remarkable and at that time unexplained zeal which the old stalwart leaders suddenly took in the republican canvass."

"It is asserted that some of the republican managers in New York discovered, or thought that they discovered, that Jay Gould had subscribed $50,000 to the democratic campaign fund in the fall of 1880. This discovery frightened the leaders. They had expected a large subscription from Mr. Gould, but had failed to get it. He had been distant, and it was thought he believed Hancock would be elected. How to get Mr. Gould's interest and how to get at his check-book were problems that seemed insoluble. It was finally determined that some one, with whom he would talk, should go to see him and ask him point-blank how the matter was, and what influencing could be given him to subscribe. When asked if he would contribute to the republican fund Mr. Gould declined at once. When asked why, he is said to have answered, "I can have no interest in an administration at the head of which there would be a man who, as the leader of Black Friday investigation, denounced me as a corrupt man, and compared me to Catiline as a corruptor of the youth of Rome."

"That settled the matter at the interview. Gould's personal hostility to Garfield was communicated to the republican candidate. He expressed great surprise that Mr. Gould should entertain such a feeling. He said that he had no personal animosity towards Gould, and that in the report to which Gould referred he had simply discharged a public duty, and one which Mr. Gould should not blame him for doing. Back the republicans trotted to Mr. Gould with Garfield's reply. He said, however, that he had no political party interests. All his interest lay in certain great corporations which were threatened by the recent act of Congress, known as the Thurman act, an act whose constitutionality was to be passed upon by the supreme court."

THE Third Assistant Postmaster General has issued a circular to Postmasters throughout the United States, in which he says that the reduction of postage to 2 cents on first-class domestic mail matter will go into effect on Oct. 1. He instructs postmasters to be in readiness to issue stamps of 2-cent stamps and stamped envelopes, so that the actual change in offices may not to have a stock of unused stamps on hand. He also directs that the fact that the head of Washington has been adopted for the 2-cent stamp and the present 2-cent stamp, has been adopted for the new 4-cent stamp. The price of both the 2-cent and 4-cent stamped envelopes remains the same as on the existing schedule for 3-cent stamped envelopes. He directs attention to the fact that no arrangements for stamped envelopes for the exchange of 3-cent stamped envelopes in the hands of Postmasters or prior to part—the 2-cent and 4-cent stamps and stamped envelopes will be valid after Oct. 1, and must be accepted in payment of postage. The new 2-cent stamp will be issued on Sept. 15, and stamped envelopes on the 1st of September, but they are not to be sold before Oct. 1. There are no other changes in the rates of postage.

THE statistics of immigration for June and the half year ended with June show that the arrivals for the six months number 192,126 and not only 192,221 in 1882. The immigrant arrivals from all countries for June this year amounted to 70,303, against 84,296 in 1882. But the arrivals from Ireland increased by 1,176, from Germany by 1,555, and from Scotland by 2,061. The only other country showing an increase is Sweden. The greatest decrease is from Sweden. THE indictments against the Jews at Nyiregyhaza, Hungary, who are charged with stealing a Christian girl and using her blood in their passover bread have been withdrawn, and the government intends to prosecute to the utmost the connector of the crime against the Jews. THE appearance of cholera in the city of Alexandria was followed by a panic, and a great begins of the inhabitants to escape the dreadful plague. The escapes are supposed to severe places in Cairo, and spreading in the fifty Arab quarter. At Cairo, Mon. amounts, Mr. Bernard, through the theme still rages. It had also made its appearance at the province.

IN the French-Chamber of Deputies, the Minister of Foreign Affairs declared that unexplained events could not longer exist relations with England, and that it appears to him that the Government would act in accordance with justice, if it should be found that it was attempted to fire the house of James Carey, the informer.

ADDITIONAL NEWS.

THE members of the Brotherhood of Telegraphers employed by the various lines met with remarkable unanimity shortly before noon of Thursday, July 19. The cause of the strike was a refusal of the Western Union and other companies to accede to the demand of the operators for an advancement and readjustment of salaries. The operator desks from Montana to California were abandoned promptly at the word from the Executive Committee of the Brotherhood, the men walk or away in a quiet and orderly manner. In large towns in the absence of the regular operators were at one called, either from the employes of the company who had remained at their stations, or made to positions of greater responsibility, or by men who had been discharged from the ranks of the strike. The Postmasters at Boston and Chicago replied on the request of the Western Union Company, being with Associated Press communications. A dispatch from the press was received with the usual quantity of news, but the commercial world suffered much inconvenience from inability to secure telegraphic service in the leading business and commercial centers. In New York 75,000 messages were sent, in Chicago 250, and in other cities the number was proportionately small. There was no serious disorder of any sort, and the end of the strike.

THE Republican State Central Committee of Virginia adopted resolutions condemning the course of the national administration in the politics of that State, and declaring James G. Blaine the choice of the Republicans of Virginia for President in 1884. The Republican State Convention of Iowa, in session at Des Moines, indorsed Iowa, in session at Des Moines, indorsed Blaine for President, after a lengthy and earnest debate in the committee on resolutions, which effectually prevented any action which could be taken part in the debate.

THERE iron stockades are being built in Canada at Sarnia, opposite Port Huron, Michigan, to the Grand Trunk Railway Company. They will be temporary yard to two to transportation to the Upper Lakes in connection with the Canadian Pacific and Port Arthur, The Company is laying down a double track from Sarnia to Montreal and Windsor, Mr. Ashby, the Consul-General, has arrived at Sarnia, and has stated that the opinions they expressed, that England would not rest quietly under the insult offered by the representative of France in Egypt.

Making aware, it should be remembered, is that Gold is one of the large blands of the world, and has an area five times as large as that of Illinois. It has for many years been the an outstanding among the mapping pieces that the native authority of Madagascar be applied, and that equal commercial privileges be extended to all nations. Many years France has sought every pretext to extend her authority, and within the last few months has entered the Bay of Ambavatobe. On the 30th of May last a force of 1,500 marched Majungar, the largest seaport town on the west coast, and hoisted the French flag. The place is the capital. On the 15th of June the native occupied Tamatave, on the east coast, the principal trade part of the island, and was seized on a pretext, the capital.

While these operations were been pushed forward in the Malagasy Embassy were negotiating with the French authorities in Paris. The Malagasy Ambassador was announced negotiations were broken off, and the French demanded unqualified the answers to which may precipitate war.

The Bradlaugh Case.

It is an interesting question in America, where religion is so all believers in representative government, how such a position as attorneys will remain peaceably to be disfranchised and excluded by Parliament. That the exclusion of Mr. Bradlaugh from the seat to which he has been repeatedly elected is an unjust and arbitrary abuse, is proved by the fact that the House would seem to be self evident. His constituency is entitled to a representative, and he have a moral and legal right to choose the one representative. Then, their choice is subject to certain legal restrictions as to eligibility, and the question of his eligibility well has been complied with. Mr. Bradlaugh, standing prepared to take the statutory oath, and acknowledging that it would be binding on the conscience, has no doubt, and is well as moral right to a seat in the House. That the House should elaborately and repeatedly refuse him this right, and thus practically disfranchise his constituency, is a fact that leaves its members dislike his capital as regrettable, and is an astonishing fact to Americans, and one which throws much light on English institutions. It is not the Queen who refuses to offer free trade, and such an abuse of power is now being partly by the Conservative party, or tolerated by public opinion.

The Parnell Party Gaining Ground.

Now that we have had a full account of the election in County Monaghan, which resulted in the return of Mr. Healy to Parliament, we can estimate the bearing of the incident upon the prospects of the Parnell party in the next House of Commons. If in a county where accordingly the Land Leagues and Parnellites agitation against England should have been with little encouragement, the Home Rule candidate can gain a majority of nearly a thousand votes, the combined vote of his Conservative and Liberal opponents notwithstanding, it is evident that Mr. Parnell's friends from controlling about the twenty-five of the Irish delegation in Parliament at the next general election. The new party would be the strength of the Irish Parliamentary party, which could make effective use of the extent from the imperial Legislature almost in a thing that of consists independence is so unreasonable to say that nothing can be visited by Parliament. Meanwhile, the Home Rule party in Ireland, and the contract for the building has been awarded, and the structure will be completed by Sept. 1. It is to have twenty-seven rooms, a large kitchen and dining-room, which will be located some distance in the rear of the house, and will be connected with it by a covered passage-way. The paint upon which the club-house is to be decorated has been raised Sheridan Point in honor of Gen. Sheridan.

SPEAKING of "Jersey justice," a Hackensack lawyer declares that New Jersey deserves all the high praise she gets for prompt, unswerving and merciless justice to lawbreakers. Criminals are in that State speedily indicted and punished. There is to this very fact that Jersey justice owes its origin. "For hell's century," he explains, "Philadelphia and New York have sent marauders to New Jersey. Either as robbing counterfeiters, lazy tramps, or professional thieves, they come ready for mischief. When caught, they are almost always without money or friends to render assistance, the just severity of which there is seldom but themselves to display. These cases long ago habituated our courts to celerity, and that is what led to the establishment of the much vaunted Jersey justice. I don't know that our officials are better men than the average in other States, but it is certain that they do better work from habit."

MRS. DYER, of Cleveland, Ohio, aged 50 years, has had nine husbands in thirty-five years, being an average of one in less than every four years. Her first two were canal boatmen and were speedily drowned while on duty; her third was a cooper, who made barrels only two months after the wedding day and departed; the fourth, however, got a better grip and lasted nine years, but was quickly followed by the fifth, and then the sixth, who stuck with the agent four years and dropped off; the seventh was the brother of the second husband; the eighth another canal man who shortly after slipped into a watery grave, leaving her his canal boat, which she sold and with the proceeds had the portraits of all her husbands painted at one fell swoop by one artist. Her ninth, and latest, Dyer, is not so poor as his predecessors, though, for she says, "I was gettin' too old to be particular and I took him." "Husband's appears to be in good health," ventured to say the reporter of the Cleveland Herald, who called on her as a natural curiosity. "No, George ain't overly about, and I reckon his pedigree's gone along with the rest of 'em," replied Mrs. Dyer.

ONE of the strangest funerals on record was that of Dr. J. S. Ford, of Ruggestown, Ind., which occurred at Woodsmania, Ohio, not long ago, and of which a dispatch from that place gives the following account: He died of heart disease, after being bedfast three months. He was 56 years old, and his widow, his third wife, whom he married three years ago, is 21. He made a rich man will, giving his widow $20,000. He also left sums of $200 and $500 each to all the women who are now maids or widows whom he married in his numerous days. The remainder $5,000. Notes outstanding on people who would be pushed to pay them he destroyed to the amount of $5,000. The third girl and all his wives were present, and remembered in small sums. Two weeks before his death he employed and paid the Rev. Mr. Stackelbord, of the Methodist church, $25, and the Rev. Dr. Warrington, of the Christian church, $15 to officiate at his funeral. Immediately after this he sent for the railroad and had a special train made ready, a train of one baggage and three passenger cars to take his remains and 116 friends to his funeral at West Somera, Ohio, a distance of seven miles, and there his remains were placed in the best hotel in West Somera for dinner for the entire funeral party. Not a detail in the funeral was overlooked or neglected. The pallbearers, his orders were fully carried out, and when his body was carried out no one is the world had a chance of a cent.

Minister to Blame.

The protests of clergymen will have no influence. Indeed, we are inclined to suspect that the clergy, in the excess, may, worse, the consciousness of their power to do mischief, and of the most any other single cause in producing a state of things which all the churches lament. Any divorced person, however guilty, can find a clergyman to perform an illegal and morally bigamous marriage without asking a single question. There are numerous clergymen who will marry, not merely unwillingly, just as there are lawyers who will take any case. Some of these lax persons would not deliberately place themselves accomplices in a crime, but they do not feel that they have any right to inquire into the motives of the contracting parties the whole relationship, the character of the transaction, and the consequences. Ministers have a right to refuse to marry, if they believe it to be their duty, and they should be disciplined if they neglect the fairly lose respect for the churches when they seem to care so little about public morals.—New York Tribune.

It Wasn't Philosophy.

Rev. Newman Hall who once published a very popular tract called "Come to Jesus," took another—a very latter attack upon an opponent—to Dr. Bunsy, a clerical friend, and asked his advice about publishing it. "I see you haven't got a title for it," said Dr. Bunsy. "If you will take my advice, about a title, I will answer its publication." "What title would you give it?" asked Hall. "I would call it," answered Bunsy, "Go to the Devil, by the author of 'Come to Jesus.'" Hall tore up the manuscript and threw the fragments into the fire.

GOSSIP FOR THE LADIES.

The Prescription.

They were parting at the gate—
Jim Jim and Angelina Kate—
Had been married, although late,
Only a week before, the date,
Yet it took it fast abroad.

"If I only knew," said Jim
"Only knew
What the doctor advises," sold she,
"Make a combined of mine
Here let me help to one."

Then he kissed her, answered he,
With a sigh
"Now I cannot ill" cried she;
"Let me help you, I plead,
And afraid to do it are—for?"

"You're a witch winsome sweet," Answered he,
"I would live for you and die
How to make a sick act well;
Shall now prescribe for me.

"Every heart will cure a heart,"
Low laughed she;
"You must find another heart,
The only one will know its smart—
Try this often repeatly."

"Let me have your lips to try,"
Said he, "
I have a case, and I know
Your lips are of honey—to a sick;
"Then you unsound cured.

"Miss Kate, I'm sick and sore,"
"Has symptoms" said she laughed low;
"Then I can cure
I'm a doctor myself, you see,
Sometimes—I'm a witch."
"What or bilious are men can tell?"

"Had I to be known before,"
Said he pleased,
"Which a witch you and in some?"
"Why, I'm a witch myself,"
Answer fault it without.

Fashions for Mothers.

During my residence there, save the "Autobiography of Thurlow Weed," Mr. Walters and family moved into the neighborhood, and, I think, from what was then called the "Triangle," some three in Chenango county, and was a subdual agent. They were the first region, rather stylish people, and because the aspect of a good deal of remark; one thing that excited especial indignation was, that persons going to the house were asked to clean their shoes at the door, a scraper having been placed there for that purpose.

A maiden lady (Miss Theodosia Walters) rendered herself especially obnoxious to the spinster neighbors by "dressing up" week-day afternoons. They all agreed in saying she was "a proud, stuckup thing," as in these days "go-to-meeting clothes" were reserved for Sundays.

Dress and Decoration a Clog to Woman.

The ideal woman of the future will be the complete woman. Ethics will not crowd out aesthetics in her character. She will give the sensitive shading to the values of life. Intellectual pursuits, great ideas, will neither be subordinated to emotion and decorative vanities, nor will they eliminate from our character finish of address, the beauty of costume, that all unite to make up that perfect woman, the ideal woman. Dress and adornment are in higher significance constituents of symmetry, the fruition of the ideal, and the Cinderella of disorder, vanity, and the Cinderella of disorder, vanity, and the Cinderella of disorder, aesthetics. Prof. Brown, of Harvard, said in an address before the Moral Philosophy Society, that "no may carry decoration and refinement to excess. In so sin. I believe," said he, "in the stern simplicity of the Puritan, but I do not recognize the true beauty that lies in the simple life, and the cheap and tawdry effect produced by pretension, we should arrive at one important conclusion, that the ideal woman is always the surface of the future. Dress and decoration are ever a clog rather than the end they were designed to be.—Boston Traveller.

A Waste of Space—Unless They Were Real.

A dude stood in a pensive attitude in front of a photograph gallery, in Maine, lunching from the top of his cane, when a boy came up to sweet across his unintelligent face; his collar was so high he was obliged to turn his body to look at the boy, and his pants so tightly fitting he dare not sit down, although a tired expression denoted that he was weary. A gorgeously dressed, rosy-cheeked, handsome lady started from a house opposite and ran across the street to the store. The dude thought he had a mash, because she happened to cast her eye toward him. He lifted his hat, smoothed and indulged in a few gymnastics so common to the dude. The lady paid no attention to him, made her purchases and returned home. Just as she was passing the door she detected the fellow in the act of kicking his hand to her. She laid down her bundles, retraced her steps to the store, procured four eggs, and, with aim true, let fly.

"You insolent puppy, how dare you do so?"

Without giving him time to reply, she projected an egg, which struck the dude on his left ear. Dodge! The egg missed contiguity on his necktie and the mash caught his hat-band. The last found lodgment in his hair. And there were four colored streams running to one common center. The dude concluded it wasn't his day, and, wiping the streams and jeers of the by standers, disappeared in the convenient hallway.—New York Journal.

A Young Girl's Dead-Beam.

A young girl's room may be furnished daintily and in expensive taste at a small expense. The chief outlay will be for a bedstead. This cannot be constructed out of a pine board and a box of nails, though many cheap things may be; but a handsome painted bedstead lime and white is the first requirement for this room. The door may be covered with plain white muslin, or of lime and white plaid, with a soft rug at the side of the bed; a dress ingenuse of white wood, covered with white silesia and muslin, can be made neat, and a white wood washstand is also needed. This, like the dressing table, should have the muslin part entirely concealed by breaths of the silesia and muslin. They should be gathered slightly at the top, so that they will fall in graceful folds. The curtains should be of the muslin, draped, and the bedspread and pillow-covers of the muslin over silesia also. The bedspread should of course be scenically over the bed, and be tucked in at the end and sides, unlike the lace ones, which hang over. The muslin of the pillow covers may be slipped of the top and bottom, if you like the ruffled shirring, over; they need, in this case, no edges, and in bed when put over the silesia plain, do not fray them with lace, unless you add this adornment to the curtains, but finish with a plain hem. With the various trifling ornaments a young girl gathers about her, the room will receive anything it may need in color to brighten it. A room so prettily furnished may be a real help to a girl, it will be easy for her to cultivate disorderly habits there, for the effort she has worked to create would be entirely marred. It may help her to cultivate thoughts, but of this we cannot be certain.

No Trouble in the Choir.

"I think you treated his very unkindly in saying that we had a fight in our choir!" murmured the contralto, taking the hat the religious editor had placed for her and straightening it out. "You know the feelings of everybody, and I think it was very cruel of you."

"But didn't you have a fight?" pitched the tenor in a plaintive cadence. "Didn't the tenor say the soprano didn't know any more about music than a hippopotamus, and the soprano say he didn't know about the doctrine of infant baptism?"

"I know that," remarked the contralto. "And he was right. She didn't. But she is very conscientious and mild, and the sooner we got rid of her the better."

"And didn't the basso take the soprano's side and hit the tenor on the nose?" continued the religious editor.

"I know he did," replied the contralto. "And he was all in the wrong. That tenor is particularly lovely, and the soprano got mad because he was doing a duet with me. But I don't see why you wanted to print into him. Why didn't you say the soprano had been flirting with the baritone for six months, in spite of his being a married man? What did you put it all on the tenor for?"

"I didn't know anything about that," retorted the religious editor. "Somebody told me that the tenor took you to the church picnic, and that all the row grew out of the fact that the soprano was left out."

"So she did, the meddling old maid. It was none of her business. He didn't take her, and he isn't likely to. We never had any trouble in that choir until we got to poking her nose into everybody's business. Now, I wish you would come out and say that the choir is united in harmony, and the paper was unstaken in its report about the fight."

"I'll come I will if there is any truth in it," responded the religious editor, "but the difficulty will arise—"

"It will be as soon as the tenor gets hands on the organist! He has been jealous of his position ever since he found that the tenor wants to get the sopranos out of the choir, and the organist is the only one who used to sing in it, and he knows that the tenor wants to get the soprano

Notes and News.

There is still no choice for senator in New Hampshire.

The great strike of telegraph operators still continues, with no signs of immediate settlement.

The republican party now points with pride to the record made three years ago. For further particulars see Dorsey's letter. [Charlotte Leader.

As a rule it is your protectionist who believes in high wages on paper and low ones in cash. It is hardly surprising, therefore, to see the Chicago Inter Ocean, the most bigoted protection organ in the country, and the worst twaddler about high wages of them all, sneering at the telegraph operators' demand for more pay, and insisting that they are, if anything, the best specimens of a benevolent corporation. [Free Press.

The New York Sun of Monday came out with what is said to be an expose of Dorsey's budget, which makes very grave charges against the republican managers of the campaign of three years ago. It is not however written over Dorsey's name, and should perhaps as yet be taken with a grain of allowance. As Dorsey was a party to the detestable republican methods of that year, too much confidence should not be given it even though endorsed by him: Even if the story is all true, we believe it is not half told. And it is just as well. The people act and believe as they please. Democrats will generally choose to believe it republicans will strike the same old attitude, and with eyes lifted toward heaven, point with pride to the record of the grand old party that saved the nation. [Charlotte Leader.

Legislation cannot create value, nor can it determine the rate of wages. The source of wealth in this country is in the soil, and can only be utilized by the application of labor and capital. The application should be in such manner that both will be rewarded, and at an equal rate. The capital must not be tied down for the exclusive benefit of the laborer, nor must the laborer be made the unwilling taxed for the exclusive benefit of the capital. Either would be bordering on cross legislation, which is destructive of any commonwealth. Commerce should be kept as free as possible, that all classes may be placed on the same footing, with no favorites or pets. The protective system in its very name and nature is a scheme to enrich the few at the expense of the many, and the true invardness of the system is kept hid from the view of the laborers and farmers, upon whom the burden falls most heavily. It is the intention to keep them ignorant of the truth in the matter, and they are told that were it not for the protective tariff, laborers would be reduced to paupers, and farmers would find no market for their produce. The people must investigate this question for themselves, and when they understand the injustice of the so-called protective system, they must rise in their majesty and shake off these shackles that are making the farmers of this great land slaves to enrich the manufacturers. The halls of congress must be filled with men who will trample under foot the monopolies which are controlling the legislation of this country, and instead of letting nature and its vast resources, and the natural wants of mankind at large, regulate commerce and taxation, are wringing from the farmers and laborers $2,000,000,000 annually, and as revenue to pay necessary expenses of the government, but as a bonus to manufacturers by this unjust tariff.

As Others See Us.

The Charlevoix Journal has reached our table, and it is neat, newsy, and spicy, showing that a printer has its management. The publisher, C. J. Strang, has had a long experience in the business, having been employed for a number of years in the state printing house of W. S. George & Co., at Lansing. While we cannot swallow the Journal's politics, we hope Mr. Strang will be successful as a publisher in this county. [Boyne Statesman.

The Pine Lake Region and Charlevoix Resorts.

From the Daily Resorter.

One of the loveliest of all the many beautiful lakes that adorn this fair northern country is Pine Lake, connected with Lake Michigan at Charlevoix by Pine river, a short stream that has been rendered navigable for the largest lake vessels, and by Round lake a park-like lake of only about 30 acres, upon the shores of which are situated the thriving village of Charlevoix, and two popular resorts, the Chicago and Charlevoix.

Pine lake stretches east and south some 20 miles. About five miles east it divides into two arms, extending as its name implies, south to the distance of some 16 miles. Into the finger end of the south arm flows the Jordan river, the famous trout stream. Prof. Winchell years ago gave the following graphic pen picture of Pine lake: "Far away to the southeast for fifteen miles, stretches the placid, smiling surface of the water, its white and reddy shore revealing the contour of the hills in all its meandering sinuosities. The verdant ridges rise on every side from the shining shore line, and hold the lake in their enchanted embrace, while rounded hill-tops bubble up in rapid succession across the retiring landscape, till hill, vale, and sky, green, purple and blue, dissolve together in the faint, blended lines of the distant horizon."

The village of Charlevoix, which is the key to the whole of Pine lake region with nearly eighty miles of shore line, is situated on the high bluffs overlooking Lake Michigan, between Round lake and Lake Michigan, and on both banks of Pine river, which forms the connecting link between Lake Michigan and the inland lakes just mentioned.

The citizens are justly proud of their town, and manifest a commendable spirit of enterprise and liberality, and the writer, speaking from eight years acquaintance with the place, has no hesitancy in saying that the intellectual and moral standard of Charlevoix people is superior to any place of its size he has ever known. All branches of business are represented, and the Fountain City house and Bridge Street house are both spacious and excellently kept hotels.

Between Round and Pine lake and south of the main channel which connects them, is located the Charlevoix summer resort. The grounds of the resort comprise about 75 acres, and rise by three natural and well-defined terraces from Pine lake. The two lower terraces are sufficiently wide for cottage lots, with a broad walk in front, while the upper terrace stretch, as far away or a level plateau, from which glimpses of Lake Michigan are obtained. More than half the tract is covered land, other parts being thinly wooded, and the portion inclined from the water being covered with heavy timber, while in the rear of the whole the dense woods extend to a great distance. A handsome hotel, The Belvedere house, has been erected on an eligible site, from which a charming view of the blue waters reaching far to the southwest is obtained. A number of beautiful cottages also stand upon the terraces overlooking the lake. A music hall 30x50 feet and a bowling alley 80 feet long, have recently been built and numerous improvements made. The company owning this resort was organized on the 21st day of May, 1878, under the statute laws of Michigan.

Nature has provided every facility for healthful recreation and amusement, including unexcelled boating and fishing, and the managers of the resort seem determined to make the most of their delightful location.

Directly opposite the Charlevoix resort is the Chicago resort, founded by a stock company of wealthy Chicago gentlemen for a private summer retreat for their families and their friends. An elegant club house and several fine cottages have already been built, and extensive improvements have been begun.

Charlevoix is the center of a famous fishing region, and boats run to all points in the vicinity. Several steamers make daily trips to South Arm and East Jordan, and the staunch steamer Clara Belle makes two trips a day the whole length of the picturesque lake to Boyne City, where stages run to connect with trains at Boyne Falls. A trip of unequalled variety is to go by the steamer Paxton from Harbor springs or Petoskey to Charlevoix, thence by Clara Belle to Boyne City, next a novel stage ride of six miles, through the woods to Boyne Falls, and then home again by rail the same afternoon.

State Teachers' Institute.

The State Teachers' Institute, for Charlevoix county, will be held at Charlevoix, commencing at 10 o'clock a. m. Monday, August 6, and closing Friday afternoon following. E. H. Green, Esq., Charlevoix, local committee. It is becoming a well established fact that an interchange of views, such as is given in these institutes, is of great practical benefit to those who attend them. The teachers that are found in the front ranks of their profession are generally those who take interest enough in their work to avail themselves of such means of improvement.

The institute law, as amended by the last legislature, allows teachers, whose schools are in session at the time appointed for the county institute, held under the direction of the state superintendent, to dismiss their schools during the continuance of such institute, without forfeiting their wages for as many half-days as they are in attendance at the institute. This removes a cause that has prevented many teachers from attending these institutes in the past; and in view of the inducements to self-improvement thus furnished by the law, county examiners and school boards throughout the state, should have no hesitancy in giving preference to such teachers, other things being equal, who seek all such means better to prepare themselves for the work of their profession.

It is designed to make the work in these institutes as practical as possible, and thus meet the wants of the teachers of all grades in their everyday work. At the same time it will be the purpose of every worker to raise the standard of the profession of teaching, and to gain for it that dignity to which it is entitled. Especial attention will be given to such subjects as have recently been added to the list of those in which teachers are required to pass examination before obtaining certificates.

The exercises will be conducted by persons of extended experience, known ability, and eminent success.

The morning and afternoon sessions will be devoted to the discussion of topics of particular interest to teachers, while the evening lectures will be of a popular character.

There will be no tuition or enrollment fee. Full particulars in regard to board, etc., may be obtained upon application to the local committee.

Up the Arm.

Last Monday morning a representative of the JOURNAL took the steamer Paxton for East Jordan, combining business with pleasure. The morning was fine, and the ride a most pleasant one. On the boat were two parties of pleasure seekers from Petoskey, one going to the Jordan on a fishing excursion, the other enjoying the ride and the scenery, intending to return on the Grand Rapids from Charlevoix to Petoskey in the afternoon. These parties are frequent, and on a fine day the ride from Petoskey or Traverse City to East Jordan and return is a most pleasurable one. The party on their way to the Jordan were Mr. H. N. Higinbotham, of the firm of Marshall, Field & Co., wholesale and retail dry goods, Chicago. Mr. Higinbotham was accompanied by his wife, two daughters and a guide. Two sons were already on the Jordan, and the whole party were to remain a week. Mr. Higinbotham favored the newsman, with a brief and very interesting description of their immense business, which in dollars and cents runs way up into the millions.

On arrival at East Jordan one of the first questions asked was where that much talked of democratic journal was. On inquiry it was learned that no papers had yet been received, and no one knew anything about the package of papers which had been mailed at Charlevoix postoffice last Friday morning. It at once became apparent that the business part of the trip was doomed to failure. The newsman thought at least, however, to see and make the acquaintance of as many laborers, men as possible, though he could not well ask them to subscribe for or advertise in what they had not seen. The first man met was Mr. J. W. Rogers, formerly of Charlotte, who dropped his business and took the scribe up one side of Main street and down the other, calling on nearly every man. The net result was a dozen subscriptions, and a promise of advertising if a sufficient number of readers was obtained.

The business men seem alive to the best interests of the village. A great amount of building is going on, and a spirit of improvement visible in every direction. Among other things learned, was that an effort is now being made, and which promises success, to hold a union fair in that village next September or early in October. Already a sum of money nearly sufficient to purchase grounds and buildings has been pledged to cause the organization is effected; and a meeting is to be held at an early date to complete the organization. One gentleman remarked that it was characteristic of East Jordan people to push to success whatever they attempted.

Among others we met Mr. John Chamberlin, and Mr. Fred Bessinger, formerly of Lansing, and Mr. A. Hoston, formerly of Charlevoix. Mr. Chamberlin has been located in the dry goods trade here but a short time, yet has a most promising business.

From one point could be seen from the boat seventeen buildings in the course of erection not for enough advanced to receive the first coat of paint, and there must be no many more in process of finishing inside. There are also to be built soon as possible another blacksmith shop, and a presbyterian church, which and not at that date been commenced.

After an excellent dinner the scribe crossed the Jordan and interviewed Sol. Isaman and others. Mr. Isaman led the way through his garden and orchard, back to his farm, showing among other things the little one-story shanty where he commenced life in this region seventeen years ago, and the little addition to the house from which he sold thousands of logs for of merchandise. The building is in very dilapidated condition, and will soon be numbered among the things past and gone. In the orchard are a few plum trees, on which the fruit hangs in great clusters like grapes, and the lower limbs are bent nearly to the ground. The apple orchard is young, but hangs quite full of fruit. The hay crop is heavy, and the wet weather seriously interferes with curing it. Potatoes are large and free from bugs. Other crops look well. Mr. Isaman is building a large and convenient tenement house on his farm.

After a brief chat with Mr. Munro's clerk, and with P. H. LeClair, the newsman returned to the wharf and found a comfortable seat on the Gazelle, bound homeward.

On the return trip the Gazelle stopped at Holy Island and took on a jolly picnic party, from the Chicago resort, numbering between forty and fifty. From the appearance of their baggage, they had spent the day in resting and eating—two very pleasant things to do. It was evident, too that the events of the day were not to be trusted entirely to the memory, for nearly every lady was provided with a piece of birch bark and lead pencil, collecting autographs. They were evidently so happy a picnic party as ever get together.

Altogether the day was pleasant and profitable, notwithstanding the disappointment of not finding last week's JOURNAL well circulated. We shall have occasion to visit the place again soon.

Excursion to Mackinac Island.

The East Jordan cornet band have arranged with the steamer T. S. Faxton to give an excursion to Mackinac Island, leaving East Jordan next Saturday, 28th, at 3:30, and Charlevoix at 5 o'clock p. m. Returning will leave Mackinac Island at 3:00 p. m. Sunday, thus giving an excellent opportunity to visit that far-famed resort. Meals may be obtained on board at reduced rates if it is found undesirable to carry lunch baskets. The Charlevoix band will accompany the excursion party. Fare for the round trip, $1.50.

The Fog.

The Lawrence and Champlain had considerable difficulty in making the harbor last Sunday, on account of the dense fog. The Lawrence passed by a considerable distance, and succeeded in reaching the harbor by the aid of a tug which answered her signals. The Champlain followed closely, she struck the bar on the south side of the channel near the pier, but threw a line to the opposite pier and pulled off with only a few minutes delay. The Champlain went out soon afterward, but the Lawrence waited till morning, at which time the fog had risen. Wednesday morning there was a rumor that the Idaho had collided with some other craft during the fog on Sunday, but we understand she has since been heard from.

Business Change.

Mr. Ed. F. Parmalee, of Reading, has purchased a half interest in the business and property of the Sentinel, and will commence operations August 15th. Mr. Parmalee is a practical job printer with some experience as a newspaper reporter and manager, and will have the business management of the office. Mr. Smith retaining editorial control of the paper.

This change has been rendered necessary by the gradually failing health of Mr. Smith, caused by overwork and the multiplicity of cares connected with the management of the newspaper, the postoffice, and the telegraph business of the office.

Mr. Smith expects to take at least two weeks more in which to recreate, and will go to Niagara Falls and other places east, and possibly to Chicago and points west. It is to be hoped that with the decrease of cares under the new arrangement he will regain complete health.

The Parsons.

The schooner B. Parsons which struck the north pier last week and sank has not yet been raised. Soon after she struck, and the family and crew rescued, a subscription paper was circulated and a sum of money raised for the benefit of the captain's family. The Parsons was not insured. Last Thursday evening an effort was made by the tugs Payne and Higgie to pull her off the bar, and tow her up to the ship yard, but without success. The captain is without means, and if the schooner is not passed soon she will be a total loss to him.

Since the above was in type, Capt. Dyke, late of the Nellie Booth, has bought the Parsons for $500, and is now trying to raise her by filling with cedar posts. He intends putting her in the dry dock and fitting her up for the trade here, and will command her himself.

The Band Concert.

Last Saturday evening the ladies' band gave a concert at Barkhausen's opera hall, which was well attended and highly applauded. The following is the programme:

Selection	Consolidated Bands
Maid of Dundee	Mrs. Bozell
Bells Duet	Wheat and Gray
Selection	Little Blue and Apple Blossom

Always keep a word for mother,	Little Carrie, Maggie, Ethel Newton, Minnie Barthelmess and Katie Smith.
Chinese Song	Ladies Band

The song "Always keep a word for mother," was so well rendered that the audience insisted on its repetition, and the little girls were highly complimented on all sides. The entertainment concluded with a farce entitled "Jumbo Jum," in which Jumbo, the darkey, created much merriment by doing just what he was told by his master, and no more.

A PRETTY POEM OF THE WAR.

BY W. W. CHAPMAN.

I walked one morning at sunbright,
But my heart was heavy as lead,
For my best of all hopes was blighted,
Was green again with May.

The sound of busy life stirred
And vanished from my brow,
And I only looked forward,
As I looked backward now.

Why should I look back forward?
I knew my soul was young;
I knew life was shining for
The maiden dear to song.

My heart was light and triumphant;
I joined the throng,
And I loved—how much!—my countrymen,
For I had comrades too.

Where are those dear old fellows?
Ah! within hearts that throb!
I asked myself at noonbright,
As I walked the streets alone.

There was Pitz, the Irish singer,
And Fred, who lived for Woman,
And Tom, who lived for Art.

Poor Pitz's song is gone;
And the heart of Fred is still;
One went down at Yorktown,
The other at Malvern Hill.

Wrapped in the blue they fought in,
They laughed in the face of Day;
And when from Tom and Harry
Who were, pale lads! the array,

As I walked the streets at midnight,
And remembered the sad years
That snatched my comrades from me,
My eyes were filled with tears.

I thought of bloody battles,
Where I dared death with my life
But met not killed each other,
For I willed the hard play;

Of happy homes that were darkened,
Of lovely lips that were pale,
Of tender hearts that were broken,
Of love that survived to fade.

I pitied the wretched living;
I envied the dead;
I knew I spoke for Fred,
And Art cried a tear for Fred.

"Poor lads!" I said, my pattering
Was sad, and mild as love
When I came to the end of my musing
And they were to be gone!

I gilded my good lads in Song—
I did not care for Self—
They were all in the way to immortality
Before, they could not go.

Who can we know what life and death are,
We who are living? Life is best;
Nobody knows what it is to labor
Their labor done, they rest.

The earth fits heavy on them,
But they do not complain;
They do not miss the sunshine,
Nor do they miss the rain.

If they see ever conscious,
In that low place of theirs,
It is when, past the sentinel,
We feel the spring days.

When the birds from tender countries
Come back, and the sight of stars,
And where of late were same drifts,
The grass was thick with flowers—

Such flowers as will to morrow
Be scattered where they lie,
The blue sky looking down
Between the same sweet sky.

No stain upon their manhood,
No memory in the past,
Except the common sight
Of a bad mark or one at last!

THE GENTLEMAN BEGGAR.

One morning, many years ago, I called by appointment on Mr. John Balance, the fashionable pawnbroker, to accompany him to Liverpool, in pursuit for a lounging customer, for Balance, in addition to pawning, does a little business in the bill-broking line. It rained in torrents when the cab stopped at the passage which leads past the pawning house to his private door. The cabman rang twice, and at length Balance appeared, leaning through the maid and rain in the entry, illuminated by his perpetual cigar. As I eyed him rather impatiently, remembering that trains wait for no man, something like a hairy leg dangled of rags rose up at his feet and barred his passage for a moment. Then Balance cried out with an exclamation, in answer apparently to a something I could not hear: "What, man alive! slept in the passage! there, take that and get some breakfast, for heaven's sake. So saying, he jumped into the "hansom," and we bowled away at ten miles an hour, just catching the express as the doors of the station were closing. My curiosity was full for although Balance can be free with his money, it is not exactly to beggars that his generosity is usually directed; so, the mystery had engrossed in a corner. I could, a while.

"You are liberal with your money this morning; pay, has often do you give officer to street beggars? because I shall know what walk to take when fists and sharp, leave off begging lax."

"Balance, who would have made an excellent preacher if he had not been bred to a case-hardening trade, and has a soft fat left in his heart that is always fighting with his hard hand, did not smile at all, but looked as grim as a gargoyle. I bean into his Saturday night's pouch. He answers slowly: "A codger—yes, a beggar a miserable wretch, he is now: I will tell you, Master David, that that miserable bundle of rags was born and bred a gentleman; the son of a nobleman, the husband of an heiress, and has sat and dined at tables where you and I, Master David, are only allowed to view the plate in favor of the butler. I have lent him thousands, and been well paid. The last thing I held from him was his court suit, and I held now his bill for £100, that will be paid, I expect, when he dies.

"Why, what nonsense you are talking. You must be dreaming this morning. However, we are alone; I'll bite as a seat in defiance of railway law; you shall spin that yarn, for, true or untrue, it will fill up the time to Liverpool."

"As for yarn," replied Balance, "the whole story is short enough; and, as for truth, that you may easily find out if you like to take the trouble. I thought the poor wretch was dead, and I own it put me out meeting him this morning for I had a curious dream last night."

"Oh, hang your dreams. Tell us about this gentleman beggar that bleeds you of half-pennies—that melts the heart even of a pawnbroker."

"Well, then, that beggar is the illegitimate son of the late Marquis of Hempborough by a Spanish lady of rank. He received a first-rate education and was brought up to the profession of arms. At a very early age he obtained an appointment in a public office, was presented by the Marquis at court and received into the first society, where his handsome person and agreeable manners made him a great favorite. Soon after coming of age he married the daughter of Sir E. Bamper, who brought him a very handsome fortune, which was strictly settled on herself. They lived in splendid style, kept several carriages, a house in town and a place in the country. For some reason or other, idleness, or to phrase his latter shocking, improvidence, he squandered his father's property, and died and left him nothing; indeed, he assured me that they hardly provided for.

"Very soon Mr. and Mrs. Molinos Fitz Roy began to disagree. She, was cold, correct—he was hot and random. He was quite dependent on her, and she made him feel it. When he began to run into debt he came to me. At length a some shocking improvidence occurred; some echo of jealousy on the wife's side, not without reason, I believe, and the end of it was Mr. Fitz Roy was turned out of doors. The house was his wife's, the furniture was his wife's, and the fortune was his wife's—he was, in fact, her pensioner. He left with a few hundred pounds ready money and some personal jewelry, and had went to a hotel. On these and would be lost. Being illegitimate, he had no relations; being a fool when he spent his money he lost his friends. The world took his side, and when they found she had the fortune, and the only parties who interfered were her relatives, who did the best to make the quarrel incurable. To crown all, one night he was run over by a cab, was carried to a hospital and lay there for months, and was, during several weeks of the time, unconscious. A message to the wife, by the hands of one of his debauched companions, and in a humane surgeon, obtained an intimation that "if he died, Mr. Croal, the undertaker to the family, had orders to see to the funeral, and that Mrs. Molinos was on the point of starting for the continent, not to return for some years. When he left, she was discharged he came to me, limping on two sticks, to pawn his court suit, and told me his story. I was moved by the tale of folly, such a handsome, thoroughbred looking man. He was going then into the West somewhere to try land under a friend. What folie, balance, he said. I don't know. I sent him to a friend, and somebody will make me their gamekeeper I must starve, or beg, as my Jezebel leads me when we parted.

"I lost sight of Molinos for a long time, and when I next came upon him it was in the rookery of Westminster, in a low lodging-house, where I was serving with an officer for stolen goods. He was pointed out to me as "the gentleman codger," because he was so free with his money when he had luck. He recognized me, but turned away then. I have since seen him and relieved him more than once, although he never asks for anything. How he lives, heaven knows. Without money, without friends, without medical advice, time of any kind, he tramps the country, we can saw him, perhaps drop a little hoop picking or lay-making, only hoper when he obtains the means to get drunk. I have heard through the kitchen whispers, that you know come to me, that he is entitled to some property, and I expect if he were to find it, his wife would pay the £100 bill I hold, for, I know, he would be the last to lose to be true, and the bundle of rags I relieved just now is known in every thieves' lodging as the "gentleman codger."

This story produced an impression on me. I am fond of speculation and like the excitement of a legal hunt as much as some do a fox chase. A gentleman, a beggar, a wife rolling in wealth, relatives of distinction present—one to the instant; it seemed as if there was picking for me amidst this carrion of pauperism. Before returning from Liverpool I had purchased the gentleman beggar's acceptance for £100. I then inserted in the Times the following advertisement: "Hernace Molinos Fitz Roy. If the gentleman will apply to David Dimcount, Esq., solicitor, St. James, he will hear of something to his advantage. No person furnishing Mr. F.'s address shall receive £1 for serving me. He was last seen, etc. Within twenty four hours I had ample proof of the wide circulation of the Times. My office was besieged by beggars of every degree—men and women, lame and blind, Irish, Scotch, and English, husband of an heiress, and has sat and dined at tables where you and I, Master David, are only allowed to view the plate in favor of the butler. I have lent him thousands, and been well paid. The last thing I held from him was his court suit, and I hold now his bill for £100, that will be paid, I expect, when he dies.

"Why, what nonsense you are talking. You must be dreaming this morning. However, we are alone; I'll bite as a seat in defiance of railway law; you shall spin that yarn, for, true or untrue, it will fill up the time to Liverpool."

"As for yarn," replied Balance, "the whole story is short enough; and, as for truth, that you may easily find out if you like to take the trouble. I thought the poor wretch was dead, and I own it put me out meeting him this morning for I had a curious dream last night."

I answered quickly: "Heaven forbid I should quarrel with your dreams, for I hope to do him good, as well as myself."

"Then, sir, I am Molinos Fitz-Roy," replied the man; and as we were conversing, candles were brought in. I, who have good nerves—my head would not agree with them—but I own I started and shuddered when I saw and knew that the wretched creature before me was under 30 years of age and once a gentleman. Sharp, squalid features, reduced to literal skin and bone, were begrimed and covered with dry, fair hair; but while teeth of the half-open mouth chattered with eagerness, and made more hideous the foul pallor of the fixed face of the countenance. As he stood leaning on a staff, half lean, his hair, yellow, lousy, fingers clasped over the crooked head of his stick, he was indeed a picture of misery, famine, squalor and premature age too horrible to dwell upon. I made him sit down, and then sent for some refreshment, which he devoured like a ghoul, and set to work to unravel his story. It was difficult to keep to the point; but with pains I learned what enamoured me that he was entitled to some property, whether great or small I knew no evidence. On parting, I said, "Now, Mr. F., you must stay in town while I make proper inquiries. When I have made he enough to keep you comfortably?"

He replied humbly, after much pressing, "Would you think, sir, twenty one shillings a week?"

"I shall like, if I do these things at all, to do them slashingly, so, I said: "Come over Saturday and you shall have a pound." He fell down on his thanks, and all men are as long as they are tall.

I had previously learned that my ragged client's wife was in England living in a splendid style, and in the goodness, under her maiden name. On my return I found the fact of my calling upon me, wanting £5,000 by 6 o'clock the same evening. It was a case of life or death with him, and so I made my terms, and took advantage of his pressure to extract a comfortable fee. I prepared the Lady Molinos at home to receive the money, calling it Mr. Molinos', in Hyde Park gardens, on our way. I knew that the current and liveries of his father, the Marquis, would inspire me an alarming respect. Mr. Molinos Fitz-Roy, with Mrs. Molinos Fitz-Roy.

The lady received us. I was introduced into the lady's presence. Silks, and probably, in a very modest way, diamonds, with pale, cold, imperious, high, solid forehead, regular features, and a pinched, self-satisfied mouth. My interview was very short. I plunged into the middle of the affair, and just scarcely mentioned the word husband when she interrupted me with, "I presume you have bamed this profligate person, money, and you want me to pay you." She paused, and then said, "Sir, I shall not have anything." As she spoke her white face became scarlet.

"But, madam, the man is starving. I have strong reasons for believing he is entitled to property, and if you refuse my assistance I shall take other measures." She rang the bell, wrote something rapidly on a card, and, as the footman approached, threw it across the table with the air of touching a leper, saying "There, sir, is the address of my solicitors; apply to them if you think you have any claim. Robert, show the person out, and take care he is not admitted again."

So far I had offered nothing, and, under the influence of that great eye, I feared to offer a farthing. Indeed, I felt rather crest-fallen and powerless to contain grand ladies and small great actresses.

My next visit was to the attorneys, Messrs. Lemann & Fadum, of Lincoln's Inn Square, and there I was at home. I had made inquiries in the interval. They are agents for half the aristocracy, are always on the servants' heels, are affec the same wine merchants, the same architects, the same house dealers and the same lawyers. It may be doubtful whether the quality of law and land management they get on this principle is sound to their wives and lovers. At any rate, my friends at Lincoln's Inn, like others of the same class, are distinguished by their courteous manners, deliberate proceedings, lenorence of local technicalities, long credit and heavy charges. Lemann, the elder partner, wears powder and a huge bunch of seals, lives in Queen square, drives a brougham, gives the dinners and does the social department. He is so strict in performing the latter duty that he once addressed a poacher who had shot a Duke's keeper as "my dear creature," although he afterward hanged him.

Fadum has chambers in St. James' street, drives a cab, wears a wig, and does the ground-in-his-sth.

My business lay with Lemann. The interviews and the opening were numerous. However, it came at last to my receiving Balance's

"Well, my dear Mr. Discount," began Mr. Lemann, who hates me like poison, "I'm really very sorry that good Mr. Molinos—knew his father well; a great friend, drives a cab, wears a wig, and does the ground-in-his-sth—has gone over! My client won't advance a shilling! There came in a old man leaning on a staff, clad in a soldier's gray cloak, and ragged and lean, with a battered hat, from under which a mass of tangled hair fell over his shoulders and hid! revealed his face. The beggar, in a weak, whazzy, hesitating tone, said: "You have advertised for Molinos Fitz-Roy. I hope you don't mean him any harm; he's sick, I think, too low for anything. Sorry I missed you." The weak sport with such misery as his." These last words were uttered in a sort of prison whisper.

A FLOATING FUNERAL.

Blocked Mourners Carrying Their Dead Through the Streets After Sightsight.

[From a St. Astrich's New Book.]

The night of our arrival was one of those unearthly moonlight nights that belong to Italy. The Arno, changed to a stream of quicksilver, flowed swiftly through the stone arches of the Ponte Vecchio under our windows, and lured us into its beauty out of doors, though an great clock somewhere near by just tolmaged 11. By an engraving I had seen in my Boyhood I recognized the bridge of Taddeo Gaddi, with its gabled houses shops on either side. They were closed now, of course. I strolled across the bridge and back again, once or twice, and then wandered off into a neighborhood of dingy streets, traversed by one street so very narrow that you saw only a band's breadth of amethyst sky between the tops of the tall habitings. Standing in the middle of this thoroughfare, I could almost touch the shutters of the shops right and left. At the upper end of the street, which was at least three-quarters of a mile in length, the moonlight fronts of the lofty homes seemed to meet and shut out the dense moonlight. In the departe straggle which took place there between the moon and the glows a hundred lanterns, which gave to the ceiga and carouse and fall into the street below the business going from the ramparts at some old castle. One a human being or a light was anywhere inside. Suddenly I saw what, for an instant, I took to be a falling star in the extreme distance. It approached in a zigzag course. It came with a great slang; those grew larger; then I saw a torch, and then I heard the monotonous chant, like the distant chorus of a Hosannah an opera, reached the ear. The procession came directly under my ear. The chant increased in distinctness, and, as the torches drew nearer, I saw that they were carried by fifteen or twenty persons marching in a square, in the middle of which was a bier supported by a number of ghastly figures. The procession was preceded by one of the rate of six miles an hour; the trained pall flapped in the wind caused by the velocity of the march. When the cortege was within twenty or thirty yards of me I noticed that the textile banners and the persons who held them looking a weakdrunkd from forehead to foot in white sheets, with two slits opened for the eyes. I drew involuntarily back to make way for the fellows carrying the whole width of the narrow street. I had barely time to crowd against the wall when the procession swept by with a rhythmical swinging gait, to the chant of the sad, fa drawn. I waited until the muffled chant stuffed into the distance, and then I made a beeline for the hotel.

"When this was reported to Garfield he said that Mr. Gould ought to know that he entertained the same views that Mr. Gould did respecting the interests of these corporations, and he wanted Mr. Gould to be assured that, if elected president, and it should fall to his lot to nominate a member to the supreme bench, he would take care to appoint a man whose views in that regard were the same as his own. This was taken to Mr. Gould. He announced himself as entirely satisfied with it, but he made the gentle suggestion that it be put in the form of a pledge and in writing. This was done and it is alleged that the pledge can be produced, as it is understood to have been committed to the keeping of a gentleman who holds it subject to the order of both parties. When Mr. Gould warmed up to the republican party himself and subscribed $150,000 as is expected to be shown before the investigating committee, this money was taken to Cleveland, Ohio, and there divided. Part of it was sent to Indiana and the rest was used in Ohio. Garfield subsequently nominated the man to whom the agreement had reference, Stanley Matthews, to the supreme bench and Gould telegraphed senator Plumb, urging him to secure Matthew's confirmation. Matthews was confirmed by one majority."

Porter and the "Pauper Labor of Europe."

One the best answers yet given to ex-tariff commissioner Porter's representations concerning the workingmen of England is contained in the following communication, signed "republican," and published in the Chicago Tribune:

Mr. Porter, the hired witness for the New York Tribune appears to have no difficulty in England in finding such evidence against free trade as he has been told to get. He is a good example of that maxim that a man may lie in speaking the literal truth. The examples of poverty and distress that he exhibits are no doubt correct, but his inferences and his insinuation that they are fairly representatives of the condition of English workingmen are false.

Born and reared among the working classes of England, my boyhood was spent in London during the years of the free trade agitation. I was 20 years old when the free trade policy was adopted and the "protection" antipathy discarded forever. I have a vivid recollection of the social and moral condition of the working classes during the period when the the "protective" system oppressed the industry of Great Britain. After a thirty years' residence in America, I returned to England a short time ago, and could scarcely recognize the people, so great was their improvement under the operation of the enlightened system of free trade. I found the workingmen receiving much higher wages for less hours of labor, while the price of every article of food, clothing, and other necessaries had been correspondingly reduced. And yet individual cases of poverty could be found in every town in England if the detectives chose to search for them.

If the Chicago Tribune will send one over to England with instructions to find evidence of the wealth and comfort of the English workingmen, I will guarantee to find it; if you instruct me to find the evidence of their extreme poverty and degradation, I agree to furnish that also. Tell me what sort of testimony you want, and I will bring it into court—of vicious, of poverty, of virtue or vice, of manly independence or abject servility—just tell me what you want and you shall have it. I will earn my wages.

If the London Times will hire me to furnish similar testimony as to the social condition of the people in America, I can do so, and in both cases I will tell the literal truth; the lie will consist in the inference that my exceptional instances fairly represent the general condition. Within the last three weeks I have seen and heard more violent expressions of discontent from the workingmen of Chicago than I ever heard in England during the hungry agitation of forty years ago. Within that time, at a large meeting of more than 200 people, I have heard the condition of the workingmen of Chicago described by themselves as a condition of "wage-slavery." I heard one very intelligent man declare that more people had been evicted from their homes in Chicago on the 1st of May, for the crime of poverty, than had been evicted during the whole year in Ireland. I heard another man, a good speaker, too, say, with intense feeling, "I fought four years to free the black slaves of the South; I am now ready to fight to emancipate the white slaves of the North;" and when the hopelessness of successful revolution was suggested, he admitted that monopoly was so strongly intrenched that it could not be overthrown by open fighting in the field, but he said, "We can use dynamite;" and then the whole company burst into applause. He continued: "Because the Chicago Tribune denounces dynamite weak men flinch from its use, but dynamite is the remedy to put an end to our slavery;" and again the meeting applauded. Now, Mr. Editor, if I should sell this testimony to the London Times as fair evidence of the condition of American workingmen, I should imitate the swift witness, Porter; I should constitute myself a liar for money, although the facts related would be true.

This meeting was not a secret one; it was not held in any out of the way corner; it was open to everybody, and took place on the very same street where the Tribune is published. It adjourned in a somewhat electrical condition. As I was passing out a man whom I never saw before addressed me in a rather excited manner.

"They never touched the true cause of our trouble," he said; "never touched it at all."

"What is it?" I inquired.

"The infernal tariff," he replied; "that makes everything dear that we buy."

"Why didn't you tell them so?" I said.

"Because I didn't get a chance; there were so many of them trying to speak that the chairman didn't recognize me."

This man had worked out the solution of the problem by the arithmetic of his household expenses, as the workingmen of England did at last. If the mechanics of America could see that English mechanics of 1843 and contrast him with his son of 1883, they would not be deluded another minute by the sophistries of what is falsely called "protection."

I SCREAM.

Tell us and in mournful numbers
Flat this life is but a dream,
When a gift that weighs one hundred
Gets outside a quart of cream—
And then wants more.

—[Omaha Gazette.

Life is real, life is earnest,
And the girls know what they need,
But on cream they are the biggest
Set to show their grit and greed.
No encore.

—[New York Times.

Be not like dumb, driven cattle,
Be a hero in the strife,
Never will her mother battle
Over the ice cream for your life.
Proceed.

—[Brooklyn Eagle.

Let us, then, be up and doing,
With a heart for any fate;
But never let us go a-wooing
Girls that want another plate.
Here's that?

—[Meriden Newsboy.

Lives of such girls all remind us,
As we from joiners the stream,
That the boys who come behind us
Will have to pay for lots of cream.
Sensed.

—[Yonkers Statesman.

And, departing, leave another
Bill our unpaid plates of cream,
Which, perhaps, some forlorn brother,
Seeing, may take heart again,
And get trusted also.

Not enjoyment, and not sorrow,
Is our destined end or way;
But to treat, though cash be borrow,
Every friend when we come to pay,
Don't it?

—[Palmer Journal.

Trust no girl, however pleasant,
With ice cream to be served;
She'll eat until her lover hasn't
To his name another cent.
And then shake him.

The Civil Service Machine.

Noting the start of the "new patent nickle-plated, back-action, reversible, civil service machine," the New York World gives the following table of questions asked by the examiners:

ARITHMETIC.

Define addition, division and silence.

A clerk's salary is raised ten per cent. and the committee assels him twenty per cent. How much can he afford to spend on his vacation?

A contractor holds a statesman's note for $950 and loses it to the statesman at a game of poker. How much does the contractor gain?

Reduce £868 17s. 6d. to trade dollars.

The principal of the national debt is $1,000,000,000, and the annual interest six per cent.; if the rate of interest is reduced to three and one-half per cent., how many houses can be built on Wall street and Broadway out of the saving?

A ship costs $1,200,000, and a patriot contracts to build it for $800,000; how many extras will he need to clear 100 per cent. profit after dividing with the department?

Explain the meaning of the following numerical expressions: "62d," "56X," "8 to 7," "4 11-44."

A senator draws a salary of $5,000 a year and spends $6,000. In how many years will he be worth a million?

Twenty clerks in a postoffice receive salaries of $100 a month each. How long will an assessment of two per cent. support the grand old party?

Divide forty barrels of flour, 200 blankets, 800 pounds of cheese, and eight boxes tooth-picks among 700 Indians, and how much will the remainder be and what will the agent do with it?

GEOGRAPHY.

How for is it from Niobrara to Washington by a star route?

Name six leading Indian agencies and give estimated stealings of each.

How many square miles of railroad grants can be surveyed in the remaining territory of the government?

Where is Sing Sing? Joliet? What noted men live there and what industries do they pursue?

Name six principal rivers and harbors and the estimated appropriations of each.

HISTORY.

Give some account of the life and opinions of Garfield, including his opinion on the DeGolyer paving contract.

State what you know of Oakes Ames and of his aims and hoaxes.

Who was Eliza Pinkston?

Give a resume of the Mulligan letters; of the Morey letter.

Would you begin a letter "Mr Dear Hubbell" or "My Dear Mr. Hubbell?" "My Dear Dorsey" or "My Deer Mr. Dorsey?" And if so, why not?

A Fair Sample.

The Detroit Free Press of Wednesday calls attentico to the fact that newspaper organs of the monopolists naturally have no sympathy with the strike of the telegraph operators. The sentiments accredited to the Post & Tribune are entirely in harmony with their actions on the occasion of a strike in their own office, and which will be remembered for years by many good printers:

The Detroit Post and Tribune is the organ of wealthy monopolists, its sympathies are naturally with the members of its high and mighty order; and when the public universally sympathizes with the operators in their struggle with the arrogance and greed of their employers, and wishes them success, the monopolist newspapers, the mouthpieces of a few rich men who, in words of Wm. H. Vanderbilt, "don't care a d—d for public opinion," have made themselves odious by their supposeriviceable zeal in making war upon the strikers. The Post like several of its monopolists contemporaries, has from the outset sneered at the strikers; belittled their cause; derided their grievances; reproached them for their discontent, and, by clipping and garbling from its exchanges, arrayed against them all the hostile expressions that have found their way into print. Few, indeed, are the strikes where the occasion for striking, the excess of the demands, the unfair and vicious conduct of the strikers, the vagueness of their discontent, have not alienated or suppressed the public sympathy. But this one, exceptional in its calmness, its regularity of method, its temperate and self-controlled conduct, has evoked the heartiest approval. Notwithstanding its merits the organs of monopoly have treated it with the same heat, the same continuedness, the same discouragements, denunciation and rebuke, as if the strikers were murdering those willing to work, burning property and terrifying communities with riot and bloodshed. This proves that no cause can be just enough, no demand reasonable enough, no strikers sufficiently decent, intelligent and well-behaved to placate or conciliate a monopolist. Like the king who rules by divine right, the monopolist is aggrieved, not merely by the ingratitude and insolence of rebellion, but by the audacity that dares question his supreme power to ride roughshod over every right and interest that does not contribute to his own importance, wealth and greatness. And the monopolist organs show clearly that the offense of the operators is not, as is often the case, in asking for extravagant wages, and in demanding them with violence and riot, but daring to ask at all.

Cheering Auguries.

To show the feeling among prominent democrats in the nation respecting the course which the party should pursue in future, and also the general belief that the republican party is doomed to certain defeat at the next presidential election, we quote as follows: Congressman Hunt, of Louisiana, says:

"It is clear that, in order to succeed as it ought the democracy is obliged to be united, and must be conservative and wise. It must be faithful to the teachings of the fathers of the republic as to the objects of the American constitutional government. It must be patriotic and prudent. It must be practical to be strong and must be just to all interests, and entirely national—the party representing the power of the body of the whole people, and upholding their rights, interests and honor."

Congressman Lowry of Indiana, says:

"Let the democratic party now manifest its loyalty to the principles, inculcated by its founders; let the combination of conservatism and conservatism, combined with a bold, vigorous and aggressive policy, prevail, and this country may now be restored to a condition of purity and prosperity under democratic rule, akin to that enjoyed other days and in view of our territorial extension, unexampled for grandeur and simplicity of administration.

Congressman Caldwell, of Tennessee, attributes democratic defeats in the past very largely to personal animosity; but "nothing in the past, present or future action of the democracy, whether dissensions among our chiefs, or possible blunders of our statesmen, will avail to prevent that change of administration of national affairs which has been predetermined by the American people." Ex-senator Doolittle, of Wisconsin, takes the most encouraging view of the political situation, and Congressman Holman, of Indiana, regards "the times most propitious for the friends of free and honest government, who stand by the landmarks of the fathers." Hundreds of other equally prominent men express themselves in a similar manner. All agree that the times never were so auspicious for the success of the democracy in the next national campaign since the birth of the republican party.—[Chippewa Democrat.

The Republican Resolve.

The republication by Mr. Dorsey of his story of the negotiations with Garfield and of his management of the Garfield campaign has made a deep impression on the republicans, and they have inwardly resolved never to trust Dorsey again. They are like the old negro who heard of the death of his chum from the combustion of his breath caused by blowing out a candle, and who thereupon sent for a bible and solemnly swore thereon never to blow out a candle. —[New York World.

Ernest Longfellow, the poet's son, has made a selection of twenty of his father's poems, which he will illustrate. The subjects are mostly landscapes, and the pictures will be made of the scenes themselves.—[New York Post.

The appraisal of the property of the poet Longfellow shows a value about $350,000, of which $220,000 is personal property and $130,000 real estate.

"Well, I reckon I have to, 'cause she's my sister, but she thumps me pretty hard sometimes. But say, I see you open your mouth once. Now shut it real tight till I count ten. There, I knew you could do it."

"Why, Tommy, who said I couldn't?"

"Uh, nobody much, just sister."

"What did she say?"

A DEATH TRAP.

Eight Men Killed by the Fall of a Blast Furnace Near Syracuse, New York.

The Unfortunates Buried Beneath Sixty Tons' Weight of Brick and Iron.

(Telegraph from Syracuse, N. Y.)

A terrible accident occurred at the Onondaga Iron Company's blast furnace a mile west of this city, in Geddes. For several weeks the furnace has been unused, it being out of repair. Joseph Dawson, who is going on a tour of Europe, had engaged for several days in renovating engineer and fire bricks from the arch, leaving only the outer course standing. The foreman concluded the course entirely secure. Without the slight warning the arch caved in, burying the workmen beneath it in a mass of bricks, mortar, cast iron and ashes. An alarm was at once given, and the men who had escaped at work while a will engineer after the sports of the day, were gathered on the wharf at the bridge that was to bear them to their homes approached. No thought of danger was in their minds. With scarce a moment's warning, the structure gave way, and the unfortunates were hurled to a depth of twenty feet. The alarm was given in the village of Geddes, and the place looked as if deserted, so many were in the excursion. Dr. Lyons, of Syracuse, was the first to reach the scene, and was fully five minutes after the collapse before the first assistance came. The men had been at work on the furnace for about a week, and had completed the arch only a few days before the accident. The furnace was 60 feet high, and was built of brick and iron. The men were working at the top of the furnace, and were at work on the outside, and the men were at work on the inside. The men were at work on the outside, and the men were at work on the inside. The men were at work on the outside, and the men were at work on the inside. The men

Wanted A Railroad.

The greatest need of this community is a railroad giving quick and sure connections with the east and south. Here is a county as rich in resources as any in the lower peninsula, shut in from the outside world during the close of water navigation, with no communication whatever except the uncertain and unreliable stage mail. Here are a few thousand people doing a business which, during water navigation, runs way up into the millions, and with a railroad could be more than doubled. Here is one of the best harbors on lake Michigan, on a direct line from Detroit to the upper peninsula, lying unimproved, while other less favorable places are being improved all and more than they will ever be made to pay. Here is a point which would give, on a line of transportation to Escanaba and the mining districts, at least one month more for active business than any point further north. Here are fourteen large saw-mills on Pine lake, depending entirely on summer shipments, whose business could be greatly increased, if not doubled, with winter transportation added. Here are millions of feet of first-quality hardwood timber, awaiting the slow, easy going water transportation, which, with a rail connection east, might be turned into cash in half the time. Here is a rich agricultural district, the basis of all wealth, awaiting only a quick transportation to a sure and steady market to insure its fullest development. Here is a spot unsurpassed in natural beauty and advantages to the pleasure-seeker, whose cool and invigorating climate will give renewed life and activity to the overworked merchant and mechanic, or the frail and careworn housewife. All this and more, yet no railroad.

Efforts have been made in the past to bring the attention of railroad officials to our resources and advantages, but so far without encouraging results.

The Toledo and Ann Arbor road is seeking a terminus on lake Michigan, and other towns are competing with our own in presenting advantages.

The Michigan Central, too, would like to strike the lake somewhere in this vicinity, but they are slow to decide.

The Toledo and Ann Arbor road is now built to Howell, and in its extension northward it could be made to strike the county seat of nearly every county through which it passed. With a northern terminus at Charlevoix it would get not only a good local traffic but a permanent through traffic, in the winter a large freight business which must now wait for spring, and to the summer the thousands of pleasure-seekers from the east and south who now come by a more indirect and circuitous route.

A line from some point on the J. L. & S. northern extension would doubtless be the shortest to build, and while it would be of little more benefit to Clark county than the Toledo route in giving us direct connection with the trunk lines to the east, it would be a benefit to Detroit business. Goods which now come from Chicago by boat in the summer, and in the winter any way they can get them, would come from Detroit all the time by reason of the certain and speedy transportation.

Last spring a meeting of our business men was held, a statement drawn up giving facts and figures, unanimously signed, and a copy forwarded to the officers of each of these roads, but so far as we can learn they have given the matter no action. What they may be considering or preparing to do we are unable to say. We believe if they select and build their road to any other point on lake Michigan than Charlevoix they will see their mistake, possibly when it is too late.

In another article we shall give a few figures to show that Charlevoix county is one of the richest in resources in the lower peninsula.

The great strike of telegraph operators still unsettled.

Filled with choice local and general news. [Elk Rapids Progress.

The people of that shire should give it liberal patronage, and thus enable the publisher to continue to give his paper the fine appearance and large amount of reading of the initial number. [Mich. Trade Journal, Grand Rapids.

The first number of the Charlevoix JOURNAL made its appearance last week, and our failure to notice it in these columns was due to circumstances well known to our readers. The JOURNAL is a handsomely printed five-column quarto, and has every appearance of being a good paper. Mr. Strang undoubtedly understands his business, and will succeed. [Charlevoix Sentinel.

The first number of the Charlevoix JOURNAL has reached us, published by Chas. J. Strang, formerly of this office. It comes out in fine shape, and is democratic in politics. Mr. Strang is one of the most steady and honorable of men, and with such an exhilirating stimulus as northern Michigan affords, will put nerve into the work sufficient to make it abundantly successful. Our best wishes are with the JOURNAL and its publisher.—[Charlotte Leader.

No. 1 of the Charlevoix JOURNAL, published by our old friend C. J. Strang, finds a welcome place upon our table. It is a five-column quarto, printed from new type, overflowing with fresh local and general news, and presents as fine an appearance as any paper in the state. Charlie knows how, and will keep it up in first-class style. The JOURNAL is well worthy the patronage and support of every democrat in Charlevoix county and we trust will receive it. [Gratiot Co. Democrat.

Notes and News.

Balloting for United States senator continues in New Hampshire, with little change from day to day.

The best exchange we get at present is the Chippewa Democrat, as is shown by its appearance after the regular weekly encounter with the editorial shears.

We have been sending sample copies of the JOURNAL to a few whose names were recommended by their friends. We will esteem it a favor if they notify us by postal card or in some other manner if they do or do not want it.

Three pardons were granted by the governor on July 26th. It would be much cheaper if his excellency would discharge the judges and shut up the court rooms, thus saving many expensive and tedious trials besides no end of heart-aches. What are laws and courts for, anyway?

The losses resulting from the great strike will turn the attention of the people to postal telegraphy, where there can be no such general stoppage of business. Now, was not the whole thing forced on by the monopolists so they can unload their watered stock upon the government?

The republican journals have already begun compounding their campaign whitewash for 1884, with the Detroit Post & Tribune well to the front. It is a pretty good encyclopedia for papers of lesser importance to consult in their search for the true type of republican literature.

If our democratic friends throughout the county will make a little extra effort just now in the matter of subscriptions, they will confer a greater benefit than any amount of help will give later on. We want a good list of names, and any small amount of cash is acceptable, if you cannot pay the year in advance.

The bids for the state printing for two years commencing Jan. 1, 1884, were opened last Wednesday, and the contract awarded to P. L. George and George Jerome. The bids were opened and read in a manner to give entire satisfaction to all competing but unsuccessful bidders. Chas. N. Ayers, of Detroit, gets the contract for furnishing stationery.

Mr. Gen. M. Chester has purchased the Detroit Chaff, and Lloyd Breeze steps down and out. Chaff is supported chiefly by the dramatic profession. It has been very successful, financially, and Mr. Chester is said to be abundantly able to keep it up to its present high standing. Mr. Breeze is one of the firm who are to start a two cent evening daily in Detroit. We hope he will be as successful in his new venture as in the old.

Dorsey's disclosures have created consternation in the camp of the republicans, and they are undecided whether to repudiate him or not. To call him a great thief and rascal, which he is, would be base ingratitude, for his methods and management elected their candidate to the presidential chair. They would much rather give him his old place as manager than echo the popular cry "impeach the rascal and his confederates."

"Turn the rascals out?" Why, certainly. They were turned out twenty-two years ago, when they had knocked the bottom out of the treasury, sent the navy to the ends of the earth, and, could the last democratic secretary of war have had his way, would have sent the army to join it. The rascals were very effectually turned out, and they'll have to struggle hard to get in again.—[Harper's Weekly. And as the republican party seem to be doing pretty much the same thing now, it is just for the rising generation should "turn the rascals out."

Another fool has met his deserts by attempting to trifle with the great Niagara. Capt. Matthew Webb, an English swimmer, made an attempt last Wednesday to swim the Niagara river whirlpool rapids, and was engulfed. His body was found floating in the river a short distance below Lewiston, N. Y., on Saturday. On the top of the head was a ragged cut, evidently inflicted by a rock, of itself sufficient to cause death. The body was coffined and removed in a hearse to Suspension Bridge, N. Y., where it will be prepared for shipment to Boston, where Mrs. Webb is at present residing.

Taken altogether, Dorsey's disclosures make up as black a record of political villainy against the republican party as it is possible to conceive of. When we add to this the testimony unmasked in the investigation of Grant—the outrageous steals perpetrated by ex-secretary of the navy Robeson—the corruption of ex-postmaster general Creswell—the whisky ring disclosures and the long and shameless catalogue of such doings which have been brought home time and again to the republican party—the self-styled "party of purity"—a misnomer for "party of putridity"—we think it is indeed about time to have a change.—[Chippewa Democrat.

A reunion of the John Morgan confederation was held at Lexington, Ky., last week. Several hundred members of that force were in camp on a part of the estate of Henry Clay in tents furnished by the war department. Jefferson Davis was invited, but sent a letter saying that ill health prevented him from attempting the fatigue of so long a journey and the excitement of so joyous an occasion. He continued: "The name of your association is eloquently commemorative of the daring deeds performed, of the dire suffering borne and the barbarous indignities inflicted on men who had bravely struggled in equal combat to vindicate the rights their fathers left them.

The Buffalo Courier comments as follows upon the Dorsey exposures: "We rise from the perusal of this miserable narrative with the conviction that Garfield had no moral right to prosecute Dorsey; that Arthur had no moral right to prosecute him. He was the hero of a shameful and venal caucuss, in which the leaders of the party bargained for the spoils of office, and put the government employes, blackmailed monopolists, stole the booty of thieves and purchased the vote of a state. And the whole organization approved of the work. Dorsey should be restored to the pedestal on which the speechmakers at the Delmonico dinner set him. He is the typical republican politician of this generation; and if the party is fit to be in power it is certainly fit to sit in its high places. It is to his credit that he refused a cabinet office when others were engaged in a wild scramble for spoils, and that although threatened with disgrace and the punishment of a felon where others were only threatened with the loss of patronage, he took little share in the quarrel that culminated in the murder of the president."

The Law that Monopoly Wants.

The proposition of the New York Evening Post, that strikes by telegraph employes should be prohibited by law, is the most honest and outspoken statement we have yet seen of the monopoly position.

Unfortunately, however, it is too vague and indefinite. A law which merely prohibits an employe of a telegraph company from leaving the company because of any difference of opinion concerning wages or other conditions of employment, is good enough as far as it goes; but it does not go far enough. It does not make provision for cases of departure when the operator alleges as the cause the illness of himself or family, or any other reason not connected with wages. A law which fails to provide for a full investigation in such cases to see whether the employe is shamming or not, is obviously imperfect. Provision should be made also to prevent the employe leaving on account of old age or a desire to retire, before his earnings have made him independent.

Even when this is done the law will still be insufficient in dealing only with those actually in service. Something should be done to enable the telegraph corporations to fill vacancies occasioned by death from starvation, overwork, or other causes. A law empowering any telegraph company to impress into its service such skilled or unskilled operators as it may need, and to retain them so long as it may need them, at its own price and on its own terms, is about such a statute as the monopolists need to carry on the Evening Post proposition according to its spirit. Nothing but overweening modesty, we think, prevented that journal from outlining the work of the legislature in just that form. It thought the lawmakers might take a hint and might be jealous of any apparent dictation.—[Free Press.

Miss Effie Johns and the Effin star combination played an engagement of two nights at the opera house this week, but on account of severe rain storm each evening, they did not get as good houses as on their previous engagement. Our people generally speak highly of them, and had the weather been favorable they would doubtless have received the patronage they deserved.

Mr. Chas. W. Stevens and wife, H. Stevens and Miss Shirley Stevens, of Chicago, are have been spending the summer at the Fountain City house left Tuesday on the Grand Traverse for Suttons Bay. Mr. R. S. Stevens took large number of fine views. Mr. S. has a camera for taking instantaneous pictures, and his pictures of the Lawrance and T. S. Faxton cribs under way are very fine indeed.

The new furniture made for Cruickshank & Grier is in harmony with the finish of their rooms, and solid.

The man who wants to keep posted in the affairs of the county cannot do so without taking its county paper.

Improvement is the word all the resorts, not only in grounds and buildings, but moral and social culture.

On section eighteen, Hayes township are several cedar trees measuring feet in diameter, growing on high and dry ground.

The floor and foundation of the new boiler works of Joseph Hyland is finished, and work is being pushed as fast as possible.

Piles were driven this week for a new dock on the lot east of the machine shop. We understand it is for the use of the foundry.

The Cassopolis Democrat for July 19 has nearly a full page of illustrations and descriptions of Mackinac, which it styles "the fairy isle."

Owing to a pressure of freight business, the passenger service of Addis' narrow gauge railroad has been discontinued until next season.

The Manceloua Herald is now a six-column quarto, and is printed on a new power press. It is a clean, business-like sheet, and a credit to the town in which it is published.

The lake was too rough this morning for a tug to go out to the Fountain city, consequently she could land no freight or passengers. This is but one of the uncertainties of water navigation.

Mr. D. C. Nettleton has on hand a few of the old reliable Studebaker wagons which he desires to close out at once. These in want of a wagon will do well to call on him, as he advertises bottom prices.

The resorts are fast filling up, many pleasure seekers arriving on every boat. All who come here speak well of our town, and many promise to come another year, bring their families and stay all summer.

Mr. J. F. Zaink, of Greenville, is about to establish himself in the merchant tailoring trade in Charlevoix. He comes well recommended, and will no doubt build up a profitable business. We wish him success.

Mr. Harrison Miller, of Beaver Island, was in Charlevoix a few days last week, and returned home on the Lawrence Sunday evening.

Carpenter, Bartholomew & Co., will probably advertise in the JOURNAL as soon as their business gets up enough to give them time to consider the matter. Elder, M. Sec. Mason & Co., they say they have more business than they can attend to without advertising.

Mr. Geo. Duranee is now manager of the livery stable recently owned by A. A. Comstock, and those in want of horses for riding or driving will find him ever ready to please. He has at present twelve good horses, and a first-class outfit of carriages, harness and saddles, etc.

Our readers will miss from our advertising columns this week the artistic typographical display of Upright, Emrey & Co., that firm having decided to avail themselves of the benefits of the business notice column. Mr. Draper, the artist, may study a long time before he constructs another to beat it.

Mr. Joseph Beauvais has purchased of Dr. Crosier the boats and bait house in the rear of the drug store, and will continue the business. He has at present thirteen good boats, and will add more from time to time as necessity demands. He intends also to erect a larger shop, so as to be prepared to do anything in the line of building and repairing, and guarantee first-class work.

When you see the local newspaper well filled with cards of professional men and advertisements of business men, you can mark it down that that town is a live and growing town, but when the advertising columns of the paper are unoccupied you always feel instinctively that that town is as dead as a wall. And it is the surest way by which to judge a town.—[Manceloua Herald.

The announcement of A. J. McLeod will be found in our advertising columns, in buying meat at his market, the customer will notice that he has not only a cool, clean market, but the meat blocks, counter, scales, etc., are behind a screen, thus preventing any contact of flies or other insects with the meat. Farmers who have hides, pelts, or fat stock to sell will remember that he advertises to pay the highest market price in cash.

The East Jordan Enterprise came out last week enlarged to a seven column quarto, but we must confess not at all improved in appearance. It has a little more reading matter on its first page than usual, but use a little either the fourth, fifth, or eighth pages. Tisdale's not a bad field for advertisers. The reading will glance at the page, and finding nothing but advertisements will at once turn the paper aside, or perhaps turn to the "patent" side where it is well edited and printed.

The excursion to Mackinac Island on the steamer Faxton, under the auspices of the East Jordan band was well attended and all seemed to be satisfied with their trip. The band was a little too much to be pleased, consisting a majority of the excursionists to bag the railing very earnestly, and from the expression of their faces their thoughts were not far away.—one lamed on their heads the other on their stomachs, and the tale of their sorrow was told. Fun and sea sickness was the order of the day. Everything passed off very pleasantly until the boat was also, at Charlevoix, when one small fight took place between two of the musicians, and was quickly ended by the same. Takes all in all there was more fun, more sea sickness, and more big heads from the loss of sleep than any excursion of the season.

Last week, we "got left" on the record of the organization of the fire department, but perhaps "better late than never" will satisfy some of our readers. The following are the officers of the company: Business officers: President, John Nichols; Vice-president, A. R. Cudgeon; Sec'y, B. F. Fisher; Treas., E. Mills; Active officers: Foreman and chief, A. J. McLeod; assistant foreman, R. Adams; foreman of hose, H. C. Cooper; assistant, Wm. Ferguson; engineer, Gurney Brook. The company will recruit its members, and put themselves in active drill.

Stockman & Iddings are building a sixty-foot addition to their hardware store to accommodate their large and increasing trade. The east half will be used for a tin shop, the west half and basement for storage. The present tin shop will be transformed into a stove room, which will give more shelf room in front, and more storage room up stairs. When completed they expect to have the most convenient place of business and most complete stock in northern Michigan. They will also build a six-foot sidewalk from Bridge street to their dock for the convenience of the traveling public.

A few of our republican friends have thrown aside all prejudices and lent a hand to help this paper avoid the snares and traps which surely await every infant journal, and place it on a solid business foundation. These favors are appreciated, gentlemen, and though we may differ politically, as we grow stronger shall endeavor to help you in return by building up not only the village but the surrounding country, by bringing enriched additions of live, energetic, young mechanics, farmers, and business men to buy your goods, buy your real estate, and build homes for their families.

Those in want of hardware, stoves, farm implements, etc., should look over the commodious stock of L. D. Bartholomew. Among his specialties are the Garland stoves and ranges. These are said to be the best stoves on the market, and where one is sold others are sure to follow soon. He also keeps the Deldrup wagon, single and double; the Walter A. Wood, Warrior, and Hopkins mowers; the Perry Enter-prepared a good, substantial carriage manufactured in Milwaukee. He manufactures nearly all kinds of tinware, and keeps in stock everything usually found in a first-class house. A full assortment of shelf goods always on hand.

Those who have agates, corals or other stones to dress and mount for pins, rings, etc., will do well to call on O. W. Smith, at his shop in the rear of Nettleton's wagon shop, opposite Bridge Street house. Mr. Smith runs his wire and polishing stones by steam, which enables him to do his work first-class but quick and cheap. Those who are not fortunate enough to find handsome stones, can purchase of Mr. Smith almost anything they want, as he has collected and keeps on hand a great variety of all kinds, and for all grades of work. He uses nothing but the best material for mounting stones for charms, pins, rings, etc., and will guarantee satisfaction.

Bartholomew's Opera House.

This new place of amusement is now finished, although it has been opened to the public several times prior to its completion. Entering at the main stairway from Bridge street, the visitor is favorably impressed with the broad, easy slope, the comfortable chairs, the high and perfectly white ceilings, and the rich and handsome curtain and scenery.

There are at present 300 chairs arranged to face the stage, and room for 250 to 300 more, which will be added as necessity requires.

The stage is 18x22 feet, and is furnished with eight scenes and a drop curtain. The scenery was painted by one of the best artists in the business in Chicago, and includes parlor, street, rock, landscape, etc., all first-class in every respect.

Although the house is lighted with lamps, they are arranged to give a most excellent effect, and show to advantage the beauties of the various scenes.

For the benefit of troupes using the house, and also the audience in case of a fire or panic, there is an entrance from Main street, of sufficient width to empty the house in a very few minutes, which our people should remember.

The floor of the house was made level, and the rows of chairs removable, to accommodate the numerous balls and parties who may desire to use it.

In the course of time the walls and ceiling may be frescoed, but not while they retain the handsome white finish they now have.

It is the intention of the proprietor to make and keep the stage and its accessories equal to the best in the cities outside, thus making it an object for the best traveling troupes to visit Charlevoix.

The house is a credit to the builders and to the town, and is said to be the handsomest and best equipped in northern Michigan. We hope, and believe, it will prove a profitable investment, as it was certainly a necessity.

Garfield Showing Dorsey the Evidence Against Them—How the Mighty Republican Party Was Fallen.

[From the New York Sun.]

The essence of some events that had their beginning with the nomination of thirteen months ago with the verdict in the recent star-route trials. Two of the defendants in the trials were intimately connected with the Republican canvass in 1880, and one of them at least at one unexcited because of his relation with the stupendous frauds, that the very remarkable history of that canvass has been really in their power to tell. They have both retreated from dollars, because they were under fire, and because they know that they had the sympathy of many of the leading Republican politicians. When the Congress ordered an investigation into the system of letting the star-route contracts, Garfield, at Gen. Brady's request, made a very thorough examination into the whole matter. The result was that he assured Gen. Brady and Stanley Dorsey that he was satisfied they were not guilty of any fraud, and he promised them every appropriate in his which Gen. Brady could ask consistently with his duty. He would not only vote for it himself, but would also defend it upon the floor. Building upon this assurance, not only with the Appropriation Committee, but also on the floor, Brady and Dorsey were satisfied that the accusations against them would fail, and that they would have received standard-bearer's most positive assurance that he would do all in his power to defeat the charges, and that they had every reason to believe that he would keep his word. But when the matter came up Garfield not only failed them, but he actually used his influence to divide the Indiana delegation in the Chicago convention, and thus losing them when the matter came up. Dorsey was finally left without a friend at Brady. The Democratic Congressmen generally realized that Garfield had discovered that large amount of money were involved in star-route contracts, and they were delighted to think that Garfield would be able to make use of the knowledge at a later date. Therefore Brady thought Garfield did not care to have the exposure authoritatively in such a way, who had assured him to defend them. All this occurred in the winter of 1880-1. The Democratic House of Representatives was well known that Brady knew the nature of the secrets which Dorsey professed to be in possession of.

In the winter of 1880-1 Garfield was without the cooperation of the New York men; Arthur, on the other hand, with that co-operation, was at war with certain other influentials, and announced that he was "not to be coerced nor scared for necessity of making the battle" in Indiana in October. His correspondence with Garfield will show you that, and Garfield's reply to him will also show that the President-elect was in the same opinion. Garfield suggested, among other things, such as one to interest a certain influential man in Ohio, and ask the educational interests, Dorsey push-pointed there, and in plain terms said that the influence factor in Ohio would be necessary. In this view Gen. Brady, who knows intimately the politicians in Ohio, agreed. Garfield did not know in Ohio, agreed. Garfield was to be raised, Dorsey did, and he told Garfield so. Garfield knew the New York politicians, he said, but he did not know that there was these men. He he published diplomacy would in. The meeting must be a practical business meeting. There would be no resolutions, no speeches, and he felt positive the great association would be told him that the New York politicians were willing to give, but that they were thinkers and they would expect to receive. It must be a quid pro quo, and unless they could see no thing, no cause the New York men would not be easily moved. Garfield said that he had seen the Dorsey-Star meeting, and it was his opinion that he would meet certain Indiana men, and stalwarts in Minnesota, who would take him in the plainest terms that he must come to New York, that the New York men would not come after him, and that he must come to them. So Garfield at Dorsey's request, wrote to Arthur that a conference was arranged, thinking that it would be pleasant. Just as soon the city was emptied, and the Republican party was fallen, Garfield who was so well prepared for the contest, and who was so well prepared for the contest, and who was so well prepared for the contest, and

Around the County.

News Brevities.

It is conceded that H. W. Beach, of Banks, has one of the most promising fruit farms in the Grand Traverse region. He has 600 trees, now beginning to bear considerably and which, in a few years, will constitute as profitable a property as a silver mine. Mr. Beach has a fine farm which he has made by seventeen years hard work, and he deserves success.—[Sentinel.

A late number of the Cassopolis Democrat has the following concerning the naming of certain counties in this vicinity: "Mr. Turner's letter last week contained speculation on the naming of a group of five counties in this state, with Irish titles. We have been able to arrive at the facts in the case. Hon. Joseph Patterson, now a venerable resident of Jefferson township in this county, was a member of the legislature in 1839, being a representative from Lenawee county. The state was surveyed into counties, and to each member was awarded the privilege of naming five. The five falling to him with fond recollections of his native isle, were named from Irish counties, one, Antrim, the county he was born in, and the others, Wexford, Roscommon, Emmet and Clare."

From South Arm.

Hay is a splendid crop. All crops look well.

Mr. J. Close has a mowing machine, and has cut grass for several in this town.

Corn in this vicinity has been found five feet three inches high by actual measurement.

Bark-peeling continues to be a farmers stronghold when wet days do not admit of haying. This has been a very rainy season.

A young man of this township was taken into one of the whiskey dens and treated until he knew nothing, then asked questions concerning the finding of money, etc., belonging to an East Jordan merchant. He had found it, he said. They straight way locked him up. Contemptible business we call it. But the moral is plain.

We notice Mr. A. Burbanks is building a new farm house on the mail route.

A member of the East Jordan band, disliking to honor the Orangemen, took his instrument home without permission, which they found to be against the rules. He was therefore arrested, and paid $5.00 hush money before being released. He now enters into suit against them. The end is not yet.

Mr. and Mrs. Covert, of Bellaire, and Miss Nettie Hawks, formerly teacher in Charlevoix, were guests of Mr. and Mrs. James Thompson in Echo this week. Miss Nettie has began a two months term of school in the Bennett neighborhood.

The new law respecting the county paying the mill owners for fish-ladders put in, has placed H. C. Scofield rather on the triumphant side, and the township board are consequently cast down.

A young gentleman of Ironton is paying his addresses to one of the fair ones of Echo.

The Intermediate lake is a grand fishing ground for the tourists. No less than seven were seen in one day.

Through an oversight no chaplain was appointed on the East Jordan fourth of July programme, but during the services Rev. P. Blake was requested to act, and did so. His name was omitted from the report afterwards published. E. A. N.

Political Notes.

While it is plain, even to the casual observer, that the country is preparing for a change from the republican to democratic rule with the next administration, our leaders everywhere, in town, county and state, should not be so over confident of results, as to neglect the importance of thorough organization and united action.

Let them not lose sight of the fact that they have to deal with a party which has achieved success out of seemingly certain defeat by simply a magnificent display of generalship, —by perfect organization and the use of even the humblest means to further their ends.

Let divisions and personal animosities, wherever they may exist in the party, cease at once, and all true democrats work together, with a desire simply for the overthrow of the corrupt opposition.

Let there be no trading, no cringing, no coquetting with the enemy. Let the lines be distinctly drawn. Stick to your colors, and fight the good fight to the bitter end.—[Chippewa Democrat.

The Eagle evidently is in no sympathy with the disposition manifested by the great proportion of the republican press to make a scapegoat of Dorsey. It says: "The Chicago Tribune says of Dorsey that the stalwarts fastened this wretch upon Garfield.' How is that? Dorsey was in 1880 the secretary of the republican national committee. As such officer he had a leading part of the campaign work to do. But was not the republican party stalwart? Was not Garfield stalwart? Did not the delegates in the Chicago convention vote themselves stalwarts, with only two or three exceptions, upon a resolution introduced by Mr. Conkling, declaring that they would be stalwart and support the nominee of that convention?" The Eagle is right. Dorsey was very big Indian in the republican wigwam. He managed the campaign and won the presidency for them, and by means of the questionable methods which the chief party leaders then endorsed but which now they repudiate. The Eagle evidently feels that it is base ingratitude to "go back on" Dorsey.—[Grand Rapids Democrat.

The Coldwater Republican is somewhat severe in its criticisms upon its party in Michigan for extravagance as developed at the recent session of the legislature, and takes the position that unless reform and economy is inaugurated the people will repudiate it as the polls. The following is an extract from an editorial in a recent issue of the Republican: "How is it in the state? Our last legislature has not made a very good record. The appropriations were about $400,000 greater than in 1881. This will be noticed by the people and the republican party must stand it even though individuals in the party may have done all they could to stem the tide. More than that, some little schemes, like the Michigan military academy bill, were endorsed by the republican members on the committee, while the opposition came from democrats. The senatorial question was not satisfactorily settled, although we believe there is a disposition to give the new incumbent a fair trial. The opposition to him comes largely from the strong temperance element in the party which does not believe in the social customs of the large cities. This is a powerful element in the rural sections where the total abstinence sentiment is the strongest and most out-spoken."—[Cassopolis Democrat.

The New York Sun, in support of the right of parties damaged by telegraph delays to recover of the companies, cites the opinion of Judge Davis of New York in a similar railroad case; as follows:

Upon the question whether railroad corporations can refuse or neglect to perform their public duties upon a controversy with their employes over the cost or expense of doing their duty, the opinion said: "We think this question admits of but one answer. The excuse has in law no validity. The duties imposed must be discharged at whatever cost. They cannot be laid down or abandoned or suspended without the legal consent of the state. The trusts are active, potential and imperative, and must be executed until lawfully surrendered; otherwise a public highway or great utility is closed or obstructed without any process recognized in law."

The court decided that a railway company may be obliged to exercise its duty as a carrier of freight and passengers, and that demand of the freight handlers for increased wages did not justify the railroad companies in neglecting to perform their functions; that a railroad corporation cannot refuse to perform its functions because of a controversy with its employes over the expense of performing them.

Reduced Postage.

A circular was issued July 18, from the office of the third assistant postmaster-general officially notifying postmasters throughout the United States of the reduction in the postage rates to take effect October 1, and directing them to make preparations for it. Postmasters are notified that it is desirable to have as small a stock of the present three-cent postage stamps and stamped envelopes as possible on hand when the reduction in rates goes into effect, and they are accordingly directed to limit their requisitions for stamps and envelopes of this denomination to such quantities as upon a careful estimate they may deem sufficient to last until October 1. They are also instructed to take all available means, without incurring any expense, to call public attention to the coming reductions, so purchasers may not accumulate an unnecessary supply of three-cent stamps and envelopes.

The circular also directs that as no arrangements have yet been made for the redemption of the three-cent stamps and envelopes in the hands of postmasters, or for exchange by postmasters of these stamps and envelopes in the hands of private holders, until further notice postmasters will not make exchanges for the public nor return to the department the stock that remains on their hands after October 1. Postmasters are, however, notified that as the two and three-cent stamps and envelopes of the present issue will continue to be valid after that date, they must be accepted in payment of postage when offered in proper amounts; and that three-cent stamps can be used in combination with other denominations on letters requiring more than one rate of postage, and on parcels of third and fourth class matter.

The circular announces that the department will be ready to issue two-cent stamps of the new design September 15, but that these stamps and envelopes must not be placed on sale or used by postmasters before October 1; also, that no three-cent stamps will be issued after September 14, unless the requisition therefor is accompanied by the statement that they are needed for immediate use, and that the full supply called for will become exhausted by October 1; and further, that no three-cent stamped envelopes will be issued after August 31, unless a requisition for them is accompanied by a similar statement.

The circular further instructs postmasters as to the design for the new two-cent and four-cent stamps and stamped envelopes, and notifies them that the prices of envelopes (exclusive of postage) will remain the same as at present; that no change will be made in "postage due" stamps, and that rates on drop letters will remain the same as at present.

On the Model Farm, Ontario.

The province pays $80,000 a year to maintain a school for the practical education of farmers. This institution turns out annually from 200 to 300 well disciplined and splendidly equipped men to take charge of the most important, healthy and altogether honorable pursuit on earth. We in the states are accustomed to think if a man is fit for nothing else he can settle down on a farm and get on. We have made the farm the last refuge of the tramp. They here are making the farm the first place for the true gentleman. And this is right. We must have one of these institutions in every state of our Union, a dozen if necessary, to dignify and make easy and intelligent the office of the farmer. The trade of war is out of date, the lawyer's office is of doubtful calling, for what does it give to the world in return for his bread? The doctor's place is hardly desirable for a refined nature; but the Canadians have decided that the farmers hold the world on their shoulders and are standing truly by them. They have altogether in the dominion more than eighty associations devoted to the culture and development of stock and grain. This province of Quebec has an institution not widely unlike that of Guelph, Ont., only on a much smaller scale. I did not visit this, but am told that it is conducted entirely by a lady. The province pays $5,000 bounty toward its maintenance. As against them we have only little to show except the school in Michigan. Yet it is true that we have many institutions that profess farming. But I fear that they do not practice it as at this model farm. Of course I cannot enter into detail or attempt to digest the big book making up their annual report on this place. But I may say as a cardinal idea they seek to be solidly practical; severely so; to keep the feet of the students set down firmly on the hard earth. They ignore Greek and all such nonsense. Yet no ignoramus is admitted here by a great deal. Each applicant must be at least 16 years old, must be of sound morals and good health and pass a severe matriculation examination if not a graduate of the many high schools in the country.—[Joaquin Miller.

The Western Union's Watered Stock.

Since its establishment the company (the Western Union) has issued, for the purchase of the Pacific telegraph company's franchises, stock to the amount of $1,679,260; for the United States company, $7,246,800; for the American company, $11,839,100; for the American Union company, $15,200,000; for the Atlantic & Pacific, $8,400,000, and in its recent transactions, for which the courts are trying to call it to account, $15,500,000. Of these $58,000,000, more or less, not more than $12,000,000 represented actual investment, and it is probable that of its present $80,000,000 of nominal capital fully two-thirds, and certainly more than one-half, represents nothing but water. By this construction most favorable to the company, the granting of all demands of its employes would not reduce its capacity, without advancing rates, to divide at least ten per cent upon every dollar actually invested. Probably fifteen per cent would be much nearer the true figures. That a company thus managed should inflict heedless injury on the business of the country in order to keep its employes in absolute servitude to its arbitrary dictation is simply monstrous, and the unchecked perpetration of such an outrage is a serious strain upon the justice of the government under which we live.—[New York Sun.

OUR COUNTRY.

By John G. Whittier. Read at Rosebank Park, Woodstock, Conn., July 4, 1883.

We give thy natal day to hope,
A country of our love and prayer,
Thy way is down no fatal slope,
But up to freer sun and air!

Tried as by furnace-fires, and yet
By God's grace only strongest made,
To meet the new tasks before thee set
Thine shall not lack the old time aid.

The fathers slept; but men remain
As wise, as true and brave as they.
We have the love and not the gain
The zeal is that we have lost by.

Whatever of folly, shame and crime
Within thy mighty bounds transpires,
With speed defying space and time
Flows to us on the messaging wires;

Wake of thy wealth of noble deeds,
Thy homes of plenty and peace assured,
The free train pleads for human needs,
The wrong redressed, but half is done!

Early your wretch, in his prison cell
Dreaming of freedom, is interviewed;
We know the single-minded well
And not the mine and shrewd pseud.

Yet, if on daily scandals fed,
We seem at times to doubt the worth,
We know the still, when all is said,
The best and dearest speak our truth.

From the warm Mexic gulf, or where,
Before the Pacific, Los Angeles
Basks in the sunshine, she
To where Kentucky's cedar trees

Are dwarfed and bent by northern winds,
Thy people's hearts is yearly filled
Anew, the reunion century finds
Thy liberal soil by free hands tilled.

A refuge for the wronged and poor,
Thy generous heart has borne the blame
Thine ears have heard through the even hour,
The cry of wrong and shame.

But, with thy just and equal rule,
And labor's need and breadth of lands,
Free press and platform, church and school,
Thy sure, if slow, transforming hands

Shall smite even them in the big design,
Making a blessing of the curse of war,
And Freedom's chemistry combine
The alien elements of ours.

The power that broke their prison bar
Shall not be used to bind our own,
And whatever else befall of war
The Union fast to Liberty.

Shall it not deal with other ills,
Redress wrong and man's grievance, break
The Circean cup which shames and kills,
And labor full equitable make?

Alone to such as fully bear
The duty imposed by God's law fall
And self thy daughters, lovely because
The rights and duties pledged to all?

No lack was in thy primal stock
Nor working foundation builded here;
Thine were the sons of Puritan rock,
The Huguenot and Cavalier.

And they whose firm endurance gained
The freedom of the souls of men,
Who, Israel-like, with God's law sustained,
The wilderness commonwealth of Penn.

And Bible shall be the power of all
To do the work which duty bids,
And teach the people's sons if I may
As lasting as the Pyramids!

Well have thy love our souls made good
Thy brave and wise counsels back,
The pledge of human brotherhood
The equal claim of white and black.

That weal still echoes round the world,
And all who hear it turn to face,
And read upon the flag unfurled
The prophecies of destiny.

The great world knows all shall learn,
The nations in thy school shall sit,
Earth's farthest mountain-tops shall burn
With watch-fires from thy town spirit.

Great without seeking to be great
By fraud or conquest, rich in gold,
But richer in the large estate
Of virtue which thy children hold,

With peace that comes of purity,
And strength in simple justice due,
Secure as the foundation of thee,
God of our fathers!—make it true!

O Land of hands! to thee we give
Our prayers, our pledges, our service free;
For thee the sons shall unlay thee,
And at thy need shall die for thee!

A Good Argument for Free Trade.

Discussing the depression in the iron and wooden industries, occasioned by the over-production, for which protection with its stimulus, is responsible, the New York Herald says: "What, then, is the remedy? Obviously the opening of new markets for the surplus which cannot be consumed here. Almost at our own doors exist markets which our own folly and stupidity have prevented us from monopolizing; and, already large, they stand prepared to take surplus cotton, woolen and glass manufactures, our iron and steel, raw and wrought, our leather and paper. A possible market of $250,000,000 exists in South America, but at present we only occupy one-tenth part of it. The West Indies import more than $115,000,000, but they take only $31,000,000 from this country. Canada obtains only one-third of what she wants from us, and the same proportion holds in Mexico and the central American states. On this continent, then, in the aggregate lies open to us a market for our manufactures of at least $500,000,000. In no instance, save perhaps in that of Canada, are any of the nations included in this survey manufacturing nations, and therefore they would not compete with our domestic industries. They will take our manufactured products if we will only take from them their raw materials. This our tariff forbids. We refuse the cheap raw materials which would enable us, through low cost of production, to monopolize these markets, and we make no attempt to secure that extension of the sale of our commodities which would enable our manufacturers to run to their fullest capacity the year around. Was ever a commercial policy more narrow or suicidal?"—[Chippewa Democrat.

The Rights in the Case.

It is absurd for the monopolists to talk of the "Operator's Brotherhood" as an anti-social conspiracy meancing the rights of the public. It is simply a combination of employes against a powerful employer, who they think, has treated them unjustly and who, they are quite certain, will not listen to them unless they speak in a fashion to compel attention. They ought to have gone "in person" and have talked the matter over, ridiculously say the critics of the strikers. This is preposterous and it is of itself proof that the champions and mouthpieces of monopoly are not disposed to treat the question seriously. How could 10,000 men, or any number of men, unless they were a few representatives of the 10,000, negotiate, consult or discuss with a half a dozen directors in New York? Had these representatives approached the Western Union magnates they would have been repelled, because they could not have presented any stronger claims or credentials than the executive committee of the brotherhood had to show. It was pure arrogance and impudence for the directors of the Western Union to pretend that they had no proof that the committee represented the operators. The president of the United States might as well demand that the English minister to this country should bring some proof, outside of his credentials, that the English people chose him to represent their interests. It would be an insult to the English people, just as the reply of the directors was an insult to the operators.

The monopolists complain that the operators are trying to dictate terms to their employers. But the employers have been for many years dictating terms to the operators. The operators have just as much right to say what they must work for. The sole question is as to the manner in which the demand is made. If they be orderly and law-abiding, the right of any number of persons to make reasonable demands is universally conceded. If the case of telegraphers, railroad employes, gas company employes, or any other combination on who se labor the daily necessities of the people closely depend, they must be perfectly sure that their demands are reasonable. Otherwise, they will have no public sentiment back of them, and are the more likely to fail.

It is the pride rather than the good sense of the Western Union company that has prevented their recognizing the brotherhood. The brotherhood has just as much right to have its existence acknowledged as the corporations which sell the company its wires and its telegraph stock. It has as much right to advance the price of labor upon Mr. Jay Gould and his fellow directors as the iron and steel men have to advance the price of wire. It is no more humiliating or unbecoming to recognize the existence of the brotherhood which undertakes to control its labor market than it is to recognize the existence of other combinations that have products to sell. The price may be rejected in either case, but in one case the Western Union treats the combination on common sense, business-like principles; in the other with childish folly and flouting. The puerile and arrogant refusal of the company to acknowledge the existence of a well-disciplined body of men demanding a higher price for their labor had much to do with the trouble. Even if after a conference the company had refused, as steadily as it does now, to concede the demands of the brotherhood, the feeling on both sides, and on the part of the public, would have been different. The "fight" would not have been as bitter nor the company so generally hated.—[Detroit Free Press.

What brave, fine business some of these Washington officials are engaged in! It makes an American proud of his country when he sees what lofty flights of statesmanship, what splendid schemes of patriotism, what noble ambitions, are developed and encouraged by the great minds who carry on and control "this grandest government the sun shines on!" Lest peradventure there should be one clerkship vacant which might be filled under the rules of the civil service examination, the officials of the bureau actually buildozed a young lady in the redemption agency of the treasury department, who had asked for the usual thirty days leave of absence which is granted to all female clerks about to be married; her resignation in fact to be sent in and accepted thirty days after her actual departure. And so, in order to snatch every scrubby little place for some scrubby little politician, did not the great treasury department of the United States of America actually insist in that girl's antedating her resignation so as to create a vacancy that was demanded, and when she refused, threatened to dismiss her in disgrace, and without her pay unless she complied? To avoid this disgrace she consented, and so another clerk who would not, or could not, pass the examination was insisted in before the date assigned for bringing that sort of a thing to a stop. Nice business for an administration, is it not? Before flying to Colorado, President Arthur might well afford to sit down hard on any complicity of such contemptible business. If such pettiness can be transacted it is well worth even a president's time to bring it to a well-deserved end.—[Free Press.

A recent visitor to the Lansing house found in the bureau of his room two interesting souvenirs of the last republican state convention. One was a delegate's ticket to the convention and the other an empty eight-ounce vial labeled "bourbon whisky." The occupant of that particular room must have been a light and solitary drinker. For the average republican delegate an eight-ounce vial of whisky would be a mere "tantalizer."

THE EAST.

The body of Capt. Webb was found floating in the river near Lewiston, N. Y. There was a cut on his head, evidently done by a rock at the entrance to the whirlpool, which was in itself sufficient to have caused his death. The remains were shipped to Boston, where Mrs. Webb resides. Capt. Webb's brother, Oscar Pinsdorf, formerly Minister to Washington, died suddenly from disease of the heart in his room at the Albermarle Hotel, New York. Financial troubles are the terrible act. Henry Harris was appointed American Minister in 1881. Several eleemosynaries in the region of the headwaters of the Allegheny river produced a sudden rise in the stream that proved more disastrous than any flood since 1861. Thousands of boards and timber were swept adrift down the Ohio, causing a loss of fully $1,000,000.

They were caught red-handed, and on Monday were tried, convicted and sentenced to two years each in State prison. Dwyer, the man robbed, was formerly a policeman.

THE Coroner's inquest on the body of Capt. Webb, who was lost in the Niagara whirlpool rapids, rendered a verdict of death from accidental causes, the decision being unable to agree whether death resulted from drowning or blow on the head or the force of the water in the rapids. The Coroner's jury thought best not to venture an opinion. Mrs. Webb, and Mr. and Mrs. Pinsdorf, mourned. There were no religious services. The burning of John H. A. Charles King's hide-mill, at Johnsonburg, Hilton county, N. Y., caused a loss of $40,000. John Walter's oilcloth factory, at Albany, N. Y., was partly consumed by fire. Loss, $25,000 insured.

TWO freight trains on the Troy and Boston road collided between Petersburg Junction and Pownal, Vt. Eight men were killed and a number injured. The collision was caused by the neglect of the telegraph operator at Petersburg Junction to convey orders to the train dispatcher. Of only the train men in his station, located at the factory at Danbury, Ct., was burned Friday morning. The loss is nearly $100,000. The future homeless of the Lancaster (Pa.) Mr. Mathews, commissioner of Statistics in Minnesota, reports an increase of 100,000 acres in wheat and predicts a crop of at least 32,000,000 bushels, as the yield in the southern counties will more than make up for drought in the Red River Valley.

PROF. ALBERT, of the University of Nebraska, states that the tuberosments on his notes were forged by a man named Vigenelam. The Professor claims to be the victim of suspicious circumstances, and promises to pay every dollar of the false paper.

SEIGNOR has the city of Chicago seen an assemblage of men more representative of the highest form of citizenship than the congregation which gathered to attend the funeral services of the Hon. Thomas Hoyne, who died late in a railroad accident in New York. Mr. Hoyne was one of the most honored citizens of Chicago, a distinguished lawyer, a man of wealth, and the most resolute, fearless, the love of truth and thirsting in everything. ....The 5d and Lumber Company's mill at Oneida, Mich., was destroyed by fire. The republicans of New Hampshire believing that there were no good fish in the sea, etc., landed a Pike for the senatorship.—[Free Press.

The telegraph strike is causing inverse damage to the country, and as the Western Union company is alone responsible for it, the property of that corporation ought to be confiscated to make good the damage.—[Independent.

For some unreasonable reason our democratic exchanges are slow to come in, while on the other hand our republican neighbors are generous, and sometimes even lavish with their advice not to follow in what they deem "sinful ways." If it is because we gave an extra edge to our shears, why we will throw them aside and borrow a knife to sharpen our little stub of a pencil and write into "them republican fellars."

Austin F. Pike, who has just been elected Rollins' successor in the senate from New Hampshire, was indebted for his election to the determination of some of the supporters of Rollins not to vote for any one who was unfriendly to him, and to the mutual jealousy of the small men who are at the front in New Hampshire republican politics. Pike is an old man who has not taken any active part in politics for some years, though he has been a member and presiding officer of both houses of the legislature, chairman of the republican state committee, and a member of congress for one term.—[Free Press.

The Chicago Inter Ocean evidently understands the art of conducting a tariff discussion on the basis of sound reasoning and the facts. It is a pleasure to meet an adversary capable of stating so frankly as it does—in reply to a free trade champion in the Christian Union—the doctrines of protection and the position of an antagonist. It says: "The puny puppies of the Christian Union, being still in their first nine days of economic blindness, and knowing not the circumcision from the uncircumcision as respects economy or religion, undertake by their milk-fed yelp to define what is 'individualism.'"—[Free Press.

The effect, on summer travel in this section of the country, of opening the resorts in the extreme north of this peninsula continues to be more manifest season by season. The tendency to go to the seashore, where the chances of the random traveler are strongly in favor of exorbitant prices or unpleasant accommodations, has about disappeared before the manifold advantages of comfort in one's own camp, prices practically warranted to suit, and a luxurious and life giving atmosphere, the attractions of southern Michigan. Comfort is the universal desire in the heated term and it seems to be most nearly attained in the summering places of our own state.—[Kalamazoo Telegraph.

In a brief harangue before the associated press the sage of the Chicago Tribune urged as an argument in favor of a government telegraph that there would be no strikes in that case. We are by no means sure of that. The postoffice furnishes no analogy for a postal telegraph system. In the former a close combination of all the employes in the country is impracticable, and would be of little use if made. The labor is largely skilled; but the skill is mainly such as comes from long practice. While it would be difficult to replace upon short notice the practiced distributors and other trained employes in an office like New York or Detroit, for instance, the most of the work is such as can be done in some fashion by green hands. If everyone of the skilled employes were to strike the work would be much delayed; but it would not of necessity be suspended. In the telegraph business it is different. The employes in a government telegraph could combine as perfectly as those in the Western Union employ did; and if they should all strike they would put the offices and wires and service in a condition where green hands would be of no avail. The man who has had no experience in telegraphy would be utterly useless in such an emergency, while in a similar emergency in the mail service a great deal of work could be got out of men who never went into a postoffice except to mail a letter or get one. As for the improbability that any body of government servants would strike, it should be remembered that the printers in the government office at Washington have struck more than once. Given the practicability of enforcing by a strike demands deemed reasonable, and government employes are as likely to resort to it as the employes of private corporations or individuals.—[Free Press.

As Others See Us.

Here's a model in "fine writing" which we advise our contemporary to "read, reflect, and inwardly digest." It is the "salutatory" of the new Charlevoix JOURNAL, and is a daisy. [Cheboygan Democrat.

The Charlevoix JOURNAL is the name of the new democratic paper established at Charlevoix by Chas. J. Strang, for a long time a skillful compositor in the state printing office. It is a lively, newsy, well-printed fifteen column quarto, and notwithstanding the abominable politics of the sheet we sincerely hope that its able and genial manager will reap a good fortune from his venture.—[Lansing Republican.

How the Republicans carried Indiana.

In a recent number of the Grand Rapids Democrat is reproduced a very suggestive letter which originally appeared in the Indianapolis Journal, the leading republican paper in Indiana. It was written by S. E. Connor, chairman of the republican central committee of Newton county, Indiana, and settles the question as to the lively use of money by Dorsey in that state:

"Since a few republicans have entered the arena," Mr. Connor says, "to disrupt the republican party and give aid and comfort to the enemy, I propose to have them cease taking filibuster treatment and swallow heroic doses. To this end I invite the reader's attention to the secret history of the doings of the republican party of Indiana during the last political campaign. Being chairman of the republican county central committee, I was invited to their inner council at Indianapolis and witnessed the 'expediting' process, by which process the republicans captured the state. I conversed freely with John C. New, his secretary, and all his clerks, and then met Joe Gray, the lieutenant of senator Dorsey. After returning from Gray how valuable tickets were voted and counted, and being fully instructed, I was ushered into the presence of senator Dorsey, who was secretary of the national republican committee. I was presided to Dorsey by John C. New, the chairman of the republican central committee, and after being introduced Mr. New withdrew and left me. Senator Dorsey had his bankers in an adjoining room, upon whom he drew to furnish the money with which to corrupt and carry the election in Indiana. Senator Dorsey demanded of me 600 majority in Newton county. I told him we could not give it. He then said he would give me the money to help us, and that being on the Illinois line we could volunteer from Illinois and make the 600 majority. I told him frankly that I was not zealous enough in the cause to engage in such disreputable business. As natural, he seemed greatly incensed, and dismissed me from his august presence with a promise to see me later. I met him again at an appointed hour, and he gave Joe Gray a piece of paper and waved us from the room. I was led into an adjoining room by Joe Gray (all this was in the new Denison hotel at Indianapolis), and there I met an old gray headed man and a middle-aged man. Joe Gray gave them the paper he had received from Dorsey, when the bankers retired to an adjoining room and returned in a few minutes with a package of bills just printed for the business of carrying Indiana. I was informed that my share, being small I must be content with half a thousand. I learned that larger counties received from 1,000 to 5,000 of these new $1 and $2 bills just printed to carry Indiana for Porter and Garfield. I then met United States marshall Dudley and received many encouraging words from him. I felt that the star route bull all been 'expedited,' and that Garfield meet to reward Gray. John C. New did the work, and his influence at Washington brought the money, but the political ring gave all the credit to Dorsey for carrying the state. Poor New was forced to silence, and Garfield refused to give him an office. Garfield rewarded Gray just as Hayes rewarded the Louisiana scoundrels who counted him in, but John C. New was crushed to silence, and Dorsey walked off with the honor of having carried Indiana. Where the money came from I cannot tell. It was printed by Uncle Sam's presses, and may be it is the star route fund. Let Brady and John Sherman answer this. Every speaker brought to Indiana had his pockets stuffed full and then sent out to work. Every county had a generous supply. It was new and just from the press, and somebody furnished it to every Indiana, and it did carry Indiana for the republicans."

A Great Day at Bay View.

From the Daily Resorter.

THE DAY.

Better weather for the principal day of camp meeting could not have been had if made to order. The sun shone brightly and it was just warm enough to be pleasant, a fresh lake breeze blowing to cool and temper the country couples who flock to camp meeting on the big Sundays as they go to a circus or fourth of July celebration.

Petoskey and Bay View were crowded all day. A great many came in from the country, four hundred went over the Harbor Springs road, the morning train came in with every coach loaded, and more than five hundred more came in on boats. It is probable that not far from fifteen hundred people came from outside points to Bay View yesterday, which with six or seven hundred on the grounds and that many more from Petoskey made a large crowd, the largest, it is said, ever in attendance.

The Factors brought in seventy five passengers, the Grand Rapids brought over two hundred from Traverse City and other points, and the Clara Belle and the Wright each brought down about a hundred from Traverse City, East Jordan and Charlevoix. The trains ran constantly all day and

THE SERVICES.

The morning service was conducted by Rev. Mr. Payne, of Ohio, who preached an eloquent sermon to a large and appreciative audience in the grove.

Before the hour for the opening of the afternoon service the seats in front of the speaker's stand were all taken, and many more were obliged to stand up. These services in God's own temple, the grand aisles of which are unsurpassed by the best ever listened to at Bay View. The services began at half past two by a splendidly rendered quartette, "The Lord is my Shepherd." After various announcements the congregation joined in singing "Trusting in Jesus," which was followed by the reading of the 23d psalm. After an impressive prayer by Rev. Mr. Shier the grand old hymn "Rock of Ages" was thrillingly rendered.

Rev. Mr. Fisk, president of Allison college, then delivered the principal sermon of camp meeting week, taking his text from Mark, 12th chapter, 26th and 27th verses. The sermon was a masterly and logical piece of composition, and the eloquent manner of its delivery fastened the attention of the congregation.

The afternoon service closed with singing "Come to Jesus," and Rev. Mr. Shier pronounced the benediction.

At half past four o'clock a prayer and praise meeting was held in the chapel, and at the same time a children's meeting was held in Jordan's tent.

Rev. Dr. Joy, of Grand Rapids, preached in the evening, in the crowded chapel, from the text "What think ye of Christ, whose son is he?" This, too, was a profound and scholary effort, and fittingly closed the most successful camp meeting ever held at Bay View.

The Clarville and Clara Belle are to be chartered if possible.

We have received the August number of the Northwest Farmer, published by D. C. Leach, at Traverse City. It is devoted to the agricultural interests of northern Michigan, and we shall probably have occasion to make extracts from its columns from time to time which to the best testimonial we can give of its value. It is worthy a good support from the farmers of this region.

The Truesdell lay on the bar at the mouth of the channel one hour or more last Sunday, having struck while trying to make her way around the wreck of the Lawrence. The Lawrence and Champlain both passed over the bar along side of the Truesdell, the Lawrence experiencing very little difficulty in getting over. The Truesdell passed up while the other two were unloading, which left plenty of room for them to get out.

"The Chicago & West Michigan railroad company calls for sealed proposals for building the extension of that road from Crooked lake, Newaygo county, to Baldwin, Lake county, 19½ miles. This is another step on its way to Traverse City."—[Grand Traverse Herald. Let the good work continue and not stop until the "miles" of Charlevoix county have been penetrated, and Charlevoix village connected by rail with the outside world.

It having been reported that Mr. Taylor, of the Bridge Street house, is to retire from the management of that hotel on Oct. 1st, Mr. N. Wills, at present clerk of the Fountain City, at once made an effort to get its management. If he succeeds, the traveling public may depend on finding a house well run, and devoted to their comfort, as he thoroughly understands the business, and will make lively competition for the other hotels in this vicinity.

The card of Mr. John Nicholls will be found in another column. He employs twenty to twenty-five men in and about his saw mill, and is pushing the lumber business to its fullest. His interests, however, are not confined to Charlevoix, as he has valuable property in other portions of the county, the management of which fully occupies his time. A dozen other men like him would soon double the population and business of Charlevoix county by bringing to our county active and enterprising mechanics and workmen.

Nine chairman of township boards of school inspectors were present at the monthly meeting held this week. Mr. Wm. Harris, of Norwood, presided over their deliberations. Matters of general interest to schools were discussed. The wisdom of qualifications established for teachers of the first grade was 65 min. 85 subs., of second grade 50 min., 80 subs., of third grade, 50 min., 70 subs. A. E. Upright presided over the section as examiner. The names of E. L. Corbet and A. W. Chew were presented, the former receiving five votes, the latter four.

"The Veteran" is the title of a six-page, well-printed semi-monthly magazine, just started at Lansing, Mich., under the management of G. A. R., department of Michigan, devoted to the interests of the boys of '61 to '65, and their helpers. The name of W. L. Smith, for a number of years deputy superintendent of public instruction, appears as editor, which is a sufficient guarantee that the work will be well done. Its motto is "fraternity, charity, loyalty." Subscription price, 81.00 per year, within the reach of every old soldier. In the marine news of a city daily we find the following concerning Sabbath breaking and its punishments in Canada. Perhaps a little more rigorous enforcement of law would work to advantage here in Michigan, but there are times when it would also work to great disadvantage and loss: "The tug Active and support in the hurry to get to Toledo received permission to pass through the Welland canal Sunday. Some of the men refused to work. The captains of the tug was fined for Sabbath breaking. At Port Colborne he was summoned before the magistrate and fined $10 and costs. At Thorold he was taken before a magistrate, and producers papers showing that he had been previously convicted. The case was then dismissed, but defendant was told he was very fortunate in having previously been fined, as the fine which would have been inflicted at Thorold would have effectually checked Sabbath desecration. Two boatsteamers were fined for helping the tug through."

The Gale, the Wreck, Etc.

The schooner B. Parsons, which was wrecked on the north pier some two weeks ago, went to pieces during the gale last Thursday, and now lies a total wreck between the two piers at the mouth of the channel. Great excitement prevailed a short time after, as another schooner was making the port, and for a few minutes it seemed as if she, too, would strike the wreck and be dashed to pieces on the bar. Navigation into this port was effectually closed until the wind went down.

On account of the gale neither the Grand Rapids nor the Paxton could stop and the Paxton could not land at Petoskey, but was sent to get into harbor at Harbor Springs.

On Friday morning the wind had gone down, so that the Sea Gem and Hercules, which had rode outside could come in, and other small craft also passed in and out.

Sunday morning, in trying to enter the channel south of the wreck, the steam barge Truesdell, with a cargo of iron ore, got on the bar, and was unable to get off until about four o'clock in the afternoon. While she was still on the bar, the propeller Champlain came in and ran on the same bar. She super cured no great difficulty in getting in, and was just entering the river when the Lawrence came in. She, too, took a short rest on the sand pile by the side of the Truesdell, but only for a little while.

In leaving the harbor the Champlain tried to make the channel ahead of the schooner Hope, in tow of tug Higgie, when the gib boom of the vessel torn several feet of the after railing from the stern of the Champlain, and one of her fender ropes caught in the rigging of the schooner and broke several of her ropes. Immediately afterward the Lawrence came up and attempted to cut in between the tug Higgie and tow and the dock, and at one time it looked as though she would certainly run through either the Higgie or her tow.

The steamer Wright, on returning from her excursion to Bay View, ran into the bow sprit of the schooner Hercules, and broke off her flag staff. The tug Bob Stevenson pulled out her timber head while assisting the Truesdell over the bar.

Institute Notes and Jottings.

Prof. Olney presided over the institute.

Monday forenoon, at the time appointed, only one teacher was at the school house.

At 2 p. m. of the same day the organization was perfected, with 41 teachers present.

Program for Monday afternoon: Elementary somats, by J. B. Crombie; imaginge lessons, by Mrs. Williams.

All of the teachers enjoyed the social on Monday evening very much.

Major E. H. Green was very busy Monday in caring for the teachers and securing places for them; he is deserving of great credit for his efforts in promoting their welfare.

Tuesday: Elementary lessons, by Mrs. Williams; geography and civil government, by J. B. Crombie; U. S. history, by Mrs. Williams.

Prof. Olney, of Ann Arbor, was present Tuesday morning, and made some interesting remarks on geography and arithmetic.

The teachers were out in force on Tuesday evening to attend Prof. Crombie's lecture on "our public schools." It was bristling with good points, and a vein of humor, which all seemed to appreciate, prevaild throughout the entire lecture.

Wednesday morning found fifty-five teachers enrolled. This is the largest number that ever attended any institute in the county.

Program for Wednesday morning: Language lesson, by Mrs. Williams; geography and primary reading, by J. B. Crombie; U. S. history, by Mrs. Williams.

Prof. Ewing arrived on the Clara Belle and was in attendance Wednesday afternoon, addressing the teachers with a few pleasant remarks before commencing his work.

Program for Wednesday afternoon: Elementary somats, by J. B. Crombie; arithmetic, by J. W. Ewing; civil government, by J. B. Crombie; U. S. history, by J. W. Ewing.

An interested and appreciative audience listened to the lecture of Prof. J. W. Ewing Wednesday evening, on school government. Among the many interesting topics discussed, the following are the most striking: Children should be taught to respect age; the individual rights of pupils was brought forward in an interesting manner; the bad habits of teachers; the use of slang phrases, and their effect upon the children, was ably handled; the best point was in regard to the relations of parents to teachers.

LINES TO HER MEMORY, WRITTEN BY HER BROTHER.

Little Katie is not dead, but sleeping. Short was her time here; long is her sleep. The angel came, tarried, gone to dwell with the "angels" above. No sighs or tears can recall her, for the blood of the Saviour has cleansed. How we miss the looks of early hair, the dimpled cheeks, and little Katie's voice ringing from the tidy bed. The angels, and we cannot follow. Sore to join them in a strangeness for girl whom she loved and caressed, and the nights are full of anguish, and tears, and thoughts unrestrained,—full of hopes, and of fear.

Good night, little babe, and take thy rest; God called thee home,—he thought it best."

THE GALLANT COWBOY.

Oh, it was a gallant cowboy
Who had strayed from home
On the mother's expenses
Of a long and gentle one,
And to be a bold road-agent,
As he hooked road-agents are.

He'd a second-hand revolver
And a six-inch jack-knife, too,
And he sent the responsible
Yell a fiend with looks jabbed through,
And he hooked everything
Hooks did him—that to do.

Then he made a call of business
On a neighbor's ranch,
And observed, "My gentle partner,
I'll relieve you of your load;
So elevate your digits,
Or I'll be obliged to shoot."

He arose with his assistant
That simple handicraft,
And impeded the gallant cowboy
In a painful hundred ways,
And he accepted the situation
Like a gentleman of spurs.

THREE-FINGERED JACK.

On the Saturday of a certain Houghton meeting, in a year not far removed from the present period of grace, a party of somewhat discernible spirits were gathered around my, I trust, not indisputable hearth. It had been a disastrous week. Fortune had, from the beginning to the end, steadily set her face against that portion of the racing community which sporting writers delight—I presume in irony—to call by the "fancy" and, though I had sought to beguile them of their melancholy with sixth drinks as the establishment of a bachelor, whose means were limited and whose credit had seen better days, could at a short notice provide, the hearts of my guests were still heavy. When the dinner had come to an end—and I must say that misfortune did not appear to have materially affected their appetites—the various proposals were submitted for the lighting of the hours that had still to be got rid of before custom, or fashion, would permit of the universal retiring to bed. Bad as our luck and tobacco were, fell to be present pleasures which no wise man—and in throw my friends were among the wisest of their kind—would be willing to exchange, while chance could be deferred, for the uncertainties of the future. A deal our was therefore turned to the element appeals of the youngest of the company in favor of a new-star, lately arisen in the murky firmament of the music hall—a young person liberally gifted alike in lung and limb, who was then nightly delighting the intellect of our gilded youth with a ballad of abnormal dullness and impropriety. Cards, too, had been interdicted on the rational grounds that, with the prospect of a "black Monday" already imminent, to woo still further the pernicious caprice of fortune would be but the vainest invention of the most foolish mind.

But though cards, as a pastime, were prohibited, they were found to furnish an agreeable and salutary subject of conversation. For some little time we discussed each other's various habits of our triumphs and reverses, with marvellous histories of fortunes that should have been and might have been lost, of unlucky that would have become a D'Orsay-tagram, or impossibilities that would not have disgraced an Atlas.

It was in one of the pauses of this intellectual talk that a youth, familiarly known in society of greater or less politeness as Tommy—the same who had pleaded the cause of the music hall—was observed to be in labor of an idea. The process was watched with some curiosity, as one with which familiarity had not yet lost contempt. Since the rejection of his original proposition he had, in the meantime, maintained an unbroken silence, which might, however, have been detected as much by petulance as labor-pains. At last he spoke.

His conversation has been particularly entertaining and instructive to me of my small experience and limited intelligence; and I'll tell you what I'll do—return, if you'll let me. I will tell you a story. I don't know that it will prove very amusing; but I do know it to be true. It won't be very long, I think; but if so, I dare say one of you will be so obliging as to tell me when you've had enough."

Crossing his legs in our unalterable determination to abide by this generous proposal, we settled ourselves to our tobacco, and our friend began:

"The scene of my story is laid at Oxford, and the time toward the close of the first year of the not very arduous course of study I pursued at that distinguished seat of learning. I was still, according to undergraduate law, a freshman, but, of course, panting to be quit of that ignominious, if theoretical, state of bondage. We were rather a lively lot at St. Dunstan's in those days, and not, perhaps, over-sensitive. Cards were much in fashion among many other practices not included in the written law of a university education, and, though at that time I knew no more of cards than a hedgehog knows of the binomial theorem, I had, I fancy, some ridiculous idea that a constant attendance on the changes and chances of the game, apparently of the stakes were confined to shillings, would have the effect, in the eyes of my seniors, of prematurely effacing the brand of "freshness," from my youthful brow. At any rate, the college could boast no more ardent votary of that exhilarating, but variable, pastime than your humble servant. Nor was I in any way restrained by scruples of conscience arising from a promise given to a venerable uncle that I would engage in no games of chance when money was in the board; the said promise having been given under pressure of a mortal sickness, and, I believe, from the fertile sources of his imagination, and not, as he then asserted, from his own experience of the Cocoa Tree and Brookes's. For my father, he contented himself with asking, not extorting, a promise to the effect that any losses I might incur in my pursuit of the blind goddess would have to be made good, not out of his pocket, but my own. A statement which impressed me greatly at the time, but to which subsequent reflection induced me to attribute more sting, than sense, for reasons which, in mature consideration, would probably have commended themselves no less forcibly to my parent.

"There was at that time perpetually to be seen about Oxford a fellow known to the general public as "Three-fingered Jack," by which name alone he shall, for reasons which will shortly be all-sufficient, figure in my story; and indeed, there was more justification for it than for most of the terms of endearment, or otherwise, which the undergraduate who delighted to coin. For the gentleman's right hand was adorned with no more than three fingers, though how he became shorn of his proper complement, or whether, like Topsy, he "growed so," I never knew. He had been a gown member of the university, though some time before I went up, but his stay had been neither long nor glorious, nor, for aught I know, I believe, earned very good opinions from any class of men. What original him, under the conditions, to Oxford, I neither knew nor cared to know. But there, as my name, he always was, referring about the times we delighted to honor, and exercising a sound ignorance with those who were careless what company they kept, or glad enough to get so.

"Coming, then, into the hall, one evening in November, I found the class of my last term of "freshmanship," I was astonished to see sitting at the senators' table, the chief, apparently of a party of the name of Russell, on a friend of three-fingered fame. I was astonished, I say, for the man was, as I have told you, of indifferent repute, and we of St. Dunstan's rather prided ourselves on our society. While I was discussing the strange phenomenon with my immediate neighbors, there came to me a scent with Mr. Russell's companions, and "Would I give him the pleasure of my company to wine?" My aristocratic assumptions failed straightway into thin air. Certainly I would. Mr. Russell was a great personage in the eyes of us freshmen. He was, indeed, a splendid, though a useless member of the community. He neither rowed nor boated nor played cricket; neither did he read, though, to do him justice, he was very far removed from a fool. He only loafed; but then—he loafed magnificently. No one had such room rents at Russell's or such wardrobes, or so many of them; no one gave such smart parties, smoked such big cigars, or drank such good wine; and, to give him his due, he stinted his friends of these luxuries no more than himself. A very fine fellow, indeed, too may be sure, was this Mr. Russell in our limited vision. I wonder what he became of him, and whether anybody has ever paid for all his purple and fine linen?

"Our party consisted of eight, Russell and his uninitiated fried; three seniors, who didn't sage long, or seem to care much for their company; two veritable freshmen, quite overpowered with the honor of an invitation from the College Lucullus and myself. After the wine had left Russell proposed a game of—cards, I suppose, I remember, or, rather, I should say, remembered, and, mind, I'm not so sure. It was agreed, out of compliment, I suppose, to the stranger, that the customary shillings should be replaced by threes of its specie; which, I need not in this company observe, makes a considerable difference in the general complexion of the game. However, I did not care to make one of it, though he spoke to two freshmen, they were so overwhelmed by the claret, the cigars, and the general novelty of the surroundings of the whole entertainment, that if their host had suggested to them that he dean might like to join the party, I am certain they would have contended for the honor of carrying the invitation. Three shillings, then, were the stakes to be, and the game began.

"Loo, as you are doubtless aware, is an engrossing pursuit, and it seemed really no time at all when Russell proposed a temporary cessation of play for refreshment—a work of supergogation after all the good things we had already swallowed; but the undergraduate is, as some of you possibly remember, a very casual in the matter of stomachs, though he was then, to be sure, on a less economical principle. One of the freshmen availed himself of this opportunity for leaving the party, alleging his losses, which were happily slight, and the imminent approach of "smalls." As he was a young man whose means were more limited than his acquaintance, and who had of late time rather disturbed by the quantity and quality of Russell's hospitality, we made no objection, and he hobbled nightly lectock himself, clattering down the stairs like a pig on stilts, and making the night hideous with strange scraps of discord as he stumbled across the quadrangle on his way to bed. We sat again at the rest of the party and took up the cards.

"I should have told you, perhaps, before this that I wore my right arm in a sling, the results of a duel fought and fled the "drag." This, of course, made dealing rather troublesome, both to me and the others, and more than once in the course of the play I had provoked curiosity and sarcasm by my awkwardness. It was arranged, then, before we resumed work, that the others should take it in turn and deal for me. Another arrangement, of yet greater importance, was that, as our party was now reduced to four, we should increase our stakes to guineas, and further tempt the vagaries of fortune by the addition of "tittups" as we called, and as I suppose everybody calls, that rule which gives to the dealer who, after a "safe" deal, is fortunate enough to turn up an ace, the stakes of his opponents who are cool and all incontinently lead for the sum of those stakes. At any other time I gave myself the credit of supposing that I should have refused to do any partner to so expensive a transaction; but I wished to get back my losses, which were just then peculiarly inconvenient; I did not wish to offend Russell, who was the prime power; and, moreover, thought I was as sober as any gentleman need be at 11 o'clock at night after a skinful of good claret, I was not, very certainly, completely master of my usually ease and reflective judgment.

As usher, I say, as a gentleman need wish to be under the conditions I have specified; but still there are degrees of sobriety, and even mine was perhaps not the superlative. Champagne, too, had a share to divide a single share of that exhilarating liquid stood at each man's elbow when we took up the cards again. True, I hardly put my lips to mine, for my fall had shaken me a good deal, and I didn't feel much in the frame for immediate cups. The stranger, too, as I observed, took his glass but sparingly; but Russell and the freshman drank like fishes, and, besides their share of mine, I believe long, as you may guess, the play began to grow suspiciously high, and our host, from being generously worried, began to become a little short in his temper, as well as a little thick in his speech. The freshman contented himself with sulling furiously and spilling about as much wine as he drank. He he had lost nearly £50, and I had grave doubts whether his exchequer contained at that particular time an equal number of shillings. You will hardly want to be told that our speculations were being carried on through the medium of "paper." Russell, too, who had hitherto been the largest winner, began to experience reverses, and to objurgate them freely. My bad had been fascinating at the evening, but with a strong tendency to sink. Altogether, the aspect of affairs was far from pleasing, but our host would not hear of making an end, and kept losing more money, and opening more champagne, with a persistence worthy of a better cause. Finally, to crown the folly of the whole business, he proposed that the stranger and he be a whole party; pleading his duties as host—an impudent plea enough, considering that he was only this time the only drinker, and the incumbency of the freshman, which was certainly obvious to the meanest capacity. I ventured on a slight remonstrance; but really it was difficult to object with a good grace, and the stranger had a pair of continental broad shoulders.

"You must have been very fresh, Tommy," observed one of the seniors.

"Not at all. I tell you the man was as big and as broad as a school, and I carried one of my arms in a sling; and even had I been fully armed, he could have pulled me off as easily as I could have been disposing of our friend's chair here. However, to go on with my story, such as it is.

Sitting idly then at the table my eyes were being confined to frequently putting pieces of paper in the pool and less frequently taking pieces out, my eyes became irresistibly attracted to the dealer. He certainly, despite his unfriended hand, contrived to deal with wonderful precision and rapidity. I noticed, too, that as Russell and the freshman continued to mount their insatiate thirst, and, as the hands of the clock drew nearer and nearer to the midnight, by which hour all strangers were bound, and, indeed, of lower gentility to have too liberal hosts, to be outside the college gates, that fortune, in the matter of aces, seemed determined to mock him for her own. At first this fact aroused no particular feeling in my breast beyond a vague one of envy; but, as I still watched him, there flashed across me in an instant of thought the doubt whether fortune had, perhaps, as much to do with the business as I supposed. In a moment a preternatural coolness and sagacity took hold of me; the fumes of Russell's champagne and of Russell's claret passed away from my brain, and my eyes assumed an abnormal eagleness of vision. A couple more deals satisfied me. The man was not playing fair.

And what the device to do now was the question. Though I was as morally certain as were being cheated as I was of anything in my life, I could no more have specified the manner of the cheat than I could give you, if you wanted it, a list of the Archbishops of Canterbury in chronological order. The table we were seated at was pretty large one, and the dealer played his little game on the opposite side to me. I couldn't stretch across it to arrest his fraudulent hand, even could I have picked the precise moment to do so; and, beside, as I have already told you, he could have turned me over on to the floor as easily as he turned the aces over on to the table. The others were far too much bewitched with champagne and their losses to comprehend the nature of the case, or to be of any assistance if they could. It certainly was as awkward a predicament as an innocent and well-conditioned young gentleman need wish to be placed in.

"Fortunately, at that moment, the three-quarters struck, and the time for a safe deal came round. Here was a chance.

"I mustn't get you into trouble, Russell; perhaps we'd better stop now the game has gone. There's a good deal of paper about." So said the dealer, but lingering the cards wistfully, and obviously hoping a refusal.

"Certainly," I said, rising from my chair with alacrity, "we had better stop now."

"Stop," said Russell; "stop be d—d. I've lost £100. Sit down, Tommy, and have some more champagne. And you, Jack, go on with the deal."

The stranger paused.

"No," was my answer. "No, thank you, Russell; no more champagne for me, and no cards. I am going to bed, and, if you'll take my advice" (this to the freshman), "you'll come too. You, Russell, and your friend can do as you please, of course; but I'm off."

"That's deuced generous of you, certainly," said Russell, rather savagely. "However, if you won't, you won't; so let's sort the paper. But I'm hanged if you play any more with me."

"I don't think I shall," I replied, as quietly as I could, and began to collect the various autographs that strewed the table in tedious promises.

Fortune had been kind to me lately, and I was delighted to find no scrap of my hand-writing in the possession of the stranger. Together, I was a winner of some £20, dividing pretty equally between my two friends. Russell had lost about £100 to his guest, and the freshman about £60 to the same favored individual.

"——!" was Russell's not uncommon oath, on counting the amount of his result of my investigation. "But, hello, what the deuce are you about, Tommy?"

"Tearing up these silly bits of paper," was my answer, which I think I was doing as unconcernedly as I could, though feeling, let me tell you, anything but unconcerned.

"But that will never do," said he. "I don't know about your young friend impossible, but I'm afraid I'm hardly prepared to liquidate on the spot."

"I don't think that will be necessary, do you?" was my reply, looking for the first time full in the stranger's face. It was not a pleasant one, but as I looked at it I felt somehow that he had no intention of showing fight.

He did not answer at once, but stood looking anxiously about the room, my friend first and me. At last he spoke with an uncomfortable attempt at a laugh.

"Do as you please. They say every one has his own rules for loo, and I have my own here, why, I suppose I must agree to them."

"Precisely so," was my reply. "Every one has his own rules; we have ours, as you see; and you, as I think I have seen, have yours. Tomorrow, if you like, we'll discuss the difference; but now, I'm for bed. I shan't do anything of the sort; but now, I think, I feel a little fresh. Good night, I hope I shall be the best place for us all. Russell will see you to the gates. I am sure; and I'll look after this young gentleman, who doesn't seem very capable of performing that operation for himself. Come, Jack, my fellow, after one final and ferocious draught from a tumbler that had happily been empty for the last ten minutes, had fallen asleep in his chair, with an expression of more impudence than I should have supposed the human countenance capable of assuming.

"Still the man stood there, stealing a glance now and again at the others, but never at me, and drumming on the table with his cursed fingers.

At last I had rent the last evidence of our folly into fragments.

"Come," said I, turning to Russell, on whose flushed face was obviously dawning the idea of an unpleasantness somewhere, "it is on the stroke of 12—had we not better be going?"

At length he rose. "Take that drunk fool off the table—he!" said he, nodding savagely at the slumbering idiot in the chair. "And you," to the stranger, "I know nothing; we must be quick, if we are to clear the gate. You will find my chambers above, if you want me."

The stranger took his hat and stick and followed Russell to the door. At the door he turned and said to me, without looking at us, "Well have a little settlement of this to-morrow."

"Certainly," I answered, "if you wish it. It won't be a very big one, I dare say."

"Then he went out and I never felt more relieved in all my life than when I heard the footsteps in the quadrangle, and turned to wake the body in the chair. And there was my story for you, and I'll thank some of you for something to drink."

"And what became of your three-fingered friend?" asked one of the company.

"Heaven knows," said Tommy. "All I know is that he left his inn, and a pretty long bill into the bargain, by the first train next morning, and never showed his face in Oxford again as long as I was there."

"Which wasn't very long, I fancy, was it?"

"No, it wasn't," was the short reply, "if you want to know though I don't see what that has to do with it."

"And Russell—what became of him?"

"Oh, he stuck to his rooms, I suppose, and paid his bills, and on their way home he ran up to them and rubbed his hand over their shoulders and neighed as if was very glad to see them alive.

And doubtless saw all.

A LAWYER retained in a case of assault and battery was cross-examining the plaintiff's wife in behalf of the defendant. "Now, Mrs. Gringer, you know you said he was a big man, I dare to clear the gate. You will find my chambers above, if you want me." "Yes, sir," said the witness; "what kind of a blow was given?" "A blow of the common kind." "Describe the blow." "I am not good at description." "Show me what kind of a blow it was." "I cannot." "You cannot." "I won't." The lawyer appealed to the court. The court told the witness that if she persisted in insisting upon showing what kind of a blow it was he must do so. "Do you insist upon it?" asked the witness. "I do." "Well, then, since you compel me to show you, it was this kind of a blow!" at the same time suiting the action to the word and knocking over the astonished disciple of Coke upon Littleton. When the lawyer rose to his feet he said he did not wish to ask the witness any more questions.

A Horse in the Recess.

During a rise in Black creek, Ky., Miss Naomie Lee and sister, aged 12, attempted to cross the creek, both on horse. When they got near the middle of the stream the horse became entangled in some brush and threw them into the foaming stream and went to the bank on the other side. The girls broke off some limbs and swim twice when her sister caught her by the hair, and the horse went to them, turned around and the younger sister caught him by the tail, the horse, turned and swam towards with the other, reached the shore safely. The horse started home in a gallop and neighed as if in great glee, but getting no one to notice him, he started back in full speed to the girls. Finding them both alive and on their way home he ran up to them and rubbed his head into their shoulders and neighed as if was very glad to see them alive.

I Am the Doctor, Madam.

Surgeon Blank was noted for his success with the ladies. He never liked to take along at the case of his engagement in accordance with regulation rule, and was finally made Brigade Surgeon for that reason. He used to be night rides with the General at the head of the column. This increased his opportunities for forming acquaintances, and, as he remarked, enlarged his circle of medicine.

On one occasion as the General, staff and escort were riding easily through a hamlet, they came to a halt in the vicinity of the infantry, a live of ministry, brought the adjutant to a halt. The cavalry were ordered to go forward and discover what the trouble was, with instructions to report to the General. Surgeon Blank was ordered to go forward and know near which they had stopped. The cavalry went, and the General, sending instructions to the regimental commanders behind, went with the staff officers in the lead. The column halted upon his showing what kind of a blow it was he must do so. "Do you insist upon it?" asked the witness. "I do." "Well, then, since you compel me to show you, it was this kind of a blow!" at the same time suiting the action to the word and knocking over the astonished disciple of Coke upon Littleton. MAKING UP MEALS.

How a Tramp Keeps Count of All the Dinners he Has Missed.

He was a ragged and unkempt looking person, and very profuse in his thanks for the coin which the New York Tribune reporter had just given him. "Think you, sir, very sincerely—that will buy me just—Tuesday—week's dinner, I think." Then, after a pause, "Yes, I had Tuesday week's breakfast yesterday afternoon, and this will bring me up to Tuesday night. You see, I'm near on to a fortnight behind now, but that ain't much."

"What is not much? I don't quite catch your meaning."

"Why, being a fortnight behind ain't much. I've run as much as four weeks in the rear before now, but that's bad, and I was pretty well done up, I can tell you."

Seeing, however, that the reporter still looked rather puzzled, he set to work to explain himself. "Well, it's above the way I reckon myself two meals a day. Two meals a day is what a man really needs to keep in my kind of trade, and if he can get no regular no much the pick-easter, but if he can't, why he's bound to make up when he can. If I only got one meal on Monday the other stands over to Tuesday, and if I don't get one on Tuesday again, that leaves four for Wednesday, and I'm pretty keen a score and work off arrears when I can? "Why, of course I do, but its hard work sometimes." "Well, I reckon, mostly, "With the scoring, and the eating of arrears, I've been pretty busy, yet, up to get mixed carrying the count in one's memory from day to day—and I don't rightly know if it was Friday last and Saturday fortnight's breakfast now, but I had a small bite at night on last Thursday which I think was Saturday fortnight's breakfast, but I never felt sure it wasn't only Friday fortnight's dinner. How Brieklets Are Made.

The best white flour is used, and yeast dough is made similar to that used in the manufacture of bread. In the bake-rooms is a twenty-gallon kettle filled with boiling lye, made with water and potash, which is bought in cans. A workman seizes a piece of dough, rolls it out into long rolls as large as a lobster sausage, and then cuts the roll into pieces about three inches long. One of these pieces is rolled into a long strip, large in the middle and small at the ends. The workman places a thumb and forefinger at each end of the strip, crosses his hands in a twinkling, dabs the ends into the hot part of the strip by the same motion, and the bretzel is shaped and ready for the lye kettle.

Another workman drops them into the boiling lye in batches of twelve, and keeps them there only a moment while he fishes out twelve he has just put in a few seconds before. About four seconds is the time required for the dough to take on a mahogany color, while the bretzels are still wet they are sprinkled with salt and then shoved into a very hot oven where they are quickly baked.

Steamed or hard bretzels are made from ordinary dough. A machine moves and rolls the dough, and cuts the rolls into short lengths, which the workman twists into bretzels by hand. He makes 15 an hour. After boiling them in the lye, salting them, and baking them in an oven they are put in boxes, and stored in rooms where the gas greatly improves their flavor. Gas generally renders them friable.—New York Sun.

What Caught Him.

"Can't do it—great hurry—see you later," was the reply.

"I say, hold on!"

"Can't do it—as fast as I can!"

"See here," persisted the man, "I want you to step into the alley here and see a horse I'm going to buy. I want your opinion of him."

"Oh, that's it! Well, I don't mind if I do, but we cleverfully wasted three-quarters of an hour in seeing a sick horse. It is the only thing which never fails to hit."—Detroit Free Press.

Regeneration for Enfeebled Systems.

Suffering from a general want of tone, and its usual concomitants, dyspepsia and nervousness, he is about debarred from the use of a nourishing diet without an appetite, and with a system upon which effective nourishment of the specific nature necessary to renewed health and vigor, that is a positive impossibility. Hence, it is the purpose of this paper to call attention to a remedy which, by its tonic properties, will restore the appetite, and to the invigorating candidate the strength and vigor which are the necessary accompaniments of a healthy condition of the bowels and kidneys, and which, when these organs are in a deranged state, is the most effectual remedy for restoring health and vigor.

A QUEEN OF THE STAGE.

"Her Second Love," and the important essays she Reveals for the Benefit of Women.

(From the New York World.)

Several years ago the American public were amused by the entree upon the stage of a little lady who had been previously but little announced. She was one of an innumerable number of aspirants for public favor and had no instrumentality, aside from her own talents to cause recognition. In spite of this fact, however, she quickly achieved a warm place in the heart of the public which she has continued to hold ever since. Where was announced, therefore, that Miss Maud Granger would star the coming season in the play "Her Second Love," written by Mr. John A. Stevens, it was natural that unusual interest should be manifested, not only in theatrical circles, but among the general public throughout. This was especially the case, as it was known that Miss Granger had, for the past year, been in exceedingly delicate health, and the determination to star in a strong emotional play was the more surprising. One of the staff of this paper was accordingly deputed to see the popular lady and verify the rumor or announce its incorrectness.

Miss Granger's countenance is familiar to nearly every one in the United States. It is a face one sees never to be forgotten. Features remarkable in their outline and contour are surrounded by a pair of large and deep eyes indicative of the greatest soul power. It is easy to see where Miss Granger obtains the ability to portray characters of the most emotional nature. She walks into her parlors like a queen, and her feeling without which no emotion can be portrayed is shown in the tone of mere pure remarks she used how much suffering might be avoided and how much happiness secured.

BLESSED BENEFACTORS.

When a board of eminent physicians and chemists announced the discovery that by combining some well-known vegetable remedies, the most wonderful medicine was produced, which cures such a wide range of diseases that most all other remedies could be dispensed with, we were astonished at the news, but on the actual trial we dispelled all doubt, and hailed the discoverers of that great medicine, Hop Bitters, as benefactors and blessed by all as such. These Bitters are compounded from Hops, Buchu, Mait, Mandrake and Dandelion and other select, best and most valuable medicines in the world and contain all the best and most curative properties of all other medicines. Better than a dozen Blood Purifier, Kidney and Liver Regulator and Life and Health Restoring Agent on earth. No disease or ill-health can long exist where these Bitters are used, as varied and perfect are their operations. They give new life and vigor to the aged and infirm. To all other employers we say, if any of the hundreds of ordinary remedies offered you require a dozen or half a dozen of them to make you well, use Hop Bitters.

Hop Bitters are invaluable, being full of curative, tonic and stimulating, without intoxicating. No matter what your feelings or symptoms are, what the disease or ailment is, use Hop Bitters. Don't wait until you are sick, but if you only feel bad or miserable, use the Bitters at once. It may save your life. Hundreds have been saved by so doing. $500 will be paid for a case they will not cure or help.

Do not suffer yourself or let your friends suffer, but use and use them to use Hop Bitters.

Remember, Hop Bitters is the purest and best medicine made; the "Invalids' Friend and Hope." Support a family with a bottle.

I was troubled for many years with serious kidney and liver complaint, dyspepsia, and nervous debility. I was dull and languid, could hardly drag myself about, had no ambition, and was all over a miserable wreck. I was induced to try Hop Bitters, and am happy to say they have cured me entirely. My blood is pure, strong, and healthy, and I am as active as a man of 20, although I am over 60 years old.

For 15 years my wife was confined to her bed with a disease peculiar to her sex, and we thought she would never leave it but for her grave. She took Hop Bitters on my recommendation, and gave them a fair trial, and they have made her healthy, active, and happy. We believe they saved her life. I know we have saved much in doctors' bills, and I feel as if I could never say enough in their praise.—H. W.—Detroit, Mich.

News Brevities.

People traveling between Boyne and Boyne Falls will find F. M. Abrahams one of the most careful and obliging drivers on the road.

L. S. Bonham, of Alma, is about to settle near East Jordan and engage in bee keeping. After he gets well started he will have bees to sell to those wishing to engage in the same business.

The Enterprise gives the following figures as the shipments from East Jordan for the season: Lumber, 2,800,000 feet; 1,000,000 lath; 11,500 cedar posts and railroad ties; 460 cords of wood and bark.

M. G. Cook, of Boyne, has a pleasure yacht, the "Little Tease," which he claims will beat anything on Pine Lake. Here is a good chance for a race and some fun, for there are doubtless others who own yachts who have the same opinion.

The United States hotel at Boyne, under the management of Mr. Geo. W. Childs, has come to be one of the most popular houses in the county, and it has been called the best $1.50 house in this region. It takes all the best custom at Boyne and that vicinity,—tourists and pleasure seekers making it their headquarters. Before he could get such patronage a great amount of work was necessary, and the house was renovated and refitted throughout. The walls have been covered with new paper of the latest design, the woodwork painted, the floors recarpeted, and the rooms refurnished with complete sets in ash and black walnut. An addition of 44 feet has just been completed on the south side, the upper stories of which are made into guests' rooms, and all the furnishings are new. The bedding is of good material, and ample for these chilly nights. The ladies' parlor and dining room are separated by very large doors, which may be thrown open, if necessary, making the two as one large room. Both are handsomely decorated with new paper, and the furnishings of the best quality. Last, but by no means least, the manager and all his employes, are courteous and obliging, giving every attention to the wants of guests, as we know from experience. The traveler who contemplates visiting Boyne should write U. S. hotel where he will not fail to see it. Mr. Childs was formerly proprietor of the Bailey house, Stanton, and those who knew him there will not fail to hunt him up when traveling this way.

Clippings from the Boyne Statesman.

The sidewalk between the U. S. hotel and postoffice is being widened. Quite an improvement.

Gran White, now head sawyer in the Sheboygan mill, cut 1,054 feet of lumber in thirteen minutes last Thursday—scale measure.

Farmers about done haying for this season.

JACQUES.

Clippings from the Harbor Springs Independent.

About 500 Grand Rapids people are spending the heated term at the various northern resorts.

The Harbor Springs turn table, which has been out of order for a time has been repaired, and now goes around as easily as the hat in the church.

The site for the Harbor Point lighthouse has been surveyed and staked out. The association reserves a fifty-foot drive between the government land and the beach.

The hay crop of northern Michigan is immense this season. In some localities large fields of beautiful grass will remain uncut, the price hay is selling at not warranting the cutting.

The life saving station on North Manitou Island has been made a full pay station, with a constant guard and patrol of the shore, the many wrecks that have occured there making extra precautions necessary. The captain receives a salary of $600, and each of his men $50 per month. The station has recently been supplied with a complete outfit, including boats lines, car, mortars, etc.

Making other Hearts Ache.

The monopolists' organs are very sensitive lest the Western Union strikers shall invade the rights of the telegraph company. These organs talk with a sort of horror of the "combined conspiracy" which the operators have entered into against the peace and good of the company that has employed them. The facts, however, speak for themselves. The strikers have been orderly, peaceable and self-controlled. They have in no way attempted to interfere with the company's business. They have refused to work for what they consider insufficient pay. That right has never yet been denied in this country. The right demanded and exercised by many labor unions, to forbid or prevent other men from working, has never been conceded in this country, and never will be. But the operators make no such claim, and have so far abstained from interfering with the company's obtaining whatever assistance it can command. It is only when strikers undertake to intimidate by violence those who do not want to strike, or who wish to return to work, that a public sense of justice feels that they put themselves in the wrong.

Moreover, it does not lie in the mouth of the Western Union corporation to condemn anybody for invading other people's rights. It is itself a most insolent and aggressive public enemy. If it wishes to run its lines anywhere it never says "by your leave." Its poles disfigure the streets. Its wires are laid wherever it is most convenient for the company to place them. Its charges to the public are what it pleases to make them without regard to competition, and with sole reference to its dividends upon fictitious capital. For the Western Union corporation to talk of being annoyed or injured by a strike of its operatives, is absurd as Louis XV.'s complaining that the French people annoyed him by crying out in the streets that they were hungry, and parading their starving children in front of the palace filled with idle and well-fed menials, courtiers and servants who lived on the fat of the land.

The chief of the striking "linemen" of New York, in a speech before the striking telegraphers "hit off" the situation very graphically when he referred to the company's setting the police to watch the linemen. "After we have sneaked on the roofs of private dwellings," said he, "put fixtures up, drove spikes, stole right of way, climbed walls, and risked our lives for the company, bluffing the property-owners who attempt to interfere with us with some story or other, and all the time starving for the express, they have now no better use for us than to turn us over to the police."

A corporation without a soul has no feeling, when it treads on the toes of other people. So when it has its own toes to tread on, having no feelings, it has no claims to sympathy or consideration. When a bull crashes through a china shop, the owner of the china will not weep much should the broken china cut the animal and set the blood to running.—[Detroit Free Press.

Clippings from the Detroit Free Press.

Ten thousand intelligent, honest, hard-working, sober men and women, fighting nearly $100,000,000! What man or woman, unless their hearts are like Jay Gould's, can help sympathizing with the operators against monopolists?

After paying six per cent on its enormously inflated stock last year the Western Union company had a surplus of nearly $2,000,000. Deducting $315,000 spent for new links, wires, etc., there remained a balance of $1,664,000. This divided among their operatives would have made an average addition of nearly $10 a month to each one's salary.

The Detroit Post and Tribune, a bigoted and stupid organ of the monopolists, says that the action of the telegraphic operators is the same which resulted in "the destruction of property at Pittsburgh, which stopped the business of the country without by rail, produced such vast distress and so many crimes in the coal regions of Pennsylvania, and which has always resulted in disaster, mischief and crime." No other paper has the news. Your monopolists very naturally looks upon a man's attempt to get higher wages as a "disaster" and a "crime," no matter how orderly, lawful, and just his demands and conduct may be.

Governor Foster says that Foraker's chances in Ohio are "splendid," because Foraker was "a soldier during the war." This does not help an Ohio man, as "Calico Charley" himself ought to know. Foster was called "Calico Charley" because, during the war, he stayed at home and made money by selling cotton goods at a large advance to soldiers' wives and widows. Yet when Foster was a candidate against Ewing, who was a gallant and meritorious officer during the war, it did not help Ewing's "chances" at all. On the contrary, Ewing was defeated and "Calico Charley" elected. Why, then, should Foraker's war record aid him. The Ohio people lay no stress on a man's military record. They appear to be willing to elect a civilian as readily as they would a soldier.

The New York Commercial Advertiser, which like nearly all the prominent republican papers, with the notable exceptions of the outlaws of New York Times, sympathizes with the monopolists against the operators, says that the strikers are "an individual fraction" of the people of the United States. They are said to number at least 10,000. If 10,000 operators in the telegraph business are only "an infinitesimal fraction" of the people of the United States, what size are the "operators" in telegraph stock—Jay Gould, Russell sage, Cyrus. W. Field and half a dozen of the men who are as much responsible for the strike as the men in their employ? Do such men count any more than common people? The monopolists and their organs seem to count them more, but in this country where votes, not names or dollars, are supposed to be counted, they do not begin to count as much as the strikers.

The two eminent, conspicuous, bigoted, big invested protection patriots in this country, while snivelling about the interest of the workingman and laborer, are the unblushing champions of the capitalists and the monopolists. These are the New York Tribune and Chicago Inter Ocean. And these two papers signally and exceptionally among the newspapers of the United States are the friends of the Western Union and the enemies of the strikers. This is perfectly natural. The perpetual champions of monopoly in one kind of business jump from mere habit to uphold monopoly in every form. Their sympathies, their modes of thinking and of writing fall as naturally into the monopoly channel as drops of water are by capillary attraction drawn into the trickle, the rivulet, the brook and the river. It is their nature to. The same is true of the Post and Tribune, of Detroit—an insolent and ignorant champion of monopolies of every sort. It has had nothing but sneers, derision and abuse for the strikers; going so far as to accuse them of misusing and misappropriating the wires of the company to organize their resistance to what they regard as tyranny and greed. The month-pieces of monopoly hate any movement calculated to weaken monopoly.

A TURNED-DOWN PAGE.

There's a turn down page, as some writer says,
In every human life
A blotted page, a page of sorrow days
Of peace and the strife.

A folded leaf that the world knows not—
A line drawn rudely crossed;
The sight at a glance that is not forgot,
While the voice be hushed.

The far distant sounds of a harp's soft strings,
An echo on the air;
The hidden page may be full of such things,
Of things that one never felt.

There is a hidden page in each life, and who
A story could tell
But the sad tale, and of the dream disclose—
It better to be hinted.

The Nail-Makers and the Tariff.

Grand Rapids Democrat.

The condition of trade just now in many of the "protected" industries is a good illustration of the pernicious effects of the present high-tariff system. By reason of the enhanced cost of production, which is the inevitable result of the protective tariff, the American manufacturer's wares are shut out of the foreign market where they find it impossible to compete with the cheaper goods of England. His sales are thus confined to the home market, and this once gainted his goods remain on his hands and he is forced to stop his machinery, discharge his employes, and wait for the surplus products to be worked off. This feature of the so-called "protective" policy is made prominent nearly every month by the proceedings of the western association of nail manufacturers, which association yesterday held its regular meeting at Pittsburgh and decided to order "a general resumption of work in the mills for a few weeks from next Monday, the suspension for the past four weeks having resulted in greatly diminishing stocks." The western nail association includes the great bulk of all the nail factories in the country. Its mills, extended under the stimulating effects of a high tariff on nails, have a capacity sufficient to fill time for greater than needed to supply the American demand, and the increased cost of manufacture caused by the high tariff on iron, machinery, and coal renders it impossible for them to compete successfully in the foreign markets with the cheaper English product, which is shut out of the American market by prohibitive duties.

Therefore about once every month this western nail factory trades union meets, dismisses the state of the nail trade, and—if it is thought that nails are getting too cheap—decides to create an artificial scarcity by stopping all the mills for two weeks or a month, as the interests of the great combination seem to demand. It is simply another method of getting a "corner" on nails and thereby increasing their price; and this is made practicable only by the Chinese policy which forbids the consumer buying his nails where he can get them for the least money. It enables the nail factories to act on the principle of "small sales and large profits," while free trade would force them to adopt the policy of "large sales and small profits"—and it requires no argument to show which of these commercial policies is to the benefit of the consumer.

By reason of this artificial scarcity caused by the shutting down of the factories during the past month, the nail monopoly has been enabled to hold up the wholesale card rate to dealers at three dollars per keg of one hundred pounds for twos and larger sizes, which makes the retail rate by the keg $3.25 at least $1.10 higher than nails were sold at in this city in 1879.

But there is another view to be taken of this nail making monopoly combination, which is the direct outgrowth of the "protective" tariff. How much do the wage earners of these nail factories benefit by a "protective" tariff under the workings of which they are liable to be thrown out of work for two weeks or a month half a dozen times a year?

The fact is there is more capital invested in the nail factories of the countries than can, at normal prices, be profitably employed in supplying American markets—and any considerable foreign demand is shut off by the high cost of production. The nail factories are driven to the combination policy in order to prevent ruinous competition, and, finding that they have the power to keep prices above the normal rate, they use the power which the prohibitive tariff gives them not only to protect themselves but to bleed the general public and keep down the wages of their employes. For what hope have such employes of resisting a cut in wages when they know that it is the settled policy of their bosses to half the nail market by stopping production? A strike only brings the expenses of the party out and greatly enhances the prices of all the nails in stock—in fact cases just what the nail combination has accomplished by its just-ended month's shut-down.

What has been above said in regard to the nail factories applies very generally, but of course with certain limitations and qualifications, to the great majority of the "protected" industries of the country. They have far more capital and machinery to pay interest on or to get interest from—than can be kept employed in supplying the home demand for their products, and the higher cost of their wares caused by the tariff makes any considerable export trade impossible. They can supply the American market by running, say half or three-quarters time, but if they run more they must pile up their warehouses and enter into ruinous competition with each other. They are therefore either forced into a combination to hold prices up by curtailing an artificial scarcity, or driven into a cut-throat competition in the endeavor to unload their over-product upon an already glutted and hence restricted market. Whether they do the one or the other depends upon whether the circumstances are such as will or will not permit the successful formation of such a monopoly combination as that of the western nail association.

Political Assessments.

The near approach of the Virginia and Ohio elections and the presence of many interested congressmen and politicians at this time have created the opinion that a still hunt for campaign funds is being conducted. In the opinion of many of these gentlemen the civil-service law does not place it out of their power to receive such funds from government employes. They concede that the bill was framed with the purpose of putting a stop to political assessments, but hint significantly that it will by no means do so, for the reason that the removal of clerks "for cause" can not be prevented. It will never be impossible to find a "cause" for getting rid of a clerk when his continuance in office is not desired. It is still lawful for state committees of the national committee to invite the clerks to contribute, and, if they fail to do so, it will not be impossible to send them a draft. Almost any law can be evaded when those charged with its enforcement are willing to do the bidding of the workman. It cannot be interfered with by laws without dealing a fatal blow at his manhood. If he is to remain a freeman, he must be able to exercise the right to choose his employer, to make terms with him, to refuse to work for him if he pleases, and to do this in combination with his fellow workmen. The general public may suffer inconvenience by a strike, but that cannot be helped. Freedom is in many ways inconvenient, as foolish Americans, enamored of the Napoleonic despotism, used loudly to proclaim after a visit to Paris. But, after all, freedom is in the long run less inconvenient, more orderly, and less costly than the best devised despotism.—[New York Herald.

Free Trade at Home.

No one will be surprised that Congressman Springer declines to debate the tariff question with Prof. Dessloe, whose debate with Prof. Sumner of Yale last year showed how worthless such a debate may be made. One of the propositions then made by Prof. Dessloe was that "Free trade has never been practiced by any nation that trades." This of course is not strictly true, and proves nothing as to the wisdom or lack of wisdom of the adoption of a free trade policy by this or any country. Of this the Chicago Times says:

There is perfect freedom of trade throughout the United States. No state practices the policy of exclusion against the goods of the people of other states. We do not believe the experiment of free trade on a grand scale would be pretty well satisfied with the results. There is not one single argument in favor of erecting a tariff barrier in Illinois against the products of Indiana, which is apparently sound and cogent argument in favor of the erection of the same kind of a barrier to shut Pennsylvania and New England goods out of Illinois. And yet the people of Illinois are not clamoring for the repeal of so much of the constitution as prohibits the erection of a tariff barrier by Illinois. They seem very well satisfied with the constitution as it is in this respect.

Oranges and Protection.

Charlotte Leader.

Oranges can be grown in Florida and sold in Charlotte for five cents each.

They can be grown in Charlotte and sold at the same profit for one dollar each.

To protect home productions a duty of ninety-five cents is placed upon Florida oranges.

Will Florida oranges continue to be sold for five cents each? If not, does protection raise the price of goods? The protectionists may answer.

But look at the result. Upon each Florida orange consumed, Charlotte loses nothing, for the ninety-five cents duty paid by the consumer goes into the treasury. Upon each Charlotte orange consumed, ninety-five cents is lost, for while the consumer pays it, the treasury gets nothing, and the producer only gets for himself the profit of a Florida orange.

That is protection.

A Republican Opinion.

Traverse Bay Eagle.

Many of our republican exchanges are talking loudly and in a jubilant manner about the grand success that awaits the party next year. The Petoskey Record does not share this feeling of assumed success, but, on the contrary, predicts defeat if not total destruction unless something is done at once to avert the calamity. In an editorial of last week the Record says:

"There is no hope for the future of republicanism but is found in the present management, which is controlled by Detroit and centering in Detroit is the ring of which Jim Burrill is the state worker—the ring which polices the party and the politicians, which makes the platform and its policy, and with the aid of the republican force at the caucus and convention, will be more irresponsible than that which they will overthrow the republican party in this or any other state. Let us wake up and get ready for the war."

A DISPATCH from Fort Washakie, Wyoming, says: The President and party left Green River station, on the Union Pacific railroad, at 7 o'clock on the morning of the 6th. The three spring-wagons, in which the party was to drive, were all seized by four Shoshoni bucks, each vehicle, and the two first days' drive, was made by the chiefs, who came down in the canyon, hung on the banks of the Sandy, and beautifully concealed, where, after a great dinner had been prepared under the supervision of Gen. Lord, Brent Gardner, master of Ceremonies, the President enjoyed the pleasure of a long conference with the chiefs of the wagon with the driver. During the last day's drive, when the party crossed a country covered by ancient lake deposits, the alkali dust was ankle deep, and made a pale green and exceedingly uncomfortable mixture with perspiration. At Wolcott, a station on the Union Pacific, the President and party were greeted by a large number of Indians, who were present on the occasion of the payment of arrears to such Indians as have been dropped from the rolls, and had to prove their identity before receiving their money. The President and party left Washakie in the afternoon, and the road has also closed its doors. An exchange says it is predicted that food of every kind will be very cheap during the next year. We certainly hope this is a true prediction, for it will give the poor laborer a chance.

The 400 strikers in the Republic mine all returned to work, the company having conceed all their demands. Their wages were cut down some two months ago, and the strike was for the restoration of the old scale.

The lumber shovers at Bay City struck last Saturday for 50 cents an hour, and paraded the streets with a band, gathering in all the dockwolloperers they could find. The vessels have since conceded the demand, and no trouble is expected.

If farmers had the power to combine and put the price of wheat at $2.00, $2.50, or higher, how long would mill-owners or wheat dealers hesitate before buying European or any other chaff, and glutting the American market if they could? We say, not a minute.

The Sun says that "the republican party must go." Over at Flint they won't go, and in 1876 they would not go down at Washington. It does begin to look as if there is but one power that can make a republican "go" and that is the republican party.—[Charlotte Leader.

"Having a little fun with the old man" will cease to be a common festivity when the country as a whole adopts the policy of an Alabama court that sentenced a youthful colored parricide to fifty years at hard labor in the penitentiary."—[Ex. In Michigan he would serve only a few months and then be pardoned by the governor. Such is the custom.

Republican newspapers are still telling how Dorsey denies all responsibility for the statements in the New York Sun about the methods and means of the "soap" party employed in carrying Ohio and Indiana in 1888. But they don't state that Dorsey has recently said himself that the allegations made by the Sun are substantially true and that they do not constitute a tithe of the whole truth were it all told.—[Grand Rapids Democrat.

Careful inquiry among the former republicans in Ohio, especially in the western reserve, show that those persons who voted against republican candidates last year, will vote for Hoadley this year. The small elements of discord between leading democrats, of which republican papers have had so much to say, have already disappeared from the canvess and the prospects of a democratic triumph in October are good.—[Grand Rapids Democrat.

As our republican friends are interested in knowing what becomes of their public servants after their retirement from office, we give the following from the Grand Rapids, Dakota, Dakota map be a good place to go to if a man has money, but the poor sinner with nothing but hands as a stock in trade would better remain in Michigan. More than one good mechanic has spent all his savings in a ramble for Dakota's riches, and come back to begin new. Perhaps Mr. Latimer will fare better, as the Journal seems to intimate. "Hon. W. J. Latimer, ex auditor general of the state of Michigan, came down the valley to day from Jamestown, and gave the Journal office a friendly call. He is half-owner of section 23-135-62, on which considerable improvement has been made, and 175 acres in crop. This is Mr. Latimer's first trip through this portion of the valley; he is well pleased with our country and prospects and proposes returning next spring. Mr. Latimer was one one of the most capable and popular officials ever in the service of the people of the state of Michigan, and is a wide-awake and energetic business man. Men of his stamp taking hold of Dakota interests are of invaluable aid in the settlement and development of this great northwestern territory."

Rufus Metlee, a prominent Indiana state senator, and for six years secretary of the democratic state central committee, in a recent interview in Chicago said that all the republican talk about hostility between McDonald and Hendricks was pure bosh; they were on the most friendly terms and really in no sense rivals. There was no doubt whatever, Metlee said, that McDonald would have the entire support of the Indiana delegation in the coming presidential convention, and if there were any instructions given they would be for him. So far as he knew there were no talk amounting to anything in Indiana about nominating the old ticket of Tilden and Hendricks. The state would certainly go democratic by a good majority in 1884 unless it should be flooded with republican money as it was in 1880, and he did not think that game could be again successfully played.—[Grand Rapids Democrat.

From Our Exchanges.

TRAVERSE BAY EAGLE.

The C. & W. M. railroad company is extending its line from Crooked Lake, Newaygo county, to Baldwin on the F. & P. M. road, a distance of 19½ miles. This road is expected to reach Traverse City by the time the section is completed.

The Manistee Democrat says a new steamer called the Lou A. Cummings has recently been built to run between Frankfort and Charlevoix in connection with the above line of steamers. Her dimensions are: length, 51 feet; beam 10 feet; depth of hold, 4 feet. She is propelled by a 10x16 inch engine. When the owners of the boat expect to commence business the Democrat does not inform the public.

BOYNE STATESMAN.

Our stockers are never devoid of boats loading lark, wood and other raw material, an immense amount of which is yearly shipped from Boyne City.

A specimen of spring wheat was brought to our office by Mr. Kimball last Thursday, which measured five feet eight inches. It was grown on C. A. Bachmann's farm, about one and one half miles from town.

Wm. Moore, of South Arm, was arrested last Thursday on a charge of rape upon the person of Miss Dell Green, aged 16, daughter of Mrs. Moore of the same place. The deed was committed on Sunday of last week. The complainant is a brother of his victim's stepfather.

Frank Pillmore, aged about six years, son of Ebenezer Pillmore, of Long Lake, was killed last Saturday while engaged in repairing the mill at Bassett's mill. The timber caved in, crushing his head and shoulders. He was taken out dead. His brother Lionel, at work with him, escaped with slight injuries.

W. T. Addis, of Big Springs, proprietor of the Spring Harbor & Boyne Falls railroad, informs us that he has discontinued running passenger trains on that road until next season, as it interferes with his lumber business, one locomotive being needed to attend to both passenger and log trains. He also informs us that next spring he will run an exclusive passenger train, if he has his intention to put on another locomotive expressly for that purpose. This, we think, will be a good scheme.

Some venturesome rascal stole a hog containing $25 in small change from the office at the depot one day last week. The money had been prepared for change for the excursion people, and was taken during the moment that Mr. Maude turned away to attend to the last train that night. It is supposed the thief reached into the window, turned the key of the drawer and secured the money. It was the work of only a few seconds. Suspicion points strongly to the guilty party, who it is to be hoped will shortly be brought to justice.

Two hundred and twenty-five dined at the Arlington Sunday, and a hundred and eighty-three registered Saturday evening.

E. Putman and N. Lamprem, of Flint, are looking about this section of country with the view to purchasing a large tract of timbered land.

Mr. C. H. Booth, of Wequetonsing, was stopping very high Saturday on account of catching a splendid fifteen pound pike which he captured in the harbor while fishing for perch. Mr. Christy also caught a very fine string of perch.

Charlevoix has had over 3,500 summer guests already this season. They have been distributed as follows: Fountain City and Bridge Street houses, 2,241; Belvedere and Chicago club houses, 300; other hotels and private boarding houses, 470; cottagers and their guests, 487.

The excursion on the Lawrence was well patronized, about $125 being the total receipts, which the M. E. church of Petoskey netted about nine. The excursionists brought away a good portion of the remains of Strang's house, and a few more such raids will strip the island of relics.

The engineer has submitted to the council his estimates for supplying Harbor Springs with water, both from the bay and spring brook back of the hill, and the council will probably take steps to submit the matter to the voters at a special election. The estimate for the spring supply is about seven thousand dollars, and the bay supply a thousand dollars less.

We don't see how people can live here, where nothing will grow! For instance Sam Shaw brought in the other day a stalk of timothy five feet eight inches long, and a stool of oats five feet long. Now if he had cut most the oats that were not crowed off by crossbowmen or blown out by the roots by cyclones would he venture so thirty inches high.

The largest fish known to have been caught in Little Traverse bay was taken by Wilson Bros. from one of their pound nets Saturday morning, and was on exhibition at the Harbor Springs fish house, where nearly all the fish caught in the bay are packed and shipped. It was a sturgeon as large as a shark, and had the fishes that fed the multitude been as large it wouldn't have been much of a miracle after all. This sturgeon was over six feet long, was thirty-eight inches in girth, and weighed one hundred and five pounds.

Charles L. Marshall, who has been extensively engaged in the manufacture of toothpicks at Cleveland, Ohio, has decided to remove his business to Harbor Springs, and has leased the large snow house at the river dock for five years with the privilege of ten. O. M. Cole is now at work remodeling it so as to adapt it to the business, and an engine house and shed will be put up. The manufacture of toothpicks is not as small a business as it would seem at first thought, for it consumes a large quantity of poplar and birch wood, and employs eight or ten men and fifteen or twenty boys and girls. Mr. Marshall seems to be an energetic, wide awake man, and he says he will get the factory running in thirty or four weeks.

Capt. U. S. Allen, Indian agent had a narrow escape from a serious ducking Monday afternoon, while canoeing for Beaver Island from Cross Village, which latter place he left about sundown in the evening on a small two-masted schooner, loaded with wood. When about four miles from shore the boat sprung a leak, and most of her cargo of 25 cords of wood had to be thrown overboard. Toward the small hours of the night the boat, in a badly waterlogged condition reached shallow water two miles this side of Cross Village, where they cast anchor and came ashore in the yawl. The captain came to Harbor Springs yesterday to dispose of the ferries to tow her into the harbor. He states that she is derelict down, and will give the pieces if not got inside before a blow comes on.

How Bryant Wrote It.

On the 15th of December he went over to the place [Plainfield], to make the necessary inquiries. He says in a letter that he felt as he walked up the hills very forlorn and desolate indeed, not knowing what was to become of him in the big world, which grew bigger as he ascended it, and yet darker with the coming on of night. The sun had already set, leaving behind it one of those brilliant seas of chrysolite and opal which often lend the New England skies; and, while he was looking upon the rosy splendor with rapt admiration, a solitary bird made wing along the illuminated horizon. He watched the lone wanderer until it was lost in the distance, asking himself whither it had come and to what far home it was flying. When he went to the house where he was to stop for the night his mind was still full of what he had seen and felt, and he wrote those lines, as imperishable as our language, "The Waterfowl." The solemn tone in which they conclude, and which by some critics has been thought too moralizing,

He sinks from zone to zone,
Guided through the boundless sky thy certain flight,
In the lone way that I must tread alone,
Will lead my steps aright, was as much a part of the scene as the flight of the bird itself, which spoke not a word to his poem but its soul. To have omitted that grand expression of faith and hope in a divine guidance would have been to violate the truth of the entire vision.—From Godwin's "Life."

Mrs. Hettie Strang, with our children, arrived on the 6th, and are now comfortably settled in the rooms in rear of the JOURNAL printing office, where we hope to meet new friends, and as many old friends as find their way to Charlevoix.

F. S. Bartholomew, a horticulturist of Westfield, N. Y., is stopping in Charlevoix a short time. He is looking up the fruit interests of this locality with the intention of establishing, if possible, a fruit, vegetable, and fish canning house in Charlevoix. He expresses himself as well pleased with our location and surroundings.

News Brevitios.

The Fountain City house has a new clerk.

Indian camp-meeting at Northport this week.

The Bellaire Breeze copies our railroad article in full.

The work of strengthening the south revetment is progressing.

Richard Knight, of Banks, put up 87 wagon loads of hay this season.

Wm. Flanigan of Bucks, looked a horse with peels and ties last week.

Messrs. Greening & Geiken report the fishing business a little slack just now.

A new sail craft of forty to fifty feet keel is in process of erection on the beach south of the channel.

Stockman & Iddings have 180 new stoves in their warehouse, and the man who cannot be suited is indeed hard to please.

The Charlevoix fire company meet at the engine house every Thursday night for practice and drill. All hands are expected to come out.

O. F. Wisner sold the Orrin Campbell estate in Eveline township on Saturday for $1,300, to Orson Campbell, of Beaver Island.

On Monday afternoon James Lynn, at the planing mill, received a bad cut in the wrist from one of the small saws. A larger saw would have taken the hand off entirely.

Upright, Emrey & Co. have extended their dock northward to Mason street, and intend to build a plank driveway and sidewalk from Bridge street to the warehouse as soon as necessary help can be obtained. This is an improvement which will be appreciated by their numerous patrons.

Four hundred and eighty-three and one-half bushels of huckleberries were shipped from Kalkaska in five days last week. What a tired lot of ladies that represents.

An attorney from Detroit, well acquainted with the various offices, says that Cruickshank & Geiser's rooms in the new Hutters' block, are as fine in finish and convenient in arrangement for business as any in the state.

The fishing business is not booming just now, although some pretty big stories are told by amateurs and pleasure seekers. As a business, fishermen say it don't pay wear and tear of outfit this month, though they expect to see it pick up about September 1st.

Mr. Orson Campbell has for sale a farm of 200 acres on Beaver Island which is cheap at $2,000, and anywhere on the mainland would be worth $5,000. It will raise as good wheat and corn as any land in northern Michigan, and he says he has raised 300 bushels of potatoes to the acre.

Last Saturday a diver was at work removing portions of the wrecked Parsons. Her hull has split into three pieces, and lies across the channel in the sand, with ten feet of water above her. The Truesdell cut a channel nearly eleven feet deep around the south end of the wreck while trying to get in on the 5th.

The Lawrence did not stop here on her last trip down, and went off on an excursion before she came back, delaying our ready-print three days, and making greatly to the work of publication day. This is another of the difficulties which cannot be provided for or guarded against until we print our whole paper at home, or build a railroad.

Last Sunday morning, while adjusting a rope around the timber head of a scow, the action of the waves caused a sudden tightening of the line and crushed the thumb of the right hand of Mr. W. L. French. It was afterwards ascertained, and is perhaps during as well as could be expected, but is still very painful. He will now find it necessary to practice writing left-handed.

Messrs. Wachburn & Ackert have purchased of Mr. Allen his interest in the machine shop, and will continue the business. As soon as they get brick to finish their foundry, they will push the work on that, and within a short time be ready to commence casting. They will have a skilled workman to look after the details of business, and thus be able to guarantee satisfaction.

Mrs. Lucy Simpson, a colored temperance evangelist, from Detroit, will address our citizens at the opera house next Sunday evening at 7:30. The press speak highly of her as a speaker. She gave the principal address at Bay View on the temperance subject, and also another at Petoskey last Sunday. Of her address in Whitney's opera house, Detroit, the Evening News speaks in praise. During this week she is working in the small towns in this county.

The Daily Reporter has completed its first month, and has not, it says, been a success, financially. It is doing a good work in advertising the facilities and resources of this region for pleasure as well as business, and we have no doubt hundreds of people will hear and know of us from single copies of that paper sent to them by friends, who will come and see for themselves another year; and without that paper they might have gone on for years and never heard of us. For this reason, if no other, the paper should receive good support.

The ladies of the first Congregational society will hold a bazaar in Bartholomew's opera house Tuesday and Wednesday of the coming week Aug. 21 and 22, at which time they will offer for sale a large number of useful and ornamental articles of their own making. Refreshments will be served in the afternoon and evening each day. The proceeds will go towards the building of the new house of worship of the society. The ladies have been some months in making their preparations for the bazaar, and we bespeak for them a liberal patronage from the friends of the enterprise which it is to aid.

Last week we stated that it had been reported that Mr. Taylor was to retire from the Bridge Street house Oct. 1st, and that S. B. Willis was negotiating for possession. The last portion of the statement we learned from Mr. Willis himself. Mr. Taylor states that Mr. Willis had not mentioned the matter to him at all, and also informs us that he does not intend to retire, but will continue to make the house first-class in all respects, and headquarters for commercial travelers and the traveling public generally as in the past.

Resorters and others having the management of local lecture courses should remember F. W. Hathaway, of the Redpath lyceum bureau, now making his headquarters at the Fountain City house. This bureau has the management of a large number of lecturers, readers, and entertainers, and can supply talent for any course in any part of the country. Among the names of lecturers are Burdette, Collyer, Cook, Gough, Livermore, Swing, Talmage, and Thomas, all of national reputation—besides many others. Although Mr. Hathaway is here for rest from business, he will give any information desired as to dates, terms, etc.

Upright, Emrey & Co. inform us that they have this week ordered a stock of hats, caps, and gents' furs for winter wear which is expected to exceed in quantity and quality anything in the same line ever brought to Charlevoix. They make a specialty of these goods, and can give bottom prices. To make room for this new stock, and to avoid carrying old goods over to next season, they offer their summer hats at cost, or below if necessary, to dispose of them. In collars they have the latest styles. One in particular—the "Anchor B & B,"—is the neatest of the lot. It is double and reversible, —a stand-up and turn-down combined,—and is sure to be the favorite. In ties they can suit the most fastidious. They keep a line of gents' furnishing goods in styles and quality to please. Ladies will find there a fine assortment of kid gloves.

New Enterprise.

Mr. E. S. Bartholomew, of Westfield, N. Y., a life-long horticulturist, has been looking about this vicinity for some time, his object being twofold. For a number of years he has been in a position to see and know what the fruit of the Grand Traverse region is in market and at pomological exhibits. To gratify a desire to see the country which could produce such magnificent fruit was one object of his coming. Another, and perhaps of more vital interest to ourselves, was the possibility of establishing a fruit, vegetable, and fish canning house at some available point within this fruit region.

Mr. B. says it is a fact well known to horticulturists that fruit grown in this climate is more highly colored, and richer in flavor and all that goes to make a perfect fruit, than that grown in a higher temperature or a drier atmosphere, and consequently brings a better price in market. Knowing this, and also that fruit can be raised here in paying quantities, he is satisfied that with some local demand to give an impetus to fruit-growing, the highest state of culture can very soon be developed right here in our midst.

But he does not confine his researches and observations to fruit. He finds that sugar corn, peas, beans, tomatoes, pumpkins, etc., can be grown here in as large quantities, and richer in all the elements of perfection, than in any other locality of which he has knowledge, and that they can be prepared for market in a manner to retain all their richness.

It is his desire to organize a company to engage in the business of buying and canning for market the various products of this vicinity, and not only build up a profitable business, but develop the actual resources of the soil. As a business investment, he says these factories pay a handsome profit wherever established. As promoters of industry and thorough cultivation of the soil, there is perhaps nothing to equal them. Sugar corn will grow thrifty and yield well, and being picked while the stalk is in prime condition for fodder, makes two items of income. Pumpkins may be planted with the corn, and alone yield a handsome profit for the labor expended, without detriment to the corn, making a third item of income for one season. Tomatoes, peas, and beans also yield handsome profits to the cultivator.

All kinds of berries and fruit, and all the vegetables named, may be canned in a manner to retain their superior qualities. As they grow, so they will be in market when placed side by side with the products of other communities. If we produce a better article, the consumer will soon find it out and the demand will greatly exceed the supply.

The canning of fish may also be added, thereby increasing the business of such a house.

It is estimated that a business of two hundred and fifty thousand cans per season may be easily worked up here, which would give employment to a large number of women and boys about five months every summer, and to a number of men during the winter season making cans.

In considering this subject, there are two features to keep in mind. First, the advantage to Charlevoix county, by its influence in developing the resources of the soil, and making a market at home where the farmer can take his produce and know that it will surely bring a good price in cash; and second, the advantage to Charlevoix village by having such a home established within our corporate limits, both in the matter of bringing business and population and giving name and fame to our village as well as our products. Any further or other information on this subject may be learned of Mr. L. D. Bartholomew.

A DREAM AND THE REALITY.

BY STANLEY HUNTLEY.

"Ah! have you never felt the power,
Which lies in a dreamer's wand,
And seen a world as in one short hour,
Pass in a fairy wonder? Have you heard
Have you not heard a melody,
A half-forgotten wild-wed strain,
That some was brought at a happ'ning,
But now comes like a sad pain?"

"I've felt the spell of a dreamer's wand,
Sweetly, sad and wild and strange;
I've heard a melody
Which has long been lost to me;
I've heard a half-forgotten strain
Which pierced from beneath my
Like a sad pain."

"Do you know the dreamer's wand,
Sweetly, sad and wild and strange?
Do you know the melody
Which has long been lost to me?
Do you know the half-forgotten strain
Which pierced from beneath my
Like a sad pain?"

"Ah! I know the dreamer's wand,
Sweetly, sad and wild and strange;
I know the melody
Which has long been lost to me;
I know the half-forgotten strain
Which pierced from beneath my
Like a sad pain."

"Dear lady, tell me, by what simple art,
The dreamer who pierced in her ear,
Can stir the music in my heart,
And bring the old, old strains to me?
What whispers do you possess
That can so wake the dreamer to me,
And bring the old, old strains to me?
A dream I feel, but cannot see."

The lady one never deigned to speak,
While her husband thumped the Drummer's back.

THAT HANDKERCHIEF.

BY SHELLBARK HICKORY.

Not long since, while traveling in a Western State, I happened to find myself in the beautiful little town of Hunsler, with a few hours on hand.

As the day was fine, I strolled out to see what was to be seen. As I was leisurely advancing down one of the shady streets, whom should I meet but my old friend and classmate, Jake Raymond.

"Well, well, well, old boy, how goes it?" he exclaimed, as he shook hands with me.

"You?" I answered. "Of all men on the footstool! What in creation are you up to, away off here?"

"Here is where I hold forth, and you must go down home with me."

I went, and it came was introduced to Mrs. Raymond. She was not what would be called a handsome woman, but there was a wholesome look in her face, and her big brown eyes and white teeth, added to the bright color of her cheeks and the satiny smoothness of her dark hair, fairly entitled her, in the opinion of some, to a certain degree of beauty.

Jake was not wealthy, but he had a comfortable home, and the neatness of the home at hand, and the neatness of the home at hand, together with the trimness of his wife's attire, added not a little to his enjoyment of this world's good.

Mrs. R. welcomed me cordially to their home, and I enjoyed more than I can express, the well-cooked meal, prepared by her own skill, and their genial society.

The sprightly conversation of my friend's helpmeet, and her unctious smile, completely won my regard, and I souchered a little sigh as I reflected on my own condition—that of a bachelor.

"Where did you get her, Jakey?" I asked, as we strolled out cigars and walked down town.

He smiled in a dreamy kind of way, as he thumped the ashes from the end of his cigar.

"It is a long story," he said. "I will tell it to you when we get to the office."

I was well pleased, for, beside being interested in the woman, I used to like very much to listen to Jake's stories.

Arriving at the office, we made ourselves comfortable, after which Jake began:

When I was a joss in the office of Sheets & Clipper, in the town of Cowel, in a State farther east than this, I belonged to an orchestra and to a brass band. I manned the festive guitar in the former, and thereby hangs a tale. You shall see how my membership in the latter also served its turn. So much for myself.

I had a friend, John Simons, who was also a music-man, and it was he who guided me unscrewed hand to finger the guitar.

I enjoyed his society more than that of any other other friends, for he was a restless fellow, that was not satisfied in my place long, so he picked his grip and left, much to my regret. A few months passed, when lo! John turned up again. He had not been doing anything; only wandering to suit his own crazy taste, and had even sold the guitar that he so loved to get money to come back on. This being the case, he went a short distance into the country and went to work for farmer—for he was proud as Lucifer, and would not stay around town in his shabby clothes. His idea was to stay in the country until he got himself a little taxed in regard to his wardrobe and his finances, and then go back to town and take his old situation, which was open to him if he chose to accept it.

Now it happened that the farmer for whom he worked had a young neighbor lately married, and he took a violent fancy to John. The young farmer was very proud of his wife and baby, and was not at all averse to company. John was a shy fellow in the presence of ladies, and was slow to accept the frequent and pressing invitations which Mr. Newman (for that was his name) gave him to "come over." But when he learned that Mrs. Newman's home was a neighboring State was there, with a guitar, he mustered up courage and went, for his fingers ached to caress once more the vibrant strings of a guitar. He found Mrs. May Warner, the girls before mentioned, a most agreeable young lady; but I don't believe he could have told what she looked like, for I'm sure he did not once look at her face, except to snatch a hasty glance when he was sure she would not see him. He observed narrowly, however, a nearly-slipped foot which peeped from beneath her dress; and you are aware, probably from experience, that a pretty foot is almost as essential to a lady's appearance as a pretty face. But better than her ankle he liked that guitar. With that instrument in his arms he seemed to feel quite at ease, and played accompaniments to his singing the whole evening.

This was a unusual treat to the family to which they were not accustomed, for Miss Warner's part, rumor on my musical instrument was very amateur-ish, to say the least. That being the case, he was warmly invited to repeat his visit.

This he did several times; but, just as he was established on a footing of favorable intimacy, Miss Warner left her aunt and went to spend on a visit to some other friends. While there she joined some sort of a class that was organized for the purpose of studying certain branches of learning, and sent three of her companions into the same class and stopped at the same house she did. They dressed remarkably alike, and appeared to be about of the same age; and, as they attended the meetings of their class in the forenoon and afternoon, they nearly always passed our office some four times a day; for our office was on the direct route between the residence of Mrs. Winnes, the stopping-place of the girls, and the school-house. There were others passing, but you may imagine that a group of four fine young girls, all of them tolerably good-looking, was not long in attracting the attention of the bachelor portion of our establishment, nor were we long in finding out that "Pa's was the Warner house" as they were called all summer. Then the question of forming their acquaintance came up, and we fellows, "heirs of the other layers, metaphorically speak:—I knew what I would do. I would call up the members of the orchestra, and we would go and serenade them. Just what useful purpose this was to serve, I could not exactly tell; but we went all the same. I sang a song or two that I had learned of John, accompanying myself on the guitar. Then we played some instrumental pieces and were preparing to go, when a blind of an upper window was thrown open, and a white hand and arm were thrust out waving some small object, which suddenly came flutering to the ground like a white dove. I went back and picked it up, as soon as possible I gratified my own curiosity and that of the other boys by striking a match and looking at the white object, which proved to be a handkerchief, with the name "May Warner" neatly stenciled in one corner.

"Which one is that?" asked the boys of one another.

"It is the little one with the black hair and eyes," said one.

"No, that is Mollie something or other," said Alfonso, with such a peculiar intonation that we concluded he must have been making private calls, and that he knew quite as well what the "something or other" was as he did the identity of Mollie.

"It must be, old fellow, that you are slightly interested in that quarter, Ch? Come now, my dear Alfonso."

This he disclaimed, but with such a guilty blush that instantly we sold him to be had "given himself away." Let me explain that by that time we had lit the lamps, to say nothing of our cigars, which were always lit in the office for our convenience. Some one suggested that it must be the slender blonde; this time no one had the hardihood to deny it, and Jim was constituted a committee of one to find out just "who was who," and report to us the next meeting. In the meantime that handkerchief reposed in my brown pocket. It gave me an odd, pleasant feeling that I can't explain, to have that feminine article in my unhipped possession. She must have seen me, I thought, and liked my looks; so she took that way to let me know it. The next evening Jim was ready with his report. We found out afterward that the sly rascal knew all about it from his brother, who was the accepted lover of one of the girls. But he pretended that he had obtained his information at infinite pains, and had been obliged to go through mineral of difficulties to find out that which was embodied in his report. Very deliberately he proceeded to read from a manuscript:

"Friends and fellow-citizens: You will readily conceive that upon the momentous and never-to-be—

"Stop!" we shouted as one man.

"Plain facts and no foolishness, or it will be the worse for you, my man."

He knew well that we would give him a worse track than Bedlam, if he "came down" at once.

"Well, then, the little brunette is Mollie Bell. The blonde is Gussie Day. The one with the gray eyes and chestnut curls is Sue Lane, nee Smith, or Sarah Thompson, and the remaining one is, as you must know by this time, Miss May Warner. They are all cousins, and related, in some mysterious way, to Mrs. Winnes. Further than that I am unable to say."

"Well done, my dear sir," I responded, for I had a sneaking notion all along as to "which was which," as the school-boy says, and it had turned out as I had hoped.

Then commenced the merciless raillery of the boys. A thousand questions as to the reason of my taking the second-floor room over the Winnes house, and why the handkerchief was thrown down, and all the time they were exchanging winks and laughing in the most provoking manner.

To hear them make remarks to one another, for one to hear, because utterly insupportable; and I was just getting desperate, when I learned of a party that was going to be at the house of Mrs. Winnes. There was another chance for a serenade. This time I was determined it should be of some avail. For I would go soon enough to be invited in, and then I should be a very odd thing if I were not introduced to Miss Warner. This all happened just as I had planned, and I only had a few moments of conversation with her. I was determined to make a good sort of an explanation about that handkerchief, and my opportunity to pursue the subject was slim. I asked her to accompany me to a lecture, and had the mortification to find she was going with a musty old professor. Aloshed. I watched my chance of seeing her alone, which was finally accomplished.

What was my chagrin to find that she never had heard of me on the night of the guitar serenade; but, having heard my friend John sing the same songs, and knowing he was a friend of ours, she concluded the difference in the voices could be explained by a cold, and that it must be he. Thus was my little romance dashed to the ground, and the fair structure of my "Castle in Spain," had melted into thin air. I begged to be allowed to keep the handkerchief, though, for I was really interested in the girl by this time. She could not deny me so little, for she womanly heart was touched by my evident disgust with myself, and she gave me her hand saying she was sorry. There was no glean of amusement in her clear eyes that looked into mine with an honest straightforwardness which was very cutting just at that moment. If there had been, I should have rejected with scorn any overtures of friendship that followed the mortification. As it was, it soothed my wounded vanity to see that "splendid creature," as I mentally called her, glossing over my insignificance, and I requested her company for a drive the next evening. She accepted the invitation with a smile that gave a glimpse of her white teeth, and my heart beat a little faster than usual, as I pressed her hand and said "good night." I was a little absent-minded, and I don't think I could, yet, tell what thoughts so occupied my mind. She was the subject of them, but everything else was a kind of haze, through which I strove to see her clearly. I was falling in love or not. Not even as tangible as that was in my mind. The next evening I found myself seated by her side in a buggy. It was one of those rough-and-tumble affairs, narrow seat, and I bloomed with delight thereof, for as we sat there her shoulder touched mine, and I felt the warmth of the long leather, on her hat, in the side of my face. I fear I was very near gone, for the blind I felt can't be described; it must be experienced to be appreciated.

She had taken off her gloves, and, when I went to assist her to alight, I noticed how delightfully soft and white her hand was, and I could scarcely refrain from pressing it to my lips. Then for the first time I realized what inutterable happiness it would be to press her to my breast, to hold her arms round my neck, to lay my lips on hers, and to feel their fervent pressure returned.

Was it too sudden? I think not. How many many times did lovers falls before a passion was conceived, which was stronger than life?

To go on with my story, I asked her to go to camp-meeting in my buggy the next Sunday. I shall then hear that good old Methodist institution to my dying day, for I believe that I was on that day she first thought of becoming my wife.

When we started to the camp-grounds the wind blew warm, balmy and soft from the southwest. It seemed to bemoan the death, and I swear I heard of its raining at camp-meeting.

Miss Warner bravely declared she thought a "good ducking" was not such a fearful calamity.

It was September, and the leaves had commenced to turn; and we drove through shady lanes where the wind twisted them off and threw them spitefully in our faces. Emerging into open prairie, the breeze rushed at us, "sashing" the dry, stand-ing grass in a manner which angered it to the wind, or anything else, except that I had my soul's desire in the companionship of her who was with me. When we had arrived to within a few rods of the camp-grounds, lo! there fell preliminary drops of rain came hurling through the air, and warned us to put up the side curtains and water-proof lap-robe, to prepare for the worst—which was not much, for all the worshipers were so friendly one not far from the rude pulpit, and stayed in the buggy. Upon the rain descended "the night way." All the shrieks were opened, and a new and very choice assortment of vocabulary were turned onto the assembled multitude. The windows of the heavens were thrown wide open, and the water pitchers were held there upside down, but we were dry and comfortable, and observed with interest all that went on around us.

We saw a sorry-looking dog walking leisurely along, with the water pouring in streams from his drooping hair and eyes; he passed near us, looking at us with so sad an expression that I spoke to him, thinking to cheer him, whereupon his gave one solemn bark, leaving us, as he passed on, in convulsions of laughter.

The spectacle of a very fat lady with a quilt around her, hustling along to a barn which stood near, seemed unspeakably funny.

But the climax was reached when a smiling man came along, unmindful of the rain, and holding an immense piece of bread and cheese in each hand, biting first from one and then from the other. Neither of us yelled at him, but I need cautioned I had a strong desire to know something more of him.

Then the conversation turned from the ridiculous to the serious, and we wondered as to the history of that man and the other person—that is to say, we wondered what he proposed doing and we made for them quite interesting histories. Then we wandered into the realms of the alertnal, and I remember well the earnest glow of her cheek as she gave her views of this or that subject, and the luminous flash of her eyes as she turned them upon me. She wore a thin, black lace veil that day, and her bright eyes and cheeks had nothing by their partial obscurity. At about this time another couple of our acquaintance drew up, breaking up our exalted frame of mind.

By this time I thought it must be proposition to dinner hour, so I shouted to my friend:

"Ath, Mac, climb out and go over to that restaurant, or whatever it is, and bring us something to eat. Get enough for all four of us, and I'll foot the bill."

"No, thanks," was his answer. "We have our dinner with us."

"Well, I'm well, he hadn't, but it wasn't polite to say so, and so I began supportations for "Thing out," myself, but of this Miss Warner would not hear. She was not hungry, she said; and we could go as far as we had been in entirety, on my sleeve; and as I felt the light weight, I immediately made it a prisoner in my own pocket. I felt so much at ease with her, that I was in the mood to do anything, and I soon discovered that she was in great need of her handkerchief. Or drawing this out, I spy a white object flutter to the floor, and the same I had had the pleasure of picking up.

"Won't you give it to me now?" I asked, in a voice at once humble, entreating, and full of love. She understood me, for the blood leaped into her cheeks, and her eye shed a quiet sidelong glance into mine. She put it quickly away, however, and I thought of John with a jealous pang that seat all the blood back to my heart, making it beat painfully hard, slow, and uneven. I said no more, however, for I knew our friends would be sure to observe us, if we continued so long a time, and I contented myself with gazing at the blushing, half-averted face beside me, feeling desperately hungry, to find an opportunity for conversation, when a situation; when, at this opportune moment, a friend of ours, who lived near, came and invited us in to his house. As his invitation was warmly seconded by his wife, and extended also to our friends, we all four accepted, and soon found ourselves comfortably housed. Refreshments came, and in the gloaming my heart went out so strongly to my girl friend, who had seemed to be half afraid of me ever since the little episode I mentioned that I went and spoke to her, and indicated by a slight of hand the particular interest to remember. Well, I knew the thought of the handkerchief was a supposition in her mind, as it was in mine. I swallowed whatever was placed before me, I might feel, and, entranced by the agreeable, I sat, half-dazzled, finding ourselves alone, I said in a low, firm way:

"May, it was the first time I had ever called her so, "if you don't want me to have the handkerchief, say so, and I will never bother you about it again. I can give no reason for my love, or your affection, either; but oh, let me tell you to do it unless you despise me."

Her hands were fluttering here and there, her face was hidden, and she said, "I don't despise you, Mr. Raymond, but—" Here a pause ensued, and we heard some one approaching; and I was sure that is her timid and frightened manner that emboldened me to put my velvet hands on the little piece of cambric the next time I saw it, and she dared not speak for the fear of what I should say. Strangely, as she seemed to be on compact I seemed to gain it, and I felt myself master of the situation, but I restrained her almost as hotsotted to me, although I had not asked the all-important question yet. I would do so on the home drive, I told myself. But "Man proposes; God disposes;" and what should happen but that May should be sent for? I felt cross, but Mrs. Newman, her aunt, had been visiting in the parlor, and in her delirium she called all the time for her niece. Of course she had to go, and I went back to Cowel alone, for social ties bind, which have fallen to them at the expiration of long leases; and these "improvements" are now dropping in at the rate of $50,000 a day. Nobody knows how much these men are worth—their income is fabulous. There is no flag of their possessions. And as they are all rich, they are all "good fellows." Of these vast estates is a gambler and debauchee, the prodigal millionaire, and last year, it is said, his father paid off $250,000 of gambling debts for him. During the same year, the Duke of Hamilton, sold his library and pictures, and in the sale attracted great attention, even in America. The sons of these titled magnates, can run in debt, and they can, when in extremity, sell their great picture galleries, their library, their palaces, their horses, and even their jewels and their clothes; but they cannot sell or mortgage the splendid estates which they will have by and by. One of the richest noblemen in the realm was defendant in a divorce suit three or four years ago, and his wife obtained the divorce from him on the ten grounds of brutality and infidelity. Thereupon she was permanently established from court, and will never have another chance to present her respects to the Queen, while the husband's status is unimpaired. This is one of the incongruities of British law. There are other incongruities. The season here is in the heat of summer, while society goes to the country and to the seacoast in winter! Parliament sits in hot weather, and begins its sessions at 7 p. m., and continues all night. Both houses and pedestrians turn to the left instead of the right; the people look upon ice as a wicked American invention, and whenever I ring the bell for the chambermaid, up she comes with two jugs of hot water.—H. A. Crafts's London letter.

Re Didn't Relish the Blamed Joke.

"I have a good joke to tell you," said an Arkansaw Colonel to his friend the General. "The other day, you know, Higgins announced himself as a candidate for Judge. Well, I met him, and told him that you made fun of him, and declared that he was in his bearing toward you, and a suppressed, though very apparent, exultation in his manner, that I only needed a conservator of the peace, to assure me of his friendship by an almost superhuman effort.

"I saw her only once during the rest of the fall and winter. Crowd, and I could not for a moment dream of her being anything out of commonplace to her. Strange as it seemed, even to myself, I could have kissed the remotest item in her dress. I worshiped her; I actually—Hi, Ma! she stood before me, clad in the imperial robe of her womanly dignity, and I knew that, had we two been profoundly alone, I should have dared—no, for my life I should not have—so crass lay my heart, of flirting with any one.

But when John came up a moment later I cursed my stars that I had no warmth with which she received him, I resolved to pick a quarrel with him. He should not glout over me my more as having won the affections I had lost.

Another day I was to drive out. I resolved to propose that part of the country, and did so, intending to return there after a short visit, settle up my affairs, and come to Cowel. While absent on my visit, I received a letter that sent a flood of light to shed its genial warmth on my dreary, disconsolated soul. It was a letter written by Miss Warner to some of her friends. In it there was a sentence which showed me that in her secret heart she loved me as much as I had, yet, she was afraid I never would see it or she never would have written it, but it was accurst, and I got hold of it. I went back immediately, on my to find she had gone. She was sitting in the parlor, and continued the time I knew her, but this time she had no near

The new state road is in an almost impassable condition on account of mud.

A correspondent of the Bellaire Breeze regales the readers with delightful fib-fabs concerning wearing apparel. The male population will do well to keep the Breeze in their possession.

DAILY RESORTER.

President Abbott, of the state Agricultural college, Lansing, is at Harbor Point.

Burglars broke into the depot at Boyne Falls Tuesday night, and secured twenty five dollars.

John Biddle, clerk of Mackinac county, has one half dozen ten spoons which were made on Mackinac Island in 1823.

Hornce Dean the man so seriously injured by falling from a scaffold at Petoskey Monday, died Tuesday at eleven o'clock.

L. M. Uring, of Coldwater, who is sleeping at the Arlington, has been down on the Boardman fishing and caught a fine string of grayling.

The new fog horn at Wangoshance was heard Sunday for the first time. It is a much coarser whistle than the one at Skillagalee and blows every forty seconds, giving a long East.

Among those arriving on the Champlain yesterday were several resorters from southern Illinois, some of whom were very sea sick. One lady from St. Louis said she would rather walk all the way home than cross the lake again.

Bass fishing at Charlevoix is opening up nicely. Quite a number are now caught every day off the piers, and parties stopping at the Fountain City house are within a minute's walk of as fine sport as is to be had around Charlevoix.

Last Thursday was like a fall day, the wind blowing cold and strong, and the bay white with breakers. Although the day was very unpleasant it gave resorters a chance to see nature in one of its moods, and was therefore appreciated for the sake of variety.

The steam barge Truesdell, engaged in carrying iron ore from St. Ignace to Charlevoix, could not enter the Charlevoix harbor on account of the Parsons, and consequently came down to this harbor. In coming to the saw mill dock she struck a head on and jammed a bad hole in the dock.

The state Board of fish commissioners, J. H. Russell, A. J. Kellogg and J. C. Parker, are appointed by Supt. Cleuss, were at Pensokey Saturday looking for a location for a state hatchery. After making a careful examination of several sites the commission finally selected one on the little brook just east of the Arlington, and leased a piece of ground of H. O. Rose for a long term of years. Contracts for putting up buildings have been let, and work will begin at once.

John H. Donner, of Buffalo, who is largely engaged in business at St. James, Beaver Island, was in town Saturday awaiting a boat to return to the island. He states that the fishing has been very poor there this summer, and business is dull in consequence. Mr. Donner is the gentleman who originated the project for a steamer line from Harbor Springs to Mackinaw, via St. James, and although it was impossible to arrange the line this season he expects to be able to put a first class boat on the line next spring. Such a line is imperatively needed to extend a market for Harbor Springs and to furnish an outlet for Beaver Island and the north shore.

GRAND TRAVERSE HERALD.

A visit to Judge Hannah's fruit farm shows that his crop this year will average about as usual, taking all varieties together, in spite of the unfavorable season. Plums will be about half a crop, and pears the same, though in the latter named some varieties will give a splendid yield, while others are bearing scarce at all. Apples are falling somewhat, being stung by insects. But peaches are in magnificent condition. If nothing unforseen occurs, the judge will have by far the largest crop he has ever picked. In spite of judicious thinning which is constantly kept up the branches are so weighed by fruit that the trees begin to require propping even though the fruit is not nearly half grown. As in all sections of the country, they will be two or three weeks later in maturing than in former years.

Fish Tales.

On the 17th the Bloomington party caught one hundred and six fish—pickerel, bass and trout, at Round lake and Battle creek. Col. W. Crichton caught 23 black bass in the river the 23d; E. H. Miner and F. L. Miller, of Bloomington, Ill., caught fine speckled trout at Battle creek; C. W. Bateman of the same place, caught a five pounder (black bass) in Elk lake; J. A. Reeves, of Rochester, caught 12 black bass in the short dock. The 14th day of July will be remembered as the day that "Joe Minnie" caught thirty four bass at the chain; Col. W. Crichton, of Louisville, Ky., caught 13; J. C. Green and Geo. McAdams, of Louisville, caught thirty-two trout at Yuba; Col. Crichton, of Louisville, twenty-three bass in the river. On the 24th the Bloomington party caught twenty-fish; Major Dudley of Nashville, Tenn., caught four bass; J. A. Reeves, of Rochester, N. Y., caught fifteen bass after ten; S. Guy Sea'and H. Grosse, of Chicago, caught fifteen black bass before breakfast. In the afternoon they caught fifty-eight perch, seventy six rock bass and three black bass, and in the evening Mr. Sea wound up the day's sport by capturing twelve black bass at the saw mill. On the 19th J. A. Reeves, of Rochester, N. Y., caught seven bass at the short dock; Eddie Barbour, of Louisville, Ky., caught five at the same place, the Bloomington party caught fifteen bass and eighty-two trout at Round lake and Battle creek; "Joe Minnie" caught eleven bass at mouth of the river; Major R. H. Dudley, of Nashville, Tenn., caught a three pound bass at the mouth of the river. [Lake View House, bill of fare, Elk Rapids.

"Here is a fish (real and line) story and a true one. Monday last, at Carp lake, Rev. W. S. Crow and J. W. Milliken were busily engaged among the bass and pickerel, when Mr. Milliken, being engaged with a trolling line carelessly laid his rod down in the boat, and a big bass improved the opportunity offered to secure a fine rod, reel and line, and grubbing the hook, which hung over, a few feet from the boat, made off with it. Away went rod all. Thus endeth the first chapter. Yesterday morning Mr. Crow was fishing near the same spot and, hooking a fine bass, began reeling him in, and there was the identical fish that stole Mr. Milliken's rod two days before, for following the fish came a hundred feet of line and then the rod, and Mr. Crow brought all home and returned the stolen property to the right owner. Thus endeth the second chapter. [Herald, Traverse City.

Messrs. J. B. Lancaster and J. O. Hutchins of this place, Geo. Steven of Traverse City, and Will Steven of Glasgow, Scotland, a nephew Mr. Steven, captured about sixty pounds grayling in Cannon creek Monday. [Fife Lake Comet.

Henry Passage has just returned from a ten days' recreation at Petoskey. He tells, of course, a big fish story, in which he, Mr. C. B. Randall and 30 brook trout in 10 minutes are the principal figures. [Kalamazoo Telegraph.

We have recently noticed several fine strings of fish which have been caught at Crooked lake by our resorter friends. It is evident the fish in that lake are hungry. [Resorter.

A party of Waughtonsingers, consisting of Mr. Booth, G. E. Smith, Mr. Windoes and their wives, and Miss Armstrong went fishing at Crooked lake and brought back a fine string of pickerel and bass. [Resorter.

Tariff Reform.

Charlotte Leader.

Congressman Carlisle, of Kentucky, has been interviewed in respect to his position on the tariff. He thinks his opponents who charge him with favoring free trade ought to give him credit for having at least sense enough to know that such a thing is not only impracticable, but impossible under the circumstances now existing. Of the practical tariff reform he says, he says:

"Practical tariff reform means a gradual reduction or abolition of duties without a violent disturbance of the financial records of the government or the industrial interests of the people. To that object and upon what seems to me the only practicable mode of attaining it, any given time necessary for the purpose, I have always been willing to vote and I shall continue to do so in all proper in all bearings, but I think that every intelligent and honest man will agree that it is useless to maintain duties of 100 per cent and upward in the hope of being able to carry out the purpose of enabling certain individuals or classes to get rich at the expense of others, or the expense of the community at large; greater misfortune could befall the democratic party and the country than to have a democratic house organized for the express purpose of using its power in overturning these republican schemes of plunder by force, while on the republican side of the house, and in the republican party as it is now constituted, there are, I am sure, elements in the democratic party sufficiently strong to compel its representatives to shield some measure of reform, if it ever attempts it.

"It would be a serious evil if it could be dangerous to attempt to impose the great question of tariff reform and equitable taxation upon the subject. We cannot choose the democratic party, and the country is entitled to a republican

WILLIAM HENRY OSTRANDER was hanged at Utica, N. Y., for the murder of his brother, George Lyman Ostrander, Dec. 30, last. Upon the scaffold he did not want any one to pray for him. Prayer was offensive to the devil, after which Ostrander spoke for three or four minutes in a rambling manner, declaring his innocence, saying that he had had a fair trial, and denouncing the witnesses against the county for hanging him. He was frequently profane and obscene. Ending with the exclamation, "But we for hanging, see, you can't make Life be so good to me." Before the execution he confessed to hold his spiritual advisers he did not forgive his relatives, and would not ask God to forgive him.

THE WEST.

The wife of United States Senator W. B. Allison, while suffering from an insane attack, drowned herself in the Mississippi at Dubuque, Iowa. Mrs. Allison left home in the afternoon, telling her servant that she was going to one of the most laugh lines. Instead of this, however, taking her carriage she walked down the river, apparently in direction toward the country, where she has been accustomed to take almost daily walks. It is conjectured that she was seized with a fit of insanity in the afternoon during the afternoon, where she was seen by several persons walking rapidly and unknowing, as she. Not returning by supper time, a search was instituted, and she was found to be the same was given and brought home in the evening. The alleged morning for body was by the following morning for body was the city. She had cut up her pocketses, pinned a shawl around her head, and evidently stood her neck then walked deliberately into the river, about three or five feet from the land, laid down and crowned herself with a foot of water, and lay two hours and half feet of water. She was of a highly nervous temperament, and during the last few years has suffered from and been treated for mental disorder. Her husband is a member of Congress from Iowa, and is now in Washington. Her father, Judge Smith, and other relatives reside in Dubuque. ....Mrs. Mary Ellis, of Chicago, was arrested for a second time for the murder of her husband, Dr. Ellis, in Chicago, and committed to the county jail. THE Treasury officials are very much pleased at the appearance of another counterfeit coin which is more dangerous than the average caper. It is a $5 gold piece, and is worth $3.50 in gold. The counterfeit is so good to be the best ever made, and its perfect. The counterfeit parts are made had the government dies have been tampered with, or an impression taken from them. Efforts are being made to find the genuine $5 piece, the mint is ready to receive it, and it will be detected by the bankers.

A SUMMARY of the annual report of the Chicago and Northwestern Railway Company is as follows: Road earned over $2,000,000 in excess of expenses, about $2,000,000 in excess of interest accrued, the road earned enough to pay the common interest. The road earned enough to pay the entire dividends on the preferred stock of the company, an increase of $2,000,000 in gross earnings over the previous year

The Strike Ended.

The telegraph strike has virtually ended, the strikers generally having returned to work, or signified a willingness to do so. In Detroit the Western Union superintendent refused to receive back any of the striking lady telegraphers, and the News says that on this account none of the really first-class men have yet asked for employment. In New York the main office was besieged from an early hour Saturday morning by nearly one hundred operators seeking reinstatement. But few young end girls were among the number. Superintendent Dunstone was busily engaged discriminating between applications from first-class workmen and those who were considered second and third rate, only the best workmen being taken back and quite a number of operators were disappointed by being rejected. Those operators who were taken on after the strike commenced will be retained by the company in their present positions. Since the strike was declared ended only twelve women have been received back into the employ of the company. The total number of women who have applied for reinstatement is over forty-five, so that thirty three of that number are left without work. Seventy-five male operators were taken back on Saturday. At Pittsburgh, of sixty-five who quit work at the beginning of the strike, all but fifteen were taken back, upon promising to renounce the brotherhood. The knights of labor are severely denounced by the strikers for failing to give them the support promised. At Washington, at a quarter past twelve the striking operators ended in a body on manager Clark of the Western Union, and stated that as the strike had been declared ended, they were desirous of resuming work. Mr. Clark received them affably, and informed them that all the first-class positions were filled but five. At Chicago the operators kept applying for work in small squads up to one o'clock, when a stampede occurred, and from that on till a late hour the hallway leading to the office of superintendent Tubbs was crowded. A number of those applying were refused places for reasons best known to the officials. Principally, the entire working force of the Baltimore & Ohio were taken back intact. About one hundred operators met in Ulrich hall, when the leaders acknowledged the cause was lost and advised the men to seek work. The Chicago office is now fully manned. At Cleveland a large proportion have applied and find that out of forty-five places they left nearly three weeks ago all have been permanently filled except nine, consequently thirty-six of the local strikers must seek situations elsewhere. At Cincinnati, Sept. 8th, her required the strikers to subscribe to a contract abjuring the brotherhood. But one striker signed and went to work. Nearly all the lady operators who struck will lose their situations as their places have been filled.

Notes and News.

Clawson wheat suffered most from wet weather during the last harvest.

Judge Jeremiah S. Black died at his home in York, Pa., last Sunday morning.

Republicans would like to have Tilden nominated as a candidate for the presidency.

The highest estimated yield per acre of wheat in the state is 50 bushels, in Chippewa county.

The apple harvest is estimated for the state at 41 per cent of an average crop; peaches the same.

The name of S. S. Cox, of New York, has been mentioned for speaker of the next U. S. house of representatives.

The secretary of state reports 13,135,570 bushels of wheat marketed in Michigan during the year ending August 1st.

The following appropriations are recommended for the next year for continuance of improvements of the Michigan harbors named: Ganeivoix, $40,000; Frankfort, $30,000; Portage Lake harbor of refuge, $140,000; Manistee, $50,000; Ludington, $40,000; Pentwater, $20,000; White River, $5,000; Muskegon, $50,000; Grand Haven, $250,000; Black Lake $20,000, Saugatuck, $112,000; South Haven, $20,000; St. Joseph, $30,000.

In another paragraph it is intimated that immigration increases the home demand for provisions and makes prices higher. But the farmer pays more than the increase whenever he buys a protected article, so in the end he gains nothing.

It is said that President Arthur, during his recent trip, invariably refused to appear on the platform of the car at stations where large crowds were assembled, some of whom had come many miles to get a glimpse of their chief magistrate. He evidently cares little for the "common people."

Some of the protectionist organs that are so fond of standing up for protection as the safeguard of American labor, are now demanding in behalf of the monopolists that congress shall so legislate as to make striking a crime! What do you think of it, laboring men?—[Chicago Sun Democrat.

Up to August 1st Gov. Begole had issued nineteen pardons. Gov. Bagley in 1873, issued twenty three pardons, in the same length of time, and in his first term, twelve, he issued twenty pardons to convicts. Those who find so much fault with the present governor would do well to look back over the record of those who went before him.—[Charlotte Leader.

The telegraph operators are leaving the brotherhood one by one and returning to work at the old rate and the indications seem to be that the Western Union will eventually gain at all points. This has been an orderly, well-conducted strike, free from violence, and places the operator far above the average employes in intelligence, business capality, and even temper. They gained, and have retained, the sympathy of the masses by their gentlemanly conduct.

Indications are that in Vermont and Indiana the bloody shirt will be the prominent feature in the political campaign of next year. John C. New, assistant savior of Indiana in 1880, is in favor of "injecting the old rebel yell" into the campaign, and up in Vermont the war of the rebellion still rages in the rural towns. In the Green Mountain state the republican sun never sets, while in the Hoosier state it rises effulgently when four hundred thousand dollars and a rebel yell are injected into a campaign.—[Jackson Patriot.

A prominent Ohio republican said to an Enquirer correspondent Thursday: "National issues must be brought into the campaign. It will help us get money. We have poor men on our ticket from top to bottom. There is no one to put up, and the committee need money. Sherman is not putting up, and Foster thinks he has done his share. Besides, the governor has been going into mining schemes, and is hard up. The presidential election of 1884 will be greatly affected by the result next October in Ohio, and this is what we must bring out prominently. When the national phase to this election is fully developed the manufacturing interests of the country will become aroused, and those interested in preserving the tariff will help the republicans. Then we will be in better shape.

Straws are very numerous now-a-days showing the tendencies of the republican party toward the monopolies of the country. Almost every act of that party for the past fifteen years has been in this direction, until to-day scarcely a man can be found who has the hardihood to arise and dispute it. The position of leading republican papers on the recent telegraphers strike, is only further evidence that the party has sold out to the capitalists of the country, the determination evidently being to carry enough of the intelligence of the people along to control everything in the interests of the comparative few. In referring to the strike of telegraphers in this country, and the position of leading republican papers regarding this class of laboring men, the Evening News says: The New York Tribune is savage in its denunciations; the New York Commercial Advertiser lets no day pass without chasing them; the New York Post denounces it law which shall forbid telegraph and railroad employes to strike; the Chicago Inter Ocean calls them fools and conspirators; the Chicago Tribune declares that if telegraph and railroad companies are under a legal obligation to serve the public their employes should be under a legal obligation to serve them; the Detroit Post and Tribune shouts in the same key, and though it does not demand in express terms that they be deprived of their liberty, it regards their exercise of liberty as immoral. This is a sort of harmony which can do the republican party no good in the approaching death struggle with its old enemy. Unanimity cannot be the result of chance. There must be universal aristocratic tendencies in a party whose organs all instinctively rush to the side of monopoly in its numerous contest with labor.—[Charlotte Leader.

A little the saddest wail we have have heard from the protection camp comes from the National Republican. It says that "under the protective tariff system the revenues which are needed to pay off our national debt, and furnish the means for the support of government are paid by foreigners. The free trade policy would saddle this burden upon our own people. If the free trade policy should ever prevail, the tax collector will enter every house in the land and demand the taxes on every article of use, necessity and adornment, and failing to collect it, will seize and sell the property of the citizen." The foregoing is simply twaddle of course. But if true, it would be downright dishonesty to force other countries into paying our debts. Fortunately for foreigners it is not true. It would be as reasonable for the government of Canada to compel a scheme whereby we could force Eaton Rapids to pay our city expenses, build our fire and school houses, and put down our cistern wells. It is surprising to find a newspaper representing "honest money" and all that goes with it, instructing our people how they may avoid paying their honest debts. Perhaps Mahone owns a controlling interest of this Washington paper.—[Charlotte Leader.

All the republican talk about protecting Americans against the so-called pauper labor of other countries would perhaps be reasonable if it was more uniform in its application, and benefited the laborer as well as the manufacturer. But it does not. On the contrary, the government pays annually thousands of dollars in circulating books, pamphlets, and circulars to induce the slaves of foreign governments to come here and become American citizens. And when they arrive, they are frequently marched in droves to take the place of an American laborer, where skill and education are not required. If the American desires to hold his place, he must work for the same price as the proper immigrant. Great corporations, such for instance as railroad and lumber companies, find it to their interest to encourage immigration for this reason alone. After a time the prospect of better pay causes the immigrant to gravitate to cities and towns and engage in competition with the American in all grades of unskilled labor, in nearly every instance the native coming to the foreign price or losing his place. And our own state of Michigan has paid thousands of dollars to assist the monopolists in this very work. The first commissioner of immigration and his deputy did their work well, and published an excellent book. The result is just what was intended, and is just what the monopolists want. It helps to protect the manufacturer by keeping wages down. It does not, and never will, benefit the laborer by bringing wages up, and reducing the cost of living. It is so many more mouths to feed with what we do raise, which would tend to make prices higher. We say give the laborer a chance.

The proposition that the federal government should acquire the telegraph lines of the country and run them as it does its mail service, as a gigantic governmental monopoly, ought to receive no favor at the hands of any thoughtful American, whether Democrat, National or Republican. The great problem of American politics today is to restrict the great and growing patronage of the government, which is an engine of tyranny, corruption and intimidation is becoming all the time more powerful. There is no reason to expect in favor of turning over the government which will not apply equally well to the railway service, the house one business, and banking business of the country. The telegraph or railroad service in the hands of the government, the employes would soon become the political servants of the party in power, and the civil servants proper of the general public, and the already dangerous power of the government through the abuse of patronage would be greatly augmented. The indication are that it soon be necessary for congress to pass comprehensive laws regulating both the telegraph and the railway service in order to remedy the injustice perpetrated by some of these gigantic corporations, but for the government to acquire the ownership of the telegraph and railway lines, or of either, would be a cure worse than the disease.—[Grand Rapids Democrat.

A resident of a neighboring city went to Petoskey about six weeks ago in the hopeless condition of a consumptive, and the bracing invigorating climate of that region would enable him to regain his shattered health. He was sent home in a coffin last week. Yes, said the widow to a condoling friend after the funeral, "poor John has left me, but I shall always be thankful that he died in such a healthy place."—[Lansing Journal.

The Gold Supply.

The future supply of gold, even for coinage purposes, says a contemporary, is beginning to be one of more than common interest. Ancient history is resplendent with the prodigal display of gold by the barbaric peoples of the Orient. Arabia, Egypt and Africa, according to this same authority, were prolific in their production of this precious metal. Pliny states that Crœsus returned from his conquest with 34,000 pounds of gold (about $10,000,000). Alexander the Great brought $100,000,000 in gold from Persia. But at the same time, these great fields, so renowned in history, are barren, so far as their production of gold is concerned, and it is evident that Europe can no longer be depended upon to perform the impossible part in furnishing a supply of gold to meet the demands of the future. Even in this country the statistics of production show a constant and marked decline in gold, although the field is largely exhausted and mining is more thoroughly prosecuted than before.

A Grey Hotlentot.

The English papers are discussing the question, Can a clergyman marry himself? There is a "title with an estate at stake, which is sufficient excuse for a prolonged contest. The late Earl of Stanford settled £30,000 a year in strict entail upon the holder of the title. The present Earl of Stanford married himself, when he went as a missionary to Africa as simple Rev. Harry Grey, to a Hottentot lady. She still enjoys his undivided affection, and, as she has presented him with a son and heir, the question is mooted whether the marriage is legal and the juvenile Hottentot will be entitled to a seat in the House of Lords.

The Statesman announces an increase of 192 subscribers since last February. We are pleased to note our neighbor's prosperity.

The firm of Cooper & Hutchins has been dissolved, Mr. Henry C. Cooper continuing the furniture business at the old stand.

Dr. Cramer has just received thirty five thousand envelopes, all sizes and shades, on which he can duplicate Chicago and Grand Rapids prices.

Last Sunday evening a party of six in a small skiff had a narrow escape from being crushed while trying to dodge between the Lawrence and the bridge as she was hulling at Fox's dock.

The average yield per acre of wheat in Charlevoix county, as estimated in the office of the secretary of state from reports of correspondents, is 17.27 bushels; oats, 35 bushels; barley, 27 bushels.

Mr. H. L. Page, the new hardware merchant, successor to Hodge & Nichols, of East Jordan, exhibits his faith in printers' ink by taking a full-page advertisement in the last issue of the Enterprise.

F. S. Johnson has growing on his lot in this village a sun flower, the stalk of which measures nine feet long and 8½ inches in circumference; it has 45 flower buds, and one of its leaves measures 17½ inches across. How is that for a sun flower?—[Statesman.

Last Friday morning E. A. Easton, whose farm is about 1¼ miles from town, brought us the finest specimen of oats we have seen this year. It measures six feet and four inches in length. Hugh Miller also brought us a nice specimen raised on the farm of Mr. Cash, Eveline township, measuring 5 feet 7½ inches.—[Statesman.

The lecture of Mrs. Simpson at the opera house Sunday evening was well patronized, and quite satisfactory in originality and force. Coming as they do from a person in her position, her remarks will have as great, if not greater influence with those who need the support than the same arguments from a lecturer of national reputation.

Nearly a hundred and fifty Charlevoix people came down on the excursion Saturday evening, and a great many more went down to Charlevoix from Harbor Springs and Petoskey, making it the largest excursion of the season. The playing of the Charlevoix ladies band was the occasion of much favorable comment.—[Resorter.

We see it stated that the Chicago & West Michigan railway company will soon extend their road to Baldwin on the Flint & Pere Marquette road, from thence to Traverse City, Elk Rapids, Charlevoix, and Petoskey. If this is not the program it ought to be. It will be, too, if the G. R. & I. R. R. does not hurry up and take the cake.—[Elk Rapids Progress.

N. B. Willis, recently clerk in the Fountain City house, Charlevoix, was at Harbor Springs and Petoskey a few days ago, claiming to be on a fishing trip. His wife arrived in Petoskey yesterday in search of him telling a pitiful story of desertion. They have only been married two years and have no children. The poor woman seems most frantic with grief, and she has the sympathy of all who have heard her story. Willis is a gentlemanly appearing man, and does not seem capable of such meanness.—[Resorter.

James Morrison, for some time a jobber in getting out hemlock bark, skipped last Saturday night, owing different persons in this vicinity about $4,000. W. T. Addis is the largest loser, Morrison being behind about $2,000 in his accounts with Mr. A. The other $2,000 he owed to different business men here, and to poor hardworking men.—[Statesman.

The East Jordan Enterprise comes to us this week again enlarged, and this time improved. It is now a tenpage paper, pasted at the back, with head trimmed, like a pamphlet, with advertisements well distributed over the paper. This is a long step forward in the march of improvement, and we congratulate our brethren on their evidence of prosperity.

The Lawrence went up to Boyne last Sunday, and it is said that the natives were so tickled over it that they flocked to the dock from miles around, and fairly besieged the boat when she stopped. An increase in business might get such boats regularly, but it cuts the life out of our own boats which make regular daily trips. Be content with home industry.

We have received a circular announcing the meeting of the western Michigan press association, commencing at Reed City, next Tuesday, and regret that business necessities will not permit us to attend. The program promises a most delightful time, so far as the excursion is concerned, and the papers to be read cannot fail to be of interest and profit to the profession.

Local politicians can "protect home industry" by discouraging all attempts to get the large lake steamers to go to Boyne or East Jordan. While these large boats might create a little more activity in the villages named, it takes so much traffic away from our Pine lake boats, whose owners are interested in the growth and development of our village, and whose earnings are expended among our people.

Mosquito gals were the most severe of the month. The bay presented a grand appearance, and the surf was watched by hundreds of appreciative visitors. The wind blew down several small trees at Bay View, one of which fell across the track near the depot. The awning of the big "tent on the beach" was laid flat on the ground, the occupants crawling out from under it like field mice from a corn shock.—[Resorter.

The ladies of the Congregational church held a bazar at the opera house on Tuesday and Wednesday of this week, which was quite successful both in attendance and receipts. The ladies have worked hard for this and deserve all they received. The articles for sale embraced the useful as well as ornamental, and sales were good the first day. The refreshments were excellent, but the stock of ice cream was not sufficient on Tuesday. In one corner was an exhibition of fine arts, embracing a great number of subjects, and impressing the visitor with their novelty. The gross receipts of the entertainment were $107.77.

A curious piece of carved work, apparently from some old-time ship, was picked up on the beach the other day, by Captain Martin, of this place. It is a timber twelve or fourteen feet long, at one end of which is a rude representation of a fish head, on the gills the word "commerce" carved in gothic letters about three inches long. Crossed in the center, and tied with a bow-knot, are two spears,—or perhaps as near that as anything,—and at the other end an anchor entwined with two serpents. The ground work was painted red, and the raised portions were up, nearly gilt, but this last has seen pretty much worn off. There is a difference of opinion as to the antiquity of the craft, and when she was lost. Very likely her history would be interesting if it was known.

New Boiler Works.

The new boiler works of Mr. Joseph Hyland are so nearly completed that he expects to be able to begin work next week. Workmen are to-day putting the shingles on, and by Saturday night the shop will be finished and the tools in position for business. The following from the Manistee Democrat will show with what esteem Mr. Hyland was held in his old home: "Joseph Hyland of Manistee, has located at Charlevoix, Mich., and will leave this city on Monday next. He is considered to be one of the best boiler and sheet iron workers in the country. References, T. J. Ramsdell, R. G. Peters, Tabors & sons, Babcock & Co., Engelmann & Co., Mowatt, Wilson and others. The good citizens of Charlevoix are fortunate, indeed, to have such a superb workman as Joseph Hyland in their midst. He is an old citizen of Manistee and therefore we don't like to part with him, nor his business; any success crown his business efforts! It will pay you to give him your patronage."

The following are the clearances from the port of Charlevoix as reported from the custom house for the week ending Tuesday, August 21:

CHOOSING A WIFE.

In from the hay field came John Westlake and went into the cool sitting-room, throw himself upon a sofa, picked up a paper, and read as follows.

"A young man having matrimony in view should ascertain before taking this important step what the homes keeping abilities of his intended one are. Many a man has had both fortune and happiness wrecked by overlooking this important point.

"Any man, by a little strategy, can obtain the desired information, but one have some business at her father's house early in the morning, or if she lives by the roadside in one of the end planes in at the open door or window and thus see which mother or daughter, cooks the breakfast.

"Or he can take a position behind some tree in the orchard, commanding a view of the barnyard, and find out who does the milking—the knowledge can be obtained, and it should be obtained by some means, and in this case the end justifies the means."

"What paper is this?" said John, looking for the heading. "The Cramptonville Herald. Yes, and this is good advice for a farmer's son. Now," soliloquized he, "I have about concluded to marry Mary Johnson—that is, if she will have me, and I think she will—but I must confess that I do not know much about her abilities as a housekeeper. I know that everything in Cozie home—that is, as far as I have seen—is in perfect order; but who takes care of the house I don't know—perhaps Mary, perhaps Mrs. Johnson. Mary, I know, has taste, for she comes into company as neatly dressed as any young woman in the neighborhood; but then she has had the advantage of two or three years'city schooling, which fact may account for her knowledge of dress, but it argues somewhat against her knowledge of domestic affairs—but I will find out."

"John, dinner," said his little sister Kate, poking her curly head in at the door.

While eating, John outlined a plan of operation.

"I will," thought he, "get up early to-morrow morning, go across the meadow to Johnson's corn-field, and then through the corn-field to the barnyard, cross the barnyard to the meadow fence, and then creep along this until I get to the bushes in front of the summer-kitchen window, where I will hide, and there, not more than a rod away, I can see everything that goes on.

"What a splendid General I'd make," said he, chuckling, as he went to the field by himself—and the more he contemplated his plan the more he became convinced of its brilliancy of conception and ease of execution.

"I will tell Mary," said he, "of my strategy after we are married—that is, if she suits me, and I think she will.

Love, continued he, "is said to be blind, but I will show Mr. Cupid that if he has pierced my heart he has not affected my vision. And again, getting married is said to be like putting your hand into a bag in which are nine—nine snakes and one eel; but before I put in my hand I intend to see the eel and know just where to reach for it."

Next morning John arose very early, dressed quickly, and went down stairs very quietly.

Going first to the barn he went half way around it to get it between himself and the house and then struck a bee-line across the new-mown meadow towards Squire Johnson's corn-field.

He had not gone far before he heard a noise behind him, and looking round he saw his old dog Nero at his heels.

"Go home, you old scoundrel, go home!" exclaimed John fiercely.

Nero looked up into his master's face with an injured expression, then turned round and trotted slowly homeward.

But he did not go far; stopping on a little hillock, he turned round, sat down and gazed after John.

Concluding that there was some misunderstanding, he resolved to try again, and in a few minutes was close at John's heels.

"You old villain! Didn't I tell you to go home?" said John, turning round and making a pass at him with his foot.

Nero was now convinced that his company was not desired, and the sticks and stones that followed him as he moved briskly homeward had a tendency to confirm him in his conclusion.

"The confounded old scamp," muttered John, "would have all the Squire's dogs about me in less time a minute, and then good-by to my plan."

Mary Johnson was the daughter, as we have seen, of Squire Johnson, who lived on the farm adjoining Westlake's.

She was a handsome, intelligent girl, and of course a good housekeeper, as most intelligent country girls are and as all girls ought to be. Mary's several years at school had made some change in her, but John found to his sorrow that she had not lost the habit of early rising.

This morning she arose somewhat earlier than usual and went to the barnyard to do the milking. As she was about to begin she glanced towards the corn-field and saw some one coming.

"Who can that be?" she said. "As sure as the world it's John Westlake! I wonder what he is after! And he's coming right here, and I'm nothing on but this thin gown! Oh, dear! what shall I do?"

Her first impulse was to run, but observing that he was coming very continently, and in fear of being seen, and knowing that she was undiscovered, curiosity prompted her to stay; so glibly behind a hay-stack near by, she was in a position to note his actions undiscovered.

Coming to the barn-yard, he ran across it, in a half-stooping posture, to the meadow fence. Getting inside, he began to creep along the fence towards the house, much like a savage trying to steal upon his enemy.

"What does he mean?" said Mary, her blue eyes dilating in wonder.

The summer-kitchen was a short distance from the main building and between it and the meadow fence was the spring.

From the spring issued quite a large stream, flowing under the fence and across the meadow.

Where it flowed under the fence, under the summer-kitchen, was a small leaf dense thicket of alders, hazels and wild grapevines.

This was the point for which John was making.

Arriving within a few rods of the house, he ran, stooping, across the little open space of meadow between the fence and stream, then, behind the alders that lined its bank he hurried along until he reached the thicket, in which he crawled, and had himself so that he could have a view of the window.

Mary's eyes flashed in anger.

"So, John," said she, "you have been peeping into Cramptn Herald. Well, we'll see how much knowledge you'll obtain for your trouble."

Then, taking a roundabout way, so that he might not see her, Mary entered the house and went upstairs to her room and sat down near a window that overlooked his riding-place.

"What a splendid place for observation," said John to himself, as he fixed himself among the bushes.

Just then up went the window and out came a pail of dirty water, thrown by the strong arms of Mrs. Johnson.

"Ugh! ugh!" said he, crawling backward, as the dirty shower came dripping down through the leaves, "this is a circumstance for which I made no calculation."

"Hello, where is Mary?" called Mrs. Johnson to one of the girls.

"Upstairs," said Belle.

"Why, what's she doing there? Why doesn't she come down and do the milking?"

"I don't know," was the reply. "She says she's not coming down for some time; you needn't wait breakfast for her."

"Just as I expected!" said John with a sad countenance. "Those boarding schools will ruin any girl. I suppose they'll carry her breakfast to her. I guess I'll go now; I've learned as much as I want to know."

But John did not go just then; something again occurred for which he had made no calculation. The Squire had several dogs, and among them was one ferocious old fellow called Bull. Attracted by the smell of victuals, for breakfast was now cooking, they had gathered about the kitchen door and sitting there with wagging tails were awaiting their morning meal.

At the first rustle of the leaves as John turned round, they pricked up their ears. In a moment, after he had moved again, they were over the fence, prowling and howling and prancing around the thicket as if it contained their greatest enemy.

"Hi, there! Hid, Bull! Go in, Hover! Hurrah, Bob, dogs have got a rabbit!" shouted the boys, running out and bombarding the thicket with a shower of sticks and stones, which made John his as that as a skirmisher under the fire of a whole line of concealed enemies.

"Get out there! Get out! What in thunder's all this fuss about?" growled the Squire, coming to the spring to wash and thinking the dogs were after a cat or a bird.

In a few minutes the family went to breakfast, and the dogs left the thicket.

The coast seemed clear.

"Now or never," said John, as he began to crawl toward the edge at which he came in.

A low savage growl stopped him; there, right in front, was old Bull, stretched out, with his head between his paws, winking at him and seeming to say: "I've got you now, young fellow."

"Poor old Bull!" said John, coaxingly.

A low growl was his only answer.

"My poor old fellow! Come here, won't you?" said John, patting on his knee.

Another growl, fiercer than ever, built was too old to be flattered.

John now was mad.

"Confound you, you old scoundrel!" said John, "if I ever catch you away from this place I'll murder you."

Bull only wirkled in reply to this abuse.

John now tried to get out at another place, but Bull moved around upon the line of incitement and took position in John's front again.

John was not usually profane, but just now he used an expression or two denoting his willingness to see Bull in a warmer clime than this.

Breakfast was over. The Squire and the boys came out, took their seythes from the apple-tree and began to whet them.

The question that troubled John now was, where are they going to mow? His fears were soon confirmed.

"Where shall we begin?" said one of the boys.

"Right here in the corner, and mow round the thicket," was the squire's reply.

John groaned in spirit.

They rubbed the brine and began.

"Come out there, Bull," said the old man, catching sight of the dog.

Bull was slow about moving.

"Take, take him to the barn and tie him."

Jake let him away, but Bull espy now and then looked back as if he expected to John rush out.

John kept very still.

It was impossible to see him from the outside and every round took them farther away, lessening the danger of discovery.

John now began to think it was time to be on or at least hear something of Mary. She, from her window, saw his predicament and was delighted with it.

"He is safe, now, till noon," said she. "He won't come out while father and the boys are in the field. And now I must breakfast and then dress, for to-day Cousin John comes from the city."

After a while John heard a carriage come up the drive and stop at the front door. Then he heard Mary's voice exclaiming:

"Why, John, I am so glad to see you!"

"Kiss me, darling!" said the newcomer in a low tone.

"Ah!" said John in the thicket, "she has another John, has she?"

This was the last of Mary for about an hour; then he heard her and the newcomer and the boys chatting and laughing.

They came to the apple-tree, and musical themes were throwing fruit at each other. Tired of this, they came marching arm in arm to the spring.

John fixed himself so as to get a good view through the leaves.

The man seated himself as he saw what a tall, stylish, good-looking fellow the new John was. A savage feeling took possession of him.

The fellow had his arm around her waist, and was looking into her handsome, glowing face, as she chatted gaily with something more, as John thought, than mere admiration.

After taking a drink, she proposed that they play tag, and would throw water farthest into the bushes.

"Agreed!" said he, and at it they went.

It seemed to be fun for them, but it was anything but fun for John.

The new John became excited, and, to show his superiority, stooped down to fill his empty pail seized a bucket.

The water came down in torrents.

John in the bushes shivered and gnashed his teeth in rage.

"I see how he wished that he could turn himself into a calf, gorilla—anything—so that he could rush out unknown among the meadow.

They soon, however, became tired of this, and concluded the exercise by sprinkling water upon each other. Then he arranged her curls, brushed the water from her hers, took her face between his hands, made her lips pout, held her for a moment, and—shall we tell it?—stooped down and kissed her.

John saw it all. The "green-eyed monster" took full possession of his soul; he felt as blood-thirsty as a tiger, and was on the point of springing from his lair and throttling the fellow at his feet, but prudence stayed him.

Another hour passed. The sun's rays began to fall vertically through the leaves, and the mowers, making large circles a long way off, had done, as he thought, a good half-day's work. Would dinner-time never come? A regular Joshua's day, thought John, as he waited and longed for the ringing of the bell.

Soon it rang, and a few minutes after the Squire and his boys were at the spring washing, preparatory to eating.

"Who was that in the field talking to you?" said Mrs. Johnson to the Squire.

"Little Tommy Westlake," was the reply.

"What did he want?"

"Why, he wanted to know if we'd seen John today. He says John got up very early this morning and went away, leaving his work undone, and they have not seen him since."

"Strange," said Mrs. Johnson.

"Mall, Moll! Hurrah, Moll!" shouted one of the boys.

"What?" said Mary, coming to the door.

"John Westlake has found another rabbit and ran off with him."

"All right," was the reply, "let him go. I can get another John."

"She has got another one already," muttered John.

They were all now at dinner; everything was quiet.

"Give me liberty or give me death!" said John, as he crawled out.

Now, like a savage fleeing from his enemies, he ran, stooping, along the fence and past the barn to the corn-field. As he sprang over the corn-field fence the dogs caught a sight of him and started in pursuit, yelping and howling, while old Bull, from the barn, with lond-mouthed bays, indicated his desire to join in the chase.

"What in the world is the matter?" exclaimed the Squire, as he quit carving to listen to the uproar.

"Hurrah!" said the boys, jumping up and running to the door.

"What's there?" said the squire.

"Something in the corn-field," was the reply.

"Come! cattle again. Go over, Tom, and put them out."

Tom, when he started, saw something twinkling about in the middle of the field, but when he got there he saw nothing, though he met the dogs howling wand found and apparently badly frightened—John, when he found them about to overtake him, had stopped by a stone pile and had given them a reception which they could not stand.

"You were hard on some thing!"

"Nothing in the field," but it was mystery which he could not explain, why the dogs seemed so badly scared.

John when he reached home went round the barn, through the garden and into the house the back way.

Going upstairs quietly to his room, he put on a suit of clean clothes; then going down as quietly as he came up, he reached the barn by the roundabout course he had taken when coming in.

Now from the barn he started and marched boldly up through the yard toward the house.

The family were at dinner. Walking in he hung up his hat, pulled out his handkerchief, wiped his face and said:

"Its time yet, I see."

"We're glad to see you back, John," said his mother; "but we'd like to know where you've been."

"Yes, give an account of yourself," said his sister Julia. "We had about concluded that you and Mary had gone to Gretna Green, or some similar place."

"Well, I'll tell you," said John. "You know I told you a few days ago that some of the academy boys were on an excursion to the city this morning and wished me to go with them. I did not intend to go when I went to bed, yesterday, but when I woke up I found I was so early that I concluded I would go over this morning and see them off."

"You knew the train start very early, and I expected it to back in time for breakfast; but when I got on my horse he seemed so fresh and gay that I concluded I would ride on to Cramptn and see how the train was going to start, and of course I was carried to town and had to wait there until the return train, which, you know, does not come out until noonnow."

This explanation was satisfactory to all except John, who felt that he had been working up all the foreness for this occasion. He felt bad over it, yet it seemed a fitting conclusion for the blunders of the day—how else could he connect Mary with the world he would not have any one but himself know?

That afternoon he was in anything but a good humor. In the hay-field he worked by himself as much as possible.

He seemed to have a special ill-feeling toward his cousin; if one of them came up to him, no matter how friendly, he was sure to get a snap over his shoulder with the hay-fork that sent his feeling. The relationship that existed between Mary and the other John was a question that now troubled him.

I confess he was of the opinion that he could have her for the asking, and now it seemed evident that she already belonged to some one. The boss, or the danger of losing her, made him realize how much he loved her, and like any another man under like circumstances, he was willing to overlook a little.

"Domestic abilities!" said he. "What do I care about her domestic abilities? I will have Mary Johnson if she will have me, enough to take a loaf of bread!"

That afternoon he made a resolution.

"To-morrow evening," said he, "I will go over and tell her frankly how much I love her, and ask her to have me mine."

The next evening John drove up to Johnson's door. Mary came out to greet him, and gave him her usual cordial welcome. But John was cold, while she said, somewhat mischievously:

"By the way, John, you walked over last time, did you not?"

"No, replied he, not comprehending "don't you remember, I rode old Clarke?"

John could not muster courage to say what he desired until leaving time, and then, as they stood upon the porch, he with his arm about her waist, told his love, and asked her to be his wife.

"John," she said in reply, "let me tell you a story:

"Once upon a time there lived not far from here a gentleman and a lady. The gentleman, who esteemed himself a man of great prudence, was in love with the lady, or at least his attentions led her to believe so.

"But, before making a proposal, he was a man of prudence should—resolved to satisfy himself in regard to her ability to conduct the affairs of a household; but, instead of trying to obtain this information in an open, manly way, he was foolish enough to try to obtain it in secret, which, like foolish advice, the like of which you have received, doubtless, in your public newspaper."

"Now, you know, his mind recurring to the Crampton Herald.

Well, one morning he arose very early, left his father's house, passed a meadow, came to a corn-field." John's face reddened, "then through a barn-yard, then came along by a wooden fence, and went into some bushes near a summer kitchen."

John's arm slid down by his side.

"Don't Mary," said he. "I confess it all. But how did you find out?"

She told him, and gave her answer.

"Now," said she, "I am angry with you, and justly, I think. Though I love you, I tell you plainly that you have fallen in my estimation. I think you deserve some punishment. In one year from now, if you do nothing to make me esteem you less than I did before yesterday, if you come to me with the same question, I may answer you more satisfactorily."

"A cruel sentence, but one I deserve," said John, as he bade her good-night.

John is conducting himself properly, and goes to Johnson's often, for he and Mary are the best of friends, and, was the year expired, this story would doubtless, as such stories usually do,

NOT long ago, as an elderly couple were out walking, a lady on the opposite side of the street tripped and fell down. The old gentleman rushed across the street, raised his hat, and offered to assist her in any possible way. His wife followed him across at a slow pace, and witnessing his devotion to the stranger, she got mad, and shook her fist at him. "It's all right—it's all right," he whispered. "Yes, I know it is," she hotly exclaimed; "here an unknown woman hurts her toe, and you plow across the street to eat her up with kindness. The other day when I fell down-stairs you stood and laughed, and chuckled, and tickled your sides, and wanted to know if I was practicing for a circus."

THE HON. EDWARD EVERETT.

How the President of Harvard College Was Snowballed.

[From the Boston Traveller.]

While Edward Everett was President of Harvard a distinguished Englishman visited this country, bringing with him letters of introduction to our leading men, among them one to Edward Everett, President of Harvard College. On delivering the letter the Englishman expressed a strong desire to visit Harvard College, to which Mr. Everett cordially accepted. It was in the wilderness of their families. It has been a vexed subject long considered, and through all this investigation the cyclone was seen across the hard carrying destination to seize upon as well as to the innocent dwellers in its track. One thing, however, in securing the cause of the cyclone must be sought far away from the shifting body of air itself. Its results are powerful; its cause must also be powerful. Let us therefore consider a few facts. First, the appearance of a cyclone is usually preceded by dark spots upon the face of the sun. These spots, indicating a disturbance in the solar system, may necessarily affect the atmosphere of our earth. At the present generation of heat in our atmosphere is certain to cause a partial vacuum in another portion. All must rush to fill the vacuum. Hence the disturbance—the cyclone—results. In the last three years cyclones seem to be in the fact that tornadoes come during the spring and fall months. The dark spots on the surface of the sun, whatever they may be, are thought to cause great commotion in the atmosphere of the world and it is against this period that extreme cold weather of the present season can be accounted for by the fact that the sun has looked the bucket" was slang, and that the polite expression was "He propelled his pedal extremities with violence against a familiar utensil used for the transportation of water and other fluids."—Oil City Derrick.

FROM the French: Young B. carried a piece to Gonfland and asked him to go with a cross the scenes that appeared to him to be defective. Some days afterward Gonfland returned the manuscript. "Not a single cross, dear master!" "No; your comedy would look like a cemetery."

"DID you see that boy outside, Bill, last night?" asked Gus De Smith of Gilbody. "When did it come off?" "About 9 o'clock. Didn't you see it?" "No, of course I didn't. I live out in the suburbs, and never get a chance to see anything that is going on after dark in the business portion of the city."—Texas Siftings.

A MICHIGAN lawyer has been disbarred because, in order to induce a man to become his client, he made a ridiculous promise to secure a big verdict of damages, when in fact he knew there was no possibility of recovering a dollar. Should this become epidemic what are we to do for lawyers to law for us?—Chicago Chronicle.

"CHARLIE is a brave fellow," remarked Brown. "I've been round with him, expecting to reciprocate in kind, and I give you my word, I should think that he would be afraid that somebody would take his life." "Nonsense!" exclaimed Foxy; "robbers never take anything that is utterly worthless. They might take his money, but his life, never."

The latest anecdote about the old lady who thinks that she "knows everything" is about how she went to a church socially, and as she entered the room the young ladies said: "Good evening, auntie, we are glad you came; we are going to have tableaux this evening." "Yes, I know, I know," was the reply; "I smelt 'em when I first came in."

ONCE, when Judge Story was called upon to deliver a lecture upon the subject of murdering her husband, he addressed as one of the proofs of her innocence the fact of her having attended his funeral. Mr. Everett said to him, when he was dying: "Good-by, George." The counsel for the plaintiff declared this could not be taken as a proof of innocence. The judge, in his charge, said the words he had used were: "Good, by George."

A NEW DEPARTURE.—One good result of the hard times is an article in propriety not included which gives to every purchaser a full equivalent for his money. The rule of this class of medicines is from 10% to 90 doses for $1, the best only reaching 25 doses. Dodd & Co., lead a new departure, in the Hunt's Sarsaparilla they give 100 doses for $1. These facts deserve the consideration of the sick, also the well, for they are liable to be sick.

"PAT UP" at the Gault House.

The business man or tourist will find first-class accommodations at the low price of $2 and $2.50 per day at the Gault House, corner of Bush and Kearny streets, San Francisco—the circle of its patronage has extended to him to be identical with New York The President makes a slight stay at the Gault House in his early tour of the United States and the whole nation is amused by the sick, the embarrassment and disgust with every thing else, commonly called home-sickness is felt by many people, when the cause is to be found in the distant home thousands of miles away. Annoyance can in no way be felt in the head. It is repeated in other parts of the body. The appetite departs and all energy is gone. In the cause necessarily to be found in the bowel. The next day the feeling increases. There are added symptoms. They continue and become more acute—at the slight pains increase to agonies. The nausea becomes chronic. The heart grows irregular, and the vomiting uncertain. All these effect have definite cause, and, after years of deep experience upon his subject I feel bound to say that this cause can be found in some derangement of the biliary organs. Let that portion of the body be set right, and the effect will cease. But one may ask, how can we adjust our bowels or liver. We can only answer, by the evidence that has been given us, by Dr. Tutt's Pills. Some of the most eminent men in the country have recommended them for years, and we know that they are the best cathartic we can use. Their action is mild, but effectual. They are free from mercury, and are sugar coated. They are sold by all druggists.

TORNADOES.

Scientifically Accounted for, and Some Remote Causes that Produce Painful Results Explained.

The following synopsis of a lecture delivered by Dr. Horace H. Hamilton before the New York Society for the Promotion of Science, contains so much that is timely and important that it can be read with both interest and profit:

There is probably no subject of modern attention than the subject of tornadoes. Scientists have studied it for the benefit of humanity; men have investigated it for the welfare of their families. It has been a vexed subject long considered, and through all this investigation the cyclone was seen across the hard carrying destination to seize upon as well as to the innocent dwellers in its track. One thing, however, in securing the cause of the cyclone must be sought far away from the shifting body of air itself. Its results are powerful; its cause must also be powerful. Let us therefore consider a few facts. First, the appearance of a cyclone is usually preceded by dark spots upon the face of the sun. These spots, indicating a disturbance in the solar system, may necessarily affect the atmosphere of our earth. At the present generation of heat in our atmosphere is certain to cause a partial vacuum in another portion. All must rush to fill the vacuum. Hence the disturbance—the cyclone—results. In the last three years cyclones seem to be in the fact that tornadoes come during the spring and fall months. The dark spots on the surface of the sun, whatever they may be, are thought to cause great commotion in the atmosphere of the world and it is against this period that extreme cold weather of the present season can be accounted for by the fact that the sun has looked the bucket" was slang, and that the polite expression was "He propelled his pedal extremities with violence against a familiar utensil used for the transportation of water and other fluids."—Oil City Derrick.

FROM the French: Young B. carried a piece to Gonfland and asked him to go with a cross the scenes that appeared to him to be defective. Some days afterward Gonfland returned the manuscript. "Not a single cross, dear master!" "No; your comedy would look like a cemetery."

"DID you see that boy outside, Bill, last night?" asked Gus De Smith of Gilbody. "When did it come off?" "About 9 o'clock. Didn't you see it?" "No, of course I didn't. I live out in the suburbs, and never get a chance to see anything that is going on after dark in the business portion of the city."—Texas Siftings.

A MICHIGAN lawyer has been disbarred because, in order to induce a man to become his client, he made a ridiculous promise to secure a big verdict of damages, when in fact he knew there was no possibility of recovering a dollar. Should this become epidemic what are we to do for lawyers to law for us?—Chicago Chronicle.

"CHARLIE is a brave fellow," remarked Brown. "I've been round with him, expecting to reciprocate in kind, and I give you my word, I should think that he would be afraid that somebody would take his life." "Nonsense!" exclaimed Foxy; "robbers never take anything that is utterly worthless. They might take his money, but his life, never."

The latest anecdote about the old lady who thinks that she "knows everything" is about how she went to a church socially, and as she entered the room the young ladies said: "Good evening, auntie, we are glad you came; we are going to have tableaux this evening." "Yes, I know, I know," was the reply; "I smelt 'em when I first came in."

ONCE, when Judge Story was called upon to deliver a lecture upon the subject of murdering her husband, he addressed as one of the proofs of her innocence the fact of her having attended his funeral. Mr. Everett said to him, when he was dying: "Good-by, George." The counsel for the plaintiff declared this could not be taken as a proof of innocence. The judge, in his charge, said the words he had used were: "Good, by George."

I WANTED to be a humorist. He went out into the woods to draw inspiration from nature, was gone two days; at the end of the second day, feeling as if the divine afflatus had descended and crowned him king of humorists, he came back and perpetrated a joke on his mother-in-law. Her son was so well pleased with it that he kicked him all over town, and then developed him. He now feels as if, in a well-satisfied doubting, he might be an umpire for a prize-fight.—Cart Pretzel's Weekly.

Now long ago, as an elderly couple were out walking, a lady on the opposite side of the street tripped and fell down. The old gentleman rushed across the street, raised his hat, and offered to assist her in any possible way. His wife followed him across at a slow pace, and witnessing his devotion to the stranger, she got mad, and shook her fist at him. "It's all right—it's all right," he whispered. "Yes, I know it is," she hotly exclaimed; "here an unknown woman hurts her toe, and you plow across the street to eat her up with kindness. The other day when I fell down-stairs you stood and laughed, and chuckled, and tickled your sides, and wanted to know if I was practicing for a circus."

TELEGRAPHIC MATTER.

Our business correspondence, Mar. 27, 1882, brings to us the intelligence from Hiram H. Durham, the Business Manager of the Bishop Messenger Co., of New Haven, Conn. Mr. Durham says: "For many months I had been nearly troubled with a weak and tired feeling across the loins, almost invariably accompanied with a headache. I had noticed also that at stated periods following these pains my urine would be highly colored, and leave a heavy brick-colored sediment when allowed to stand in the vessel. I could not work, and I was discouraged in an alarming degree. Nothing helped me. I was prescribed for by many of the best physicians New York city, where I was located at that time, but derived no benefit or relief. When almost ready to give up in despair an acquaintance said to me, 'I want you to try Hunt's Kidney-Liver Cure.' I had not taken two bottles before I felt relief, and in three weeks' time all the above and allied ills had disappeared, and I improved so rapidly, that was astonished with new life, and I resumed my business again, which is one that requires the exercise of all kinds, which I am happy to say I have been able to do ever since. I feel like a new man. Hunt's Kidney-Liver Cure recovers the most hopeless cases or we refund the money. Hunt's Remedy is a specific for Bright's Disease, Diabetes, Gravel, Dropsy, Stone in the Bladder, Brick Dust Deposits, Suppressed or Scanty Urine, Pain in the Back, Loins or Bladder, and Female Weakness. Try it. It will do the good. Hunt's Remedy is sold by druggists.

SHOWN CLERK FORTY-TWO YEARS.

The following is from Mr. Thomas Green, the well known Town Clerk of Norwich, Conn. Mr. Green is 80 years old, and has held this position for forty-two years, and he says he used to be troubled, on Mar. 8, 1881, he writes as follows: "For years I have suffered with disease of the kidneys and bladder, and have no hesitancy in recommending Hunt's Remedy as a specific for those complaints. It has not only been the means of relieving me of serious pain, but it has caused me to void stones and gravel stones. To-day I am performing the duties of the office of Town Clerk, which I have held for forty-two years, which I could not do, if it were not for a specific of the kind, such as Hunt's Remedy."

A meeting has been held at Manceloan to discuss the matter of rebuilding the iron furnace. A proposition was submitted by Mr. Otis that if the citizens would subscribe $2,000 to $2,500 in money, labor, or wood, the company would rebuild, otherwise they could not. A committee of three was appointed to solicit aid, and the project will be pushed to a definite conclusion in the near future.

JACQUES.

Odds and Ends.

The attorney general of Michigan has become suddenly famous. By delivering an opinion that the governor could not dismiss one of his hired servants, he has in a single day lessened into prominence.—[Charlotte Leader.

The millennium has taken a long step in coming this way, when a defaulting public man has received his just deserts. Dalk, the Tennessee treasurer, has been sentenced to twenty five years imprisonment, and to pay a fine equal to the amount of his stealings, which is some $200,000.

Our protective policy breeds combinations, creates monopolies, destroys competition, and makes consumers the victims of arbitrary extortion. Less taxation for the benefit of monopolists seems to be very desirable. Let the people demand a repeal of the tariff in every instance where it supports monopoly. Down with all such taxes.—[Jackson Patriot.

Reports from Michigan and Wis consin mines show that for August the sales this year have been little more than half what they were for the same period last year, the shipments being about two thirds as much. So far this month there has been no improvement, and miners are asking a good many questions about the extent to which protection protects them.—[Grand Rapids Democrat.

In the order of production Michigan stands first among the states in the growth and manufacture of lumber, first in salt, first in copper, first in charcoal pig iron, certainly second if not first in its fresh water fisheries, fourth in wheat, and fourth in wool. It has the largest iron mine and the largest copper mine in the world. Seven tenths of all the wheat raised in the country is grown in nine states, and only three excel Michigan in the volume of this crop. In the last census year it produced more wheat to the acre than any state in the union except Colorado, whose total yield was less than a million and a half of bushels. It is also one of the best fruit producing states in the union. All its principal products are staples, for which there must be a constant and growing demand.—[Ex.

Some of our industrious girls at the seaside make changes of costume rivaling in rapidity the feat of actresses on the stage. In a single afternoon I saw the same frolicsome creature wear four beautiful dresses. One of embroidered pongee, a second of cream batiste, trimmed with white embroidery and Valenciennes lace, a third of white ottoman silk and lace ende, profusely ornamented with Medallion lace, and fitting to perfection, and a fourth of blue sarah, with flounces of the same half hidden under white lace flounces. She wore each only about an hour. The reason for shifting was that, being about to go away, she wished to complete the exhibition of her wardrobe before departure. Her time table of apparel had been laundered by an unexpected brevity of her stay.—[Correspondence Boston Herald.

The Chicago Tribune, commenting upon the great opium smuggling frauds perpetrated in San Francisco through the connivance of the government officers, charges that the customs tariff office is high premium on smuggling and is consequently a direct incentive to rascality. It says: "What is needed is a revision of the tariff which will replace the present excessive duties with reasonable rates. Revenue would thereby be increased and immorality be diminished." The Tribune is, however, merely a summer soldier in the free trade army, it is theoretically free trade, but practically protection. It is a republican journal, the republican party is high tariff, and when the battle rages on the Tribune either spikes its free trade guns or, loading them with protection slug, turns them upon the advocates of revenue reform. As a free trade organ in the protectionist party the Tribune cut a very curious but not very creditable figure.—[Grand Rapids Democrat.

The attack made recently by Dorsey, upon the administration, does not fall as flat as many papers would have us believe. The cry of "fallen dat" is possessed of about as much truth as the land by every country slave of a republican feels assure that democratic papers have dropped the tariff question, yet the tariff is being generally discussed at this time as much as at any previous period. The republican press seems to be bubbing about with a sort of natural incapacity for accomplishing anything. The Dorsey letter will have an influence. That influence will tell against the republican party. The labeling of Dorsey as a knave, and Garfield a patriot, will not answer. A knave may tell the truth, a patriot may have damaging weakness. The people will sift this matter and retain what they believe to be true. There certainly is no sense in warning over what is said against the acts of Mr. Garfield. He is beyond the reach of the human traducer. But those who still live, and hold high places will be scrutinized very closely and held to a strict account. It seems very evident to us that Dorsey's attack has not fallen flat.—[Charlotte Leader.

The financial disturbances in the leather trade which comes with and crush this week, is only another illustration of the effects of a protective policy. In reference to it the Marshall Chronicle well says: "The crash inevitable in every highly protected industry has now come in the leather trade. Stimulated by a tariff so high that it enabled manufacturers to name their own profits, the trade has grown to mammoth proportions. The people, the vast array of consumers, have been obliged to put their hands into their pockets and turn over to a few hundred persons an immense sum every year. This is the summum bonum of protectionists. A thousand people give out their hard-earned substance that one may be enriched. This is their ideal of national prosperity. The leather producers overdid the matter. Avaricious for profits, they overstocked the market, of which they enjoyed the monopoly, and the crash came. Had they been left to build up their business in the open market in a natural manner, they would not have piled up so many millions, but the people would have saved some of their earnings. Nor would this crash have come. A market open to the world without artificial stimulus is seldom troubled with panics."—[Charlotte Leader.

The moral of the Boston shoe and leather failures is that they furnish a second and striking illustration, on a great scale, of the effect of too much tariff. If it is not the tariff or overcomption which has done the mischief, it must be something else easily described, at least in outline, and the surviving members of the trade ought to have it at once. The iron trade has been closed nearly to death with tariff, and is now reduced almost to chronic depression, with occasional intervals of convulsiveness. The shoe and leather business is also threatened the same fate. The men who start the new factories have their bonds so filled with the idea that they must look to congress and not to consumers, to find out how much leather they can sell, that they have lost the habit of carefully examining their market and have no longer the kind of judgment that is needed to do so with efficiency. They always flatter themselves that if sales grow difficult and stocks accumulate on their hands all they have to do is to go to Washington, declaim about the pauper labor of Europe, and get the tariff put up a peg or two. They overlook the fact that even if the tariff were prohibitory, as long as their only market is the home market, nothing but a fall in prices would stimulate consumption, and in articles like shoes even that not very much, because but few people buy shoes for display, and none for accumulation.—[New York Post.

Cutting their Own Wires.

The officers of the brotherhood as sert that both the Western Union and the Baltimore & Ohio are now engaged in cutting their own wires for the purpose of casting odium on the strikers and having some explanation to the great delays in their service. It is asserted that 90 Mutual Union wires at 194 Broadway and Third avenue were cut Friday night in the interest of the Western Union, and during the night, in the same interest, a majority of the gold and stock ticker wires running from the Western Union building to the Metropolitan elevated railway at Dey street, on which they are lame on the way to Boston, etc., changes were cut, practically stopping the gold and stock company's service in this city. The inconvenience resulting from this would create indignation among business men against strikers if the onus could be thrown upon them. The line men on strike have organized a special force for the purpose of protecting the lines against attacks alleged to be in the interest of the companies.

Gov. Stephens' Dogs.

The late Alexander H. Stephens was fond of young animals, and always had several dogs about him, whom he treated as if they were almost human. Mr. Colver, his private secretary, thus speaks of the great Georgian's love for his pet dogs:

He treated them as almost human, and I think he considered them nearly so. He would talk to them and pet them. They slept at night either in his room or on the outside of the door.

At Liberty Hall the doors were never closed at night, and any one might have come through the house were it not for the dogs.

They slept in the library, and Alexander Stephens always occupied the chamber which opened into this. A step on the porch would raise a terrible howling, and it would have been indeed dangerous for any robber to have entered over such a guard.

There is one dog who deserves to be known in history, and that is Mr. Stephens' old poodle, Rio.

He was for years Mr. Stephens' constant companion. He loved him as an intimate friend, and when he died he shed tears over his grave.

Rio was a remarkable dog. He could reason more than any animal I have ever known. I remember at Liberty Hall we would be talking about something going wrong on the place, and Rio would rise and go to the spot spoken of by us.

He seemed to understand language, and his face was very much like that of a human. He was a big, fat poodle, with wool as white as snow, as heavy as that of a sheep, and as soft as silk.

He had a high forehead, and bright, black eyes. He grew blind several years before he died, and Mr. Stephens took as much care of him as he would take of his own flesh and blood.

When he died, he put him in a wooden coffin and buried him in the garden. He had intended to have erected a marble slab over his grave, but this was put off and finally neglected.

He never cast off any of his dogs in their old age, and Trout, Pluck, Frank and half a dozen others of his pets were cared for through their declining years of senility and decrepitude.

Insufficient Markets and Failures.

Tuttle.

In view of the statements that have been made from time to time by persons largely engaged in the manufacture of leather and boots and shoes, as to the inability of the home market to consume all the goods they make at tariff-inflated prices, the recent heavy failures in this line of trade, involving millions of dollars, ought not to create a particle of surprise. If intelligent manufacturers tell the truth, the business is vastly overdone. It is suffering from insufficient markets. It is choked to death by the tariff. Not long ago Mr. Newhall, a manufacturer at Lynn, Mass., stated that by working eight months our manufacturers were able to supply the home market for a year. Other manufacturers have said that by running our factories up to their full capacity for six months they could supply a year's demand. If these statements approximate the truth, it is evident that our tariff laws, which practically exclude manufacturers out of foreign markets, have had a great influence in producing the present disastrous condition of the trade.

As confirmatory of this position we recall the fact that at the annual banquet of the boot and shoe and leather association, held in Chicago last November, there was a strong expression of hostility to tariff because it excluded our manufacturers from much needed foreign markets. A member of the firm of M. D. Wells & Co. declared, as reported, that "the tariff question was one in which they all had a deep interest." This firm, he said, sold goods in New Mexico and Texas, and they ought to be able to cross the line into old Mexico. They ought also to be able to sell to Manitoba. But they were barred out of these countries by tariffs. To get this trade they must either cheapen their goods or they must unite in demanding reciprocity treaties. At present tariffs are a curse.

Mr. Macfarland, represented to be the manager of a large business, said that fifteen or twenty years ago we had a good export trade in boots and shoes, but that of late it had dwindled almost to nothing. We are selling goods in towns on this side of the Rio Grande, and there was no business reason why we should not cross the river; there was only a tariff reason. He had recently visited England, and after carefully examining the boot and shoe manufacturing processes there he was satisfied that they could not beat us on anything like equal terms, but that, in fact, we could "beat them to death." They did not use as much machinery, and the workmen were not as expert in handling the machinery they did use. The wages were not much less there than here, say $12 a week against $15. In view of all the facts, he believed we could build up a large export trade if we were not handicapped by the tariff.

In response to a statement that the trouble he complained of was foreign tariffs, Mr. M. declared that we had set the bad example, and other countries had naturally imitated us. We had excluded their products by high duties, and they had retaliated with high duties on our goods. The way to obtain concessions was to make concessions.

Mr. J. W. Oakley, vice president of the association, and member of the firm of Walker, Oakley & Co., was in favor of something more than reciprocity treaties. He believed that for a healthy trade we must get down to a free trade basis. There was no fear, he said, of foreign competition in leather. What we wanted, in his opinion, was out-and-out free trade in boots, shoes, and leather.

Mr. Edward Engle, of the firm of Grey, Clark & Engle, indorsed Mr. Oakley's remarks; and Mr. Clark, of the firm of Short, Clark & Co., approved of all that had been said in favor of free trade in boots, shoes, and leather. He could see no benefit to be derived from continuing the duties. We were exporting sole leather, and European governments had tried to shut it out by tariffs, and had not succeeded. The leather trade of this country was above all competition from abroad, and abundantly able to stand alone.

It was remarked at the time that there was great unanimity of sentiment at this meeting of the representatives of a great industry in favor of free trade. Their hostility to protection arose from the fact that it prevented their finding markets for their goods. Not one of the speakers advocated protection. Mr. Macfarland did not think our workmen were as well off with higher wages for six months and idleness the rest of the year as the English workmen with work the year round. When the workman has the world for an employer, he is more likely to have steady work than when he has only a small section of the world for an employer.

It is hopeful indication of the progress that the principles of commercial freedom are making when those persons engaged in a great manufacturing industry, which they realize is oppressed by tariff laws, speak out boldly against the pernicious policy of protection. The present heavy failures, entailing the stoppage of great factories and throwing thousands of workmen out of employment, for no other reason than an insufficient market for goods, cannot fail to open the eyes of intelligent men to the crushed evils of our tariff system. Probably it will not be long before the entire boot, shoe, and leather interest, which is third in rank, being surpassed in value only by agriculture and railroads, will be a unit for the emancipation of commerce from the degrading tariff slavery.

The cause of revenue reform finds greater encouragement at the present time from the attitude of manufacturers in many industries than from any other source; and especially is this the case when so great an interest as that of boots, shoes, and leather is prepared to surrender protection for itself, and array itself on the side of commercial freedom in the impending struggle with the supporters of the system of licensed spoliation. The log-rolling more-tariff beggars are not likely to get any more help from this quarter. Now if the farmers, who, more than any other portion of our people, are made the beasts of burden to carry the protection load, would awaken to a sense of their true interests, the prospects for commercial emancipation would be bright indeed.

Wool and Tariff.

Dowagiac Times.

Our republican contemporaries are still harping on the effect on the farmers through the recent reduction in the tariff on wool. They certainly must have a poor opinion of the intelligence of their subscribers. The tariff as it now is prohibitory. Not a pound of foreign wool can be brought to this country except at a loss of of from 7 to 10 cents. Not a pound of it comes into competition with our wools. These same papers know that the wooden manufacturers of the eastern states alone are using nearly 7,000,000 lbs. less per month this year than last, and if they can read at all they have learned ere this that the wooden market is glutted. The price of wool in this market this year ranged from 28 to 30 cents. The same wool costs in Canada 17 to 22. The duty added would make it cost delivered east of the river 37 to 40. Does the reduction in the tariff absorb the 10 cents difference? A republican congress reduced this tariff which the republican papers are talking about so earnestly, and at the same time raised the tariff on certain woolen goods. If their reasoning is good they cheapened the farmers' wool and enhanced the price of clothing. But they say nothing when the farmer is being levied upon to help the manufacturer out. That is kept from view. On several lines of woolen goods the cost was increased 60 per cent. Why do they forget to whine about that? The average farmer in Michigan does not get back, and never got back, 3 per cent on wool of what the rest of the tariff list costs him. He pays all the losses, and never comes in for a share of the profits. His mess is kept to the grindstone, and the republican press seeks to cast the glamour of "protection" over their eyes and make them believe that an increase of 10 cents per pound on wool pays them for the increased price they have to pay for clothing, iron of every kind, tools, groceries, medicines, leather—everything they buy.

After the trade dollars have all been bought up by the brokers and speculators, congress will probably legislate them into legal tenders. Such is usually the case—after the poor have been fleeced, laws are enacted to make the rich richer.—[Ex.

Notes and News.

Our democratic friends who want a reliable weekly paper from the state capital, should subscribe for the Lansing Journal.

Those of our citizens who can afford a democratic daily should not forget the Grand Rapids Democrat, one of the best in the state, and the nearest to Charlevoix.

During the sojourn of the legislators at Mackinac Island, one of their citizens appointed a man standing in front of a saloon, and inquired of him what county he represented? "I'm not a member of this republican legislative party," was the reply; "I'm only a private citizen on a drunk."—[Trade Journal.

The mistake made by hastily locating the new dock without consulting any competent men was fully demonstrated on Wednesday of this week, by the ineffectual attempt to land the City of Grand Rapids, also by the refusal of the Idaho to make the attempt the following day. Neither of those steamers would have missed landing at the old dock in no greater sea than that of that day.—[Petoskey Democrat.

The match tax, now abolished, small as it was apparently, being only one cent on a box, constituted nearly two-thirds of the price for which matches were sold. The tax amounted to $1.44 a gross, while the matches are sold for $2. This instance of nearly all tax and but little property has had no match in our internal revenue system since; which, worth 14 cents a gallon paid a tax of $2. Matches now wholesale at 85 cents a gross, showing that the dealers have not thrown off all the tax which they do not pay.—[Ex.

A few of our republican friends have thrown aside all prejudices and lent a hand to help this paper avoid the snares and traps which surely await every infant journal, and place it on a solid business foundation.—Charlevoix Journal. "Score one" for the Charlevoix republicans. The Journal is a good paper and deserves big support. Whenever any business man or citizen who cares a nickle for the prosperity of the town in which he lives, allows his political "wrongedness" to measure his support of home papers, he should be soundly kicked by a mule, and the Cheboygan Tribune editor should be allowed to do the kicking.—[Chippewa Democrat.

The telegraph strike has ended by the unconditional surrender of the strikers. And now the great monopoly with fifteen or twenty millions of property each valuation and the balance of the eighty millions wind or water or bluff makes terms with the vanquished. In substance these are the terms. That the W. U. compels every member of the brotherhood that re-enters its service to subscribe to: "You solemnly pledge yourself that you will withdraw from the brotherhood and never again join a similar organization." Will they submit to the indignity? Some of them are already doing it. We do not believe in strikes because in nine times out of ten they do more harm than good. We do not believe in labor unions for they fail to secure the purposes for which they are organized. But were we a member of the brotherhood we would see the Western Union or any other union further in Tophet than a pigeon could fly in a century before we would sink our manhood in subscribing to such a tyrannical compact.—[Pr. Press.

Protectionist journals insist that high tariffs enable manufacturers to get higher prices for goods and thus enable them to pay higher prices to their workmen, entirely blinding the fact that the workmen have to pay greatly enhanced rates for nearly all the necessaries of life. But when these same workmen strike for higher wages these same protection journals go into a labored argument to show that increased wages are no advantage to the workmen of the country for the reason that such increased wages adds to the cost of articles manufactured and so the workmen is compelled to pay out his extra wages in extra prices for the goods he needs. The demoralization of trades unions by protection journals generally is exceedingly inconsistent, for trades-unionism is simply a very wild form of protection. The purpose of both the protectionist and the trades-unionist is precisely the same—to cause an artificial scarcity in the article he has to sell; but in devising efficient methods of cause this scarcity the protectionist have far surpassed the labor unions. The unions confine their attempts to create an artificial scarcity in labor by combining and refusing to work except upon certain terms, while the protected manufacturers not only make combinations of a similar kind to keep prices of goods up and prices for labor down, but through the high tariff laws they shut out the cheap foreign goods and are thus enabled to enforce their demands for high prices. It is here the protection trades-unions have the advantage over the labor-unions, for the latter make no attempt to exclude by high tariffs the "cheap pauper labor of Europe," concerning which the protectionist manufactures talk so much—and which they are also so quick to import free of duty whenever their own workmen strike for those "higher wages" which are so freely promised as the result of the high tariff policy.—[Grand Rapids Democrat.

Everybody recognizes the fact that Dorsey was the boss of the "soup" campaign of 1880 and that "soup" won. Now that Dorsey is telling the world how it was done his republican understrappers, who are not often caught napping, have already caught the drift of things political and are divulging further details about the great soup campaign. One prominent republican officer holder explains with minute detail in an affidavit in the possession of the New York Sun the work of New, Gorham, Filley, Swain and others under Dorsey in carrying Indiana, and of his own work says: "My particular and immediate functions were the organization and control of the parties of strikers and repeaters and roughs brought to Indianapolis from the east, and distributed in small gangs to different points in the state. The trick of importation and colonization had been tried on a much larger scale, but without success, in 1876."

He also says that of his personal knowledge the cashier of the republican corruption fund had $250,000 in hand at one time, and that just before the election Don Cameron brought him $60,000 more.—[Grand Rapids Democrat.

The Tax on Woolen Goods.

Patriot.

The manufacturer of woolen goods is protected by a tax of about 50 per cent on their value. The tax is a sort of double-shuffle arrangement. The goods are taxed on their weight and on their value. It is compound taxation. On cheap goods, valued at not to exceed 80 cents per pound the present tax is 35 cents a pound, and in addition 35 per cent on the value. Under this method coarse and heavy goods are taxed more by the yard than are fine and light goods. Consumers do not buy woolen goods by weight, but by the yard, and yet the tax is levied on their weight and value. To find out what the tax amounts to, put a piece of heavy woolen goods, such as our laboring people use for winter wear, on the scales and ascertain its weight. For every pound add 35 cents; for every extra ounce add 2¼ cents; then to the actual commercial value add 35 per cent and you have the tax on woolen goods of this grade. It is not a simple method of taxation; these tariff makers who levy taxes for what is falsely called "protection" always concoct a complicated system so as to hide in part of its enormities; but the tax is not far from 50 per cent on the value of woolen goods. What is the object of this tax? Protectionists say it is mostly for the benefit of the workers in the woolen mills. Let us see what per centage of the cost of making woolen goods is paid for labor. To find out we must turn to the census of 1880. There we ascertain that the total value of finished woolen fabric produced in the United States during the census year was in round numbers, $265,984,000. The total wage paid to produce this large amount of goods was round numbers, $47,725,000. A very simple calculation shows that for every $100 worth of finished goods the cost of labor was about $22. Let us repeat, for making one hundred dollars worth of woolen goods in the United States the manufacturing capitalists paid on an average twenty-two dollars for labor. This, of course, is 22 per cent on the value of the goods produced; and yet a protective tax of about 90 per cent, on the commercial value is levied to sustain the woolen industry.

Let us look into this matter of wages a little deeper. Suppose the wages of the workers in our woolen mills are double what the are in England; we know they are not, as the average wages paid in this country in 1880 was but $5.60 a week; but, calling them double, the cost in labor for producing woolen goods was but 11 per cent higher, on the basis of production in this country, than in Great Britain. For whose benefit, then, is the 50 per cent tax on the value of woolen goods levied? Surely it cannot be made to appear that it is for the benefit of the workers, as 22 per cent of their total value covered the entire sum paid for the labor employed in producing them. Surely it is not for the benefit of the consumers, as to the extent that the manufacture is benefited by tax, the cost of the goods is increased over and above what it would be if there was no tax, and any increase of cost takes exactly so much money out of consumers. Clearly this large protective tax of 50 per cent on the value of woolen goods—nearly 20 per cent more than the entire cost of the labor employed in their production—was intended chiefly to benefit the manufacturing capitalists, the men who infest the lobbies of congress for the sake of the plunder to be derived from protective taxation, by giving them a monopoly of the home market. As the figures prove beyond all cavil that the cry of high wages, and that the tax is mainly for the benefit of the wage-earners, is merely a plausible and convenient pretext for catching votes to sustain a burdensome, unjust and unequal system of taxation for the benefit of capital and for the sake of plunder.

New Parties.

Saginawing.

The Washington Post asks: "What has become of the new party that rushed into the breathing world at Chicago on Co-4th instant? Perhaps its fledgling bosses are taking time to study political options."

Whatever may be the ambition of those who, to take advantage of a "balance of power" organization, hope to deceive the people into the belief that a third party organization, of any sort of significance or force, is possible in the coming presidential contest, it is plain to practical members of both the democratic and republican parties that there will be less of new party nonsense in 1884, than in any campaign that has been fought since 1860. The feeling among democrats being the same as that among the republicans, that the issue be tried fairly as between these two organizations without the intervention of ephemeral factions, there is no question as to who will be parties to the contest whatever may be the disagreeeables as to platform on either side. It is not too soon, even now, to give the word "fall in," for a failure to take sides with one or the other of the two great contending parties will in effect be a determination to forego any participation in the election.

Don't fail to go on the Beaver Island excursion next Sunday. You will never have a better chance to see that famous place.

If we could obtain a rail connection with Detroit, Charlevoix would at once become a distributing point for this whole Pine lake region.

The burglar who went through the Cushman and Clifton houses, Petoskey, and was captured, got five years, but escaped from the officer on the way to prison.

A good many of our state exchanges are issuing supplements. The dorsal will too, when it gets age, and its advertising patronage outgrows its present space.

The advertisement of Mr. Joseph Hyland, boiler maker, may be found in this paper. He is now ready for business, and so far as we can learn is giving the best of satisfaction.

The steamer T. S. Faxton will give an excursion to the famous Beaver Island next Sunday, leaving Charlevoix at 7.30 a. m. The ladies' band will furnish music. Tickets, $1.00.

Mr. Harrison Berdan is finishing a new residence on the terrace overlooking Round lake. It commands as fine a view of the town and its surroundings as any location in Charlevoix.

Wanted—fifty new tenement houses. We have no doubt there are fifty mechanics who would settle their families in Charlevoix, and spend the earnings here which they now send to their families outside.

See E. M. Clark's new advertisement this week. He offers bargains in dry goods, clothing, boots, shoes, etc. It will do your eyes good to look over his stock, and his prices guarantee a benefit to your purse.

Campbell Bros. are building a pile driver for L. E. Allen. The wood work will be entirely new, but the machinery of the old driver will be put in, and repaired wherever necessary to make it good as new.

It has been suggested that hides can be shipped to some point on Pine lake as cheaply as the bark can be shipped away. If such is the fact, the quicker a large tannery is erected here the better for the county.

Mr. Byron See advertises with business notices in this issue of the Journal. He keeps a full line of dress goods, boots, shoes, groceries, etc., and advertises low prices. Give him a call, in the brick store opposite the postoffice.

The Charlevoix planing mill is running to its fullest capacity, and with the increase of business likely to come next year, it is possible another mill will be located in the county. If there is, we must try and get it established in our village.

The young farmer looking for a home may not buy so many acres here for his money as he can in Dakota, but he will be sure of a home sooner, and with no fear of freezing to death for lack of fuel, as they sometimes do out west.

While at Petoskey last Saturday evening, by the kindness of Mr. Geo. V. Mills, we were shown through the Arlington house. We confess surprise at the size of the house and quality of furnishings, considering the size of the town in which it is located.

The following placard hangs up in a Tennessee store window:

In Charlevoix county it is also used as a deodorizer.

Land on Round lake is too valuable to give away, but something ought to be done, and soon, too, to establish a grist mill here, either on Round lake, or near the line of railroad to be established sometime. The lake we have; the road we have not. The mill would better be established on the lake.

One of our citizens of Norwood gave a dancing party one evening last week, which was patronized by a number of Charlevoix gents. It has been intimated that one young man was afraid no refreshments would be furnished, so he took something along in his pocket. By an accident it was crushed, and he purchased two bottles of peppermint to renovate the pocket.

Pine lake and south arm have a coast line of 75 to 100 miles, and the land abutting thereon is as good for agricultural purposes and fruit growing as any in the state. The farmer can tie his schooner to the bank, with very little or no dockage, and load his grain or fruit for the Chicago or eastern markets, with little handling, and no loading or prolonged haul to drive miles and miles over rough roads.

Andrew J. Blackbird is advertised to give an historical lecture at the opera house Sept. 8. Mr. B. is son of the Ottawa chief, and was formerly interpreter for Mackinac Indian agency. He will give a history of the Ottawas, and at the close will recite the Indian's lament, in soliloquy, in full Indian costume.

Mr. E. S. Bartholomew, formerly of Westfield, New York, is about to establish a canning factory, at Charlevoix, for the purpose of putting up fruits and vegetables. This is a good thing not only for that town but for this whole section, as it will make a good market for all kinds of small fruits as well as large quantities of vegetables. He will make contracts this fall and winter for corn, tomatoes, peas, etc., to be grown, by the acre next year for him.—[Petoskey Democrat.

Prof. McAfferty's readings at the opera house Tuesday evening was a fine entertainment. His personations are faultless, and draw from the listener a sympathy with the character delineated. In "an order for a picture" one could follow the professor and see the picture as it grew. In "Betsey and I are out" the personation of the old farmer could not be surpassed. By request of the audience "Darius Green" was read after concluding the printed program. Our citizens are enthusiastic in praise of the professor, and can recommend him to all who desire an evening of pleasure and profit.

The intent of two items in the last JOURNAL seems to have been misunderstood. While they were apparently in favor of protecting our home industries, they stated distinctly that the large boats would make an increase of trade in the upper lake towns. The aim was to show the fallacy of protection as a principle of trade. The JOURNAL will go as far as any one in promoting the industries of the whole county, and believes in making trade as free as possible. We took a local subject for an illustration, and there is every appearance of having tapped a hornet's nest; but we have nothing to retract so far as the principle is concerned. We have located in Charlevoix to stay, and shall labor for her welfare to the best of our ability.

Prof. E. H. Crane, the well known archæologist, of Petoskey, has been digging in the bluffs on the lake Michigan beach, one half mile north of the channel, with interesting scientific results. On Wednesday last as he was walking along the north beach he found pieces of chert and flint bearing evidence of the workmanship of pre-historic man. Ascending the bluff he soon found the burial place of one of our first citizens, who came here during the mound builder's age. The soil where the body had rested was darkened, while at the right were found three pieces of pottery of the capacity of a pint, rudely decorated, a handful of worked flints, and the stones used in working them, one being a fine silicified coral. The professor has explored 380 mounds and attaches much importance to his discovery here. He believes there are a great many mounds and relics of this kind to be found near by.—[Sentinel.

HUNTING OWLS IN MISSOURI.

BY J. C. SCHOENEBERG.

You, who are skilled in hunting fowls,
Know you how they capture owls?
No? Then wait a bit and see
How 'tis done in Missouri.

Well, they start out for the woods,
Having no explosive goods;
Nothing of the kind, you know,
Nothing but the jim jackaw.

Now they stop out on a tree,
Where the owl thinks to be;
With this one to scare with fear
Round his eye their course they steer.

And the owl sees, as is right,
To keep the matter in his sight;
Onward still the hunter's bound—
The owl his head turns round and round!

Well, the consequence one knows—
So, at least, the story goes—
Keeping time out upon the string
Till his head quite off they wring!

IN SPITE OF HERSELF.

BY HELEN.

"Uncle Morton, I do wish you would drop the subject of Randall Whitney now and forever. If you are tired of me, just say so, and I will pack my trunk yet to-night, and go to Aunt Barbara's." And the glow deepened on Ethel Death's face; her brown eyes grew almost black, with little smoldering gleams of fire shining in their depths. She had been given into Uncle Morton's care at the early age of 3 years, and in all the eighteen years that she had lived with him, he had never lost her in such a passion. The good old man was frightened, both at the girl's anger and at her threat of leaving the old homestead.

"Well! well! Ethel, child, don't get so angry. Of course you needn't marry Randall Whitney unless you choose, for there is no compulsion about the matter, at all; I only mentioned that he expected to pay us a visit this summer, and that I should like to have you treat him civilly. I am sorry if I said any thing to hurt your feelings, Ethel," said Mr. Morton, walking nervously up and down the broad piazza of the Morton farm-house.

"I am not angry with you, uncle, but I have grown tired of hearing Randall Whitney's name; and if he is coming here this summer, you can hire Dorothy Mason, and I will go to Aunt Barbara's while he is here. I have been wanting to visit her for some time, and this will be a good chance."

Uncle Morton paused in his walk, and looked down at the young girl as she sat on the step pulling a rose to pieces, leaf by leaf, and a very pretty picture she made. The clambering rose-bush, with its wealth of foliage and its buds just bursting into bloom, formed a pleasing background for the fresh, sweet face, with the frank brown eyes and waving masses of lustrous brown hair.

"Why, Ethel, how can I spare you just now?" cried her uncle in real distress, "with the harvest just coming on, the summer's fruit to look after, and the dairy to be taken care of! Not now, Ethel, not now. I will write to him not to come until fall; will that do?"

Ethel laughed outright.

"You dear old uncle! It is a shame that you should be so anxious to keep me to your own house; but I do so much want to have the house without visitors this summer."

"Well, girlie, have it as you please. I will write Randall this very evening not to come until fall. Bless me! we can't have you going off to Aunt Barbara's now. No, indeed!" And bustling into the house, Uncle Morton called for a lump, and immediately set about writing a letter to Randall Whitney. A glimpse of the old gentleman's letter to the nephew he had fondly endowed will explain the situation of affairs as well, or perhaps better than anything we could say.

"My Dear Randall: I had anticipated a great deal of pleasure from the visit you promised to make us this summer. Though your father and I were some time ago, I have not seen you always were friends, much boy, and I am very sorry that I have to ask you to defer your visit until fall. My niece, Ethel Dean, who has been my housekeeper since the death of my wife, refuses to leave me, as was at the farm house this summer. Between us, my dear boy, I do not trust out the lass, but let you the little truth of the matter. This fall, she is going away on a visit, then I shall certainly look for you. By the way, do you know of any likely young fellow who would come out here to work? I keep about twenty cows and sell the milk at a close by factory, some three miles distant, and I need some one to drive back and forth from dark to day. If you know of a steady, trusty young man who would like such a place, send him out, and be sure to come yourself about the 1st of September.

"Hoping you may be well, remain, a relative, your friend, JAS. MORTON."

"There, Ethel, do you think that is plain enough?" and he tossed the letter to Ethel, who came to him from the mount, light, her dark hair dancing with glee, and smiling about her forehead in tiny rings.

"Oh! uncle! he will think I am a crusty-old-old maid, and that I rule you and your house with a rod of iron, the girl cried, "but what need I care, anything so I don't come to see him, with his proud city ways; yes, that is all right, uncle. He will not be apt to bother us soon, especially while I am here," and with a merry laugh she gave her article "good-night" kiss, and went up to her own room.

John Morton and Richard Whitney had been schoolmates and "chums" in their early years, and warm friends during the dawning dignity of manhood. In time, they were both married, and while "Dick," as he was familiarly called, went to a distant city, and engaged in the mercantile business, Jack took up the occupation of a farmer. "Pa," young men were often spoken of as twins, though there was no tie of blood between them.

"But if we are ever blessed with children," they said "we will have the families united by marriage." No children ever came to John Morton's home, except Ethel, the daughter of his only sister, who, in dying, left her orphan child to his care. When Ethel was 12 years old, Mrs. Morton died, and on the shoulders of the young girl fell the care of her uncle's home.

Servants were employed as in her Aunt's time to do the heavy work, but Ethel, despite her tender years, had personal supervision of the household department, and soon proved herself to be a capital manager of affairs belonging to that domain. Ten years previous to the opening of our story, Richard Whitney died, leaving an only son, Randall. The young man was not aware of the existence of Ethel Dean, much less of the plan talked over by his father and John Morton, to have him marry the young lady some time in the future. Randall had succeeded his father in business, and was summer, weary of the careless round of care, tired of the heat and confusion of the city, he remembered the promise he had made to old Uncle Morton, and he determined to spend a few weeks at the farm-house. All needful preparations were completed, and he was on the eve of starting, when Mr. Morton's letter was received.

"Bright-bye!" said he, when he had read the characteristic epistle through twice. "The poor old man does not have a very pleasant home, I'll warrant. Even the sum of his letter, I imagine Miss Ethel Dean to be a crabbed old maid, who, to use a slang phrase, "runs the ranch."

So he sent an immediate reply to Mr. Morton's letter, stating that it would suit him just as well to make the proposed visit later in the season, and he had found a young man that he hoped would suit Mr. Morton. He could recommend the young fellow as being trusty and of respectable family, and he would be on hand some time during the next week.

Randall Whitney's letter was received at the Morton farm-house on Tuesday, and on Thursday of the next week, as Ethel was busy in the front-yard tying up a refractory rose-bush, the click of the gate warned her of the approach of some one. "Well, I wonder what he has got to sell, or of course he is agent for something or another," was the girl's thought as a young man dressed in a serviceable suit of dark grey and carrying a valise came up the flower-bordered path.

"Is this where Mr. Morton lives?" asked the stranger, lifting his broad-rimmed straw hat, and bowing with the graceful ease that comes only with true politeness.

"Yes, sir," answered Ethel, stepping down from her elevated position on the three-legged stool "you will find Mr. Morton sitting on the piazza."

"I thinks," said the young man, with a look of evident admiration of the form of a sweet face laid children in the depths of a capacious sun-bonnet, took his way in the direction of Uncle Morton.

Busy with her work Ethel had almost forgotten the presence of a stranger at the house, when she heard her uncle calling to her. "Now, what's wanting, said she to herself, as half petulantly she dropped her pruning shears and ball of twine. "My opinion is some wonderful labor-saving invention, I suppose." But no simple in miniature of a washing machine, or automatic barrel churn, no self-operating wringer, or double-reversible-back-action-clothes-treading-board met her gaze. Only the gentlemanly-appearing young man quietly talking to her Uncle Morton.

"Ethel, this is the young man Mr. Whitney spoke of in his letter, my niece, Ethel Dean, Mr. Fields." A surprised look crossed the face of the stranger for a moment, across the stranger's features, but in his polite, deferential bow was scarcely a trace of the surprise from Ethel. "Now, girlie," they was "I have kept Mr. Fields in the hall, much less of the plan talked over by his father and John Morton, to have him marry the young lady some time in the future,

A Description of the Person of Jesus Christ.

"This was found in an ancient manuscript, which was sent by Publius Lentulus, President of Judea, to the Senate of Rome:

There lives at this time, in Judea, a man of singular character whose name is Jesus Christ. The barbarians esteem him a prophet, but his followers adore him as the intermediate offspring of the immortal God. He is endowed with such unparalleled virtue as to call back the dead from their graves, and to heal every kind of disease with a word or a touch.

"His form is tall and elegantly shaped, his aspect amiable and reverend; his hair flows in beautiful shades, which so united color cab much, falling into graceful curls below his ears, agreeably couching on his shoulders, and parting on the crown of his head, like the headdress of the sect of the Nazarites. His forehead is smooth, and his cheeks without a spot, save that lovely red; his nose and mouth are formed with exquisite symmetry; his beard is thick, and suitable to the hair of his head, reaching a little below his chin, and parted in the middle like a fork; his eyes are bright, clear and serene.

"He reprimes with majesty, counsels with mildness and invites with the most tender and persuasive language. His whole address, whether word or deed, being elegant, brave, and strictly characteristic of an exalted a being. No man has ever seen him laugh, but the whole world has frequently beheld him weep; and so persuasive are his tears that the multitude cannot withhold theirs from joining in sympathy with him. He is very modest, temperate and wise.

"In short, whatever this phenomenon may be in the end, he seems at present a man of excellent beauty and divine perfections, every way surpassing the children of men."

PRIVATE BANKANFILE.

Why It Is That Its Feeds Lonesome. The Officers in the Offices of a Grateful Government.

(R. J. Burdette in Philadelphia Times.)

Somehow Private Bankanfile always were the expression of a lonesome man three years in four. There is a wandering roll of his eyes, a searching glance, as of a man seeking for something he hasn't exactly lost, and never expects to find.

But when I met him the other day there was a glad look in his eye, and he grasped my had eagerly.

"You must be here on the 29th," he said, gayly; "the old One Hundred and Eighty-seventh is going to have a reunion. I'll see all the old boys; gallant old fellows I haven't met since '65."

There was nothing lonesome about Bankanfile now. Civilian as I was, I rejoiced at the prospect of his meeting his old friends.

"It was a splendid regiment," I remarked. "The old One Hundred and Eighty-seventh made a gallant record. Where's Gen. De Bespaconi now?"

"Oh, he's Collector of Internal Revenue."

"So he is; I had forgotten. And Col. Edelboy?"

"He's Postmaster."

"Sure enough. And Maj. Kampsnail?"

"He's Sheriff."

"And Capt. Tompion?"

"United States Consul to—Gitta Percha, I believe it is."

"And Lieut. Col. Bombshep?"

"United States Marshal."

"And Capt. Tinabrif?"

"He is a Judge of the United States Court."

"Oh, yes; and Quartermaster Saltbone?"

"He was in the Treasury Department until last week."

"And where is he now?"

"They don't know," said Private Bankanfile, evasively. "They think he is in Canada, but they haven't found him yet."

"Ah, yes; and where are the other officers of your regiment?"

"In the Legislature; all except Surgeon Greensnash—he is in Congress—and Adjutant Teashun, who is in the Pension Bureau."

"What are you doing?" I asked.

"I am shipping-clerk down here at Hide & Tallow's, sah"—with a troubled look—"they won't want me after the 1st of June; they have to make a place for old Tallow's nephew. But I'll find something, I reckon. I'm never out of a place very long. Come in and see us when we get together on the 29th, won't you?" and all the trouble died out of his face at the thought of meeting the old boys again.

I looked at him as he limped away. His gait is ungraceful, because he has a stiff knee—stiff as a cane. It was shattered at Antietam. The bullet went crashing into it when he ran back to pick up and save the regimental flag that had fallen from the dead hands of the Color Sergeant.

But I wondered no longer that Private Bankanfile seemed lonely. He was thinking, perhaps, of his comrades, the other privates in his regiment. There were several private soldiers in the army. Bankanfile, whom I know, was one. The name of the other one has escaped me. Nor do I know where he is. He may be dead. Perhaps he is married. Something has happened to him, certainly. I looked for him in the Legislature, but his Captain tells me he is not there. I seek him in Congress, but his Colonel tells me he has not seen him nor heard of him since last election. I miss him in the Cabinet. He doesn't appear to be Consul to any place.

And yet, if he would only come forward and show himself, a grateful country has remembered him. He can secure a farm of 160 acres in the far West, after the railroad has secured all the best sections, twenty miles from the nearest postoffice, twice as far from water and as far as a railway train can run in a day from a coal bank or forest, on precisely the same terms as are accorded to a man who has been in this land fifteen minutes. It is a great country, and the private soldier should appreciate it. And undoubtedly he does—in a quiet way. He does not make much fuss about it. And really there isn't very much for him to grow enthusiastic about.

But the private soldier, though indeed he is exceedingly rare and marvelous only scarce at intervals, is not entirely lost. It will rejoice the hearts of his anxious friends to learn that his absence has been noted. People are inquiring for him. Eminent statesmen are looking him up. Distinguished Congressmen, who are not usually certain of a good book," are after him. Great men who have positively "gone out of politics" for good, unless the voice of the people should imperatively call them back to public life, are seeking the lost soldier in his retirement. The time of the quadrennial reunion draweth nigh. Also, the year of the national convention. In the days gone by, when the private soldier was more numerous than today, very nearly a thousand of him were required to make one Colonel. More than ninety times as many are sometimes requisite to the election of a member of Congress and to make a President.

Therefore he will be found. He will be dragged from his barking place. If he has not been seen at the polls by 4 p. m. the General's own carriage will come after him. It will not come after him again for another four years. But it will come for him then.

And we rejoice, too, in the thought that the time is come. One day the private soldier will shine resplendent as a blazing planet against the nebulous background of half-forgotten field and line officers. It has been ever the fate of the private soldier. Napoleon is dead and all his marshals are dead. But the private soldier who fought under the "Little Corporal" at Waterloo, is he not found in every State? The "Iron Duke" is dead, but does not the last surviving soldier of the "Guards" die some place nearly every month? Washington is dead, but his bodyservant, is not his name Legion, of Legion county? And so soon as the last General who fought in the War of the Rebellion will pass away, the last Colonel, much against his will, must die. Majors and Captains will join the innumerable caravan; but the last surviving private soldier of every regiment never, never, never will never leave us but will live embalmed in the perennial paragraph: "Till sun shall rise and set no more."

The Organ Baby.

There is another kind of little creature that is carried out with barrel organs in London; its lot is thoughtlessly made far worse than that of the monkey, yet we know its nightly rest is not in the shed, but in the kitchen where the macaroni hangs, where the men smoke by the hearth, where the women gossip in Italian, taking off their flat linen head-dresses, and hugging their babies against short skirts and bodices as tight as a sailor's. Occasionally, of our anxiety is the organ baby. Who that walks through London streets has not seen it lying like an inanimate bundle upon the top of the organ, or a little older, crowing from the bracket on the bandstand as the end of the "roughened piano-organ? Where are its brains? Will it grow up deaf, or will it shout, haunted all life long by an atmosphere of noise? Has custom become second nature to those that hear organs all day? Has the baby, stamped on the organ, an inherited knack of not caring? Will it grow up to look and understand, and sleep like other children? Or will it grow up at all? We can conceive the monkey getting used and tearing the organ, and scattering the crowd, if he were condemned to lie with his head against it all day. But what can the baby do?—Chambers' Journal.

The following paragraphs set up by an apprentice, are printed without correcting, which will explain any inaccuracies the reader may find:

The fact was never more apparent than this season that this region is especially favored over not only any other part of Michigan, but many localities in other states which have been known as superior agricultural districts. Throughout southern Michigan, the entire length of New York, and through the best parts of Canada, the fruit have nearly ruined crops, wheat is small and rusty, corn is drowned and yellow potatoes are rotting in the hill, the "mighty pumpkin" are decimated decayed, wondrous bubbles are rampant in many section while our crops passed, and everything looks fine. How different the picture here. Let us pass through any portion of the famed Traverse region and we find fields of corn that promise yield, and all crops yet sound, thrifty and good, all growing and promising abundant yields. There are natural causes for all this, we have a soil, which although rich and productive, absorbs no noxious exhalants, and freshets are therefore impossible. Our exhausters report fresh southerly Michigan last week; and the fact is suggested to us that we are freer from demanding freets than any other part of Michigan the recent season of this statement. The Almighty gave to us bountily all the elements of natural perfection a section so favored would be an ideal El Dorado, an Eden. But we consider these matters, also, in the selection for such a home as these are the conditions of which they have a decided bearing but what the real by the publication of lath shoots and speculators. We live in a region favored in all that makes agriculture successful and life pleasant, and we are in receipt of more yet by many of those who are not so blessed.—Sentinel

Although the great telegraph strike has ended in the virtual defeat of the strikers, it is probable that the lesson will not be lost upon others with benefits. The agitation has served to call public attention to abuses, which have long existed, and which were the inciting cause of the strike. It is fair to presume that the managers of the telegraph companies will see these instances manifestations of these abuses; and that they will, of their own motion, remedy them. Such attention, it is also fair to presume that they will see no time in taking such steps as are necessary to remedy the evils complain of. A corporation which is able to pay large dividends on half a hundred millions of watered stock, should certainly be able to pay its employes fair wages. The work demanded is often very arduous, and for some classes of telegraph service a high degree of intelligence and trustworthiness is requisite. These qualities should certainly be well compensated, when found; and as a matter of self-interest, if for no other motive, the Western Union company would do well to organize its scale of wages on a basis of from $25 to $50 in place of from $10 to $30 per month.

A Democratic Opinion of Free Passes.

In the Lansing Journal of Aug. 23 is a letter from Mr. Geo. P. Sanford (for more than ten years editor of that paper, and a thorough and effective political manager) concerning the pledge of the democratic and greenback parties to oppose free passes, and to reduce expenses of state government. Mr. Sanford's position in state politics, and his thorough knowledge of political history, gives his utterances a force and value not exceeded by any other writer. We print the letter in full, as follows:

To the Editor of the Lansing Journal:

In a recent number of the Detroit Evening News I noticed an editorial article in which it was stated that the democrats and greenbackers in their last campaign in this state, and the last year were outspoken in their denunciation of the practice of public officials accepting free railroad passes and of the illegal ten-cent mileage charge, and that a sharp demand was made by the parties named for a reduction of useless offices, and for a general and sweeping reduction of expenditures, appropriations, and taxation in this state. Please grant me a brief space in your columns to unequivocally endorse this statement of the News as historically correct. There can be no honest or intelligent dispute about it. The platform of the greenback state convention, held at Grand Rapids on the 23d of August, last year, at which a state ticket was nominated, states explicitly that that party will support no man for any office who is not pledged against the free railroad pass abuse. The democratic state convention, held on the same day at Jackson, voiced the demand of the democratic party that stricter economy should be practiced in the administration of state affairs; by using up the large balance left in the treasury for many years by the republicans, to be loaned to favorite banks at a low rate of interest. In this congressional district, the democratic convention which nominated Judge Winans for congress, declared that any member of congress who would accept a free railroad pass was unfit to be a congressman. The identical resolution was adopted by the last March declared against the abuse of free passes. This doctrine of opposition to free passes has been proclaimed again and again by the democratic and greenback parties of this state, and must be regarded as a cardinal principle of their political creed.

The unlawful ten-cent mileage charge was denounced by every press, paper and from every platform in the state where the combination campaign found support. Detroit Free Press notably did splendid work of this sort. The demand for a sweeping reduction of appropriations and taxation was, as the News says, a leading feature of the combination campaign last fall. It was voiced by every newspaper and political speaker whom it was my fortune to meet or hear of in that somewhat memorable campaign. From the stump and in the columns of the Journal I myself repeatedly required the people that if we were successful it would result in a reduction of taxation amounting to $1,000,000 in the two years to come.

These facts are too well known to be denied even if anybody wanted to deny them. And I hope nobody wants to deny them. The democratic position is well known upon this whole matter. The greenback position is not less clearly defined nor less known. The two parties declared themselves unequivocally upon these matters last year, and I venture to predict that they will do so next year. Free railroad passes to public officials, unlawful charges upon the state treasury, an extravagant expenditure of money by public officials, and consequent unnecessary taxation, are evils that the democratic and greenback parties will, in my opinion, repudiate next year as they did last. Nothing has happened to mitigate their abomination of those abuses, and I think nothing is likely to happen to dimin-ish their abhorrence of them. A republican majority in both houses of the legislature relieved the combination party of the responsibility for the failure to secure the desired reforms at their hands during the late legislative session. The reforms desired cannot be expected of a republican legislature. But if a legislature can be elected with a majority of democrats and greenbackers in both houses, and if then a sweeping reduction of useless offices, high salaries, and extravagant appropriations is not obtained, then will the people be indeed betrayed. No well-informed person can doubt for a moment that the rank and file of the opposition parties in this state are honest and in earnest in their demand for the reforms mentioned. And I have not the slightest doubt that they will reiterate their demand for them in the next state canvass in terms not to be misunderstood. It will be time enough to charge the democratic and greenback parties with infidelity to these demands for reform when they have organized, nominated, or declared any official discovered of there. Waste of the public money, and the rapacious extortion of monopoly are two evils which the people of this state are determined to oppose until they are overcome. GEO. P. SANFORD.

A Monarch's Prerogative.

New York sun.

The fact that the government steamer Dispatch has been employed of late as a pleasure yacht by the ladies of President Arthur's family, has not been much commented upon by the press, but we think it has none the less been considered with serious attention by the people.

The Dispatch belongs to the navy, and has frequently been used as a pleasure yacht by President Arthur. Such use is proper and unjustifiable. The vessel was paid for out of public treasury, and is maintained for the necessities of the navy. She ought at once to be laid up, so that the expense of running her may be saved. There is no navy which all hands have to employ her as a lion, and there is no station which can justify such an act.

But when in the absence of the President, the ladies of his family take possession of a government vessel, "to idle about and cruise and running expenses all paid out of the treasury, and when they convert it into a pleasure yacht for their convenience and amusement, they take for themselves that which is not theirs, that which they might most scrupulously to avoid taking, and that which the Free Press thought, if necessary, to command them not to take.

In England and other monarchical countries, where the monarch is supposed to be the whole government, and where everything belongs to him and not to the people, it is thought proper to make such use of public vessels; but in this country a different system has prevailed. By law the President receives a fixed salary, and there are certain emoluments provided for him, such as a house, a garden, and servants, and these are also for the use of his family; but when he goes beyond the limits of the law and sets up a sort of royal prerogative entitling him to take the public vessels of the country, and to appropriate them for his own personal entertainment and gratification, he commits a wrong which injures him and discredits his exalted station.

While the republican papers explain the business outlook and find one over-production, another some other cause, and each a different cause for business troubles, it is manifest that strikes and bankruptcies, whether due to one cause or another, whether the grounds for striking are just or unjust, are not wholesome indications. What if it be over-production? Here are valuable markets at their hands during the late legislative session. The reforms desired cannot be expected of a republican legislature. But if a legislature can be elected with a majority of democrats and greenbackers in both houses, and if then a sweeping reduction of useless offices, high salaries, and extravagant appropriations is not obtained, then will the people be indeed betrayed. No well-informed person can doubt for a moment that the rank and file of the opposition parties in this state are honest and in earnest in their demand for the reforms mentioned. Tariff Reform.

A republican paper at the national capital, in speaking of the Hill-Randolph-Morrison, says that unless the president and cabinet evince a more earnest determination to bring official thieves and defaulters to justice, the people will shortly begin the old rallying cry for "retrenchment and reform," and a political tidal wave, akin to the one that swamped Grantism in 1874, will roll over the country next year. By watching the course of events a few months more, the author of the appeal will be thoroughly prepared to sympathize with the outshoots proprietor of a hand organ who spent twelve hours in grinding out music before a deaf and dumb asylum. Lansing Journal.

The Greatest Disaster of Modern Times—75,000 People Perish in Roaring Waves, Smoking Fire, or Suffocating Ashes.

The terrible disaster eruption in Java and the subsequent inundation by tidal wave of the Sunda islands, on the 27th of August, will give the Singalese additional horror of the awful terror. Further particulars of the death and destruction in the Sunda islands show that the disaster was even more appalling than the first dispatches from Batavia reported. At seven Sunday the eruptions and shocks were supposed to have ceased, but at midnight, just as the 27th began, a tidal wave from the direction of the Indian ocean, suddenly burst upon the shore, and in a few minutes it became a roaring torrent, sweeping everything before it. Here and there a few houses, built on the hillsides, were spared, but the rest of the town is covered with the wreck of a river. The waters rushed up the river Tjiberoem, and flooded the country for miles, sweeping everything before them. Here,

Paid male teachers	$325 00
Paid female teachers	426 00
Paid for building or repairing school houses	243 28
Paid for all other purposes	232 72
Amount on hand Sept. 3, 1883	575 25
Total	$2,800 75

Estimates of the needs of the coming year were also read, after which a motion was made to raise $1,100 for teachers' wages. A substitute was offered to raise but $600, which, with the balance on hand and the mill tax and primary school money to come from the state, would be sufficient to meet all the expenses of the present school year. After considerable discussion the smaller amount was voted. The following sums were also voted: For wood, $85; for incidental expenses, $45; for janitor, $65.

The total amount voted is more than $800 less than was voted last year for all the purposes named, showing a disposition on the part of our citizens to reduce taxation wherever possible.

J. Milo Eaton was elected director for the coming three years, receiving 50 votes on the first formal ballot. During the term just closed he has given general satisfaction so far as we can learn.

New Clothing House.

It is perhaps pretty well known that Geo. W. Miller, late chief clerk for Amos Fox, is about to open in Buttars' new block one of the largest and finest stocks of clothing and gents' furnishing goods ever brought into Charlevoix county. George is an old resident here, in a business way, having been with Mr. Fox over fifteen years steady, and is doubtless as well acquainted with the necessities of this region as any man here. Knowing the demand, he will spare no effort necessary to supply it.

An item in his favor will be the large, light, and handsome salesroom in which to display his goods. Mr. Buttars has given this room a handsome finish inside, plate glass front, and all the conveniences of a modern salesroom. The counters, shelves, office furniture, and fixtures alone will prove an attraction to the customer, and add a richness to the display of goods not found in any other business house in the county.

With all these advantages added to Mr. Miller's thorough knowledge of the clothing business, and his appreciation of the needs of this community, it is safe to predict a successful and prosperous future for the venture. George's old friends will stick by him, and his attractive surroundings will surely make him many new ones.

Michigan's Best Advertisement.

Michigan's best advertisement lies in the truthful statement that if the states of our Union were set apart from each other, and so placed that each must depend upon her own native resources for support and development, Michigan would lead them all. We have no immense wheat fields, nor gold mines, nor mountains of iron, nor is our land extravagantly fertile. Cotton is not king, nor is corn queen. In truth we acknowledge no royalty in any one product. But we have a nicely adjusted diversity of products leading to a great variety of industries, which renders us capable of sustaining a large population. We supply our own needs to a very large extent by patronizing the producers and manufacturers within our own limits, and while doing this we need not be without the luxuries of life produced at our very doors. Michigan is emphatically a state in which to build homes: independent, attractive homes, in which is engendered a spirit of rest and satisfaction, that gives permanence to population and continuous prosperity to the inhabitants; and it behooves us in doing what we can for the development of the resources of our state to use such arguments as will induce people who enjoy the kind of life thus outlined to come to us and remain with us. Bonanza farming would add nothing to our prosperity. Small farms that are easily converted into delightful homes, with a view to independent life will be the foundation of Michigan's future prosperity.

Michigan has outlived the story of ague swales, barren hills and sandy plains. She shows by her products, people, and her standing among the states, that she needs no forced advertising to add to her progress. Let us frown down all attempts to deceive the people, and make them think that here we have a country where money and hard work are not necessary accompaniments to success, but rather show by statistics that a judicious expenditure of labor and capital will here lead to the acquirements of possessions that can be so arranged as to secure to the owners the greatest satisfaction of living. —Chas. W. Garfield in G. R. Democrat.

The first issue of the Detroit Evening Journal, the new two cent paper, is a bright, newsy, well edited seven column folio, in some respects superior to the Evening News which will find it no mean rival for popularity. If the publishers of the Journal can incorporate as they seem likely to do the good features of the Evening News, and omit its notorious faults they will achieve a financial success.

Two years or more ago, traces of oil were discovered on Jas. Trask's place. Efforts were made to start a company to develop whether or not it was in paying quantities. On Wednesday evening Martin Weldon who has a contract for sinking Bower Bros. well, while digging discovered unmistakable traces of an oil deposit, and on gathering a quantity it was found to give a good light. That there can be no question, and it is to be hoped that a company will be formed for the development of what there is in the lands. Will some one take hold of the matter and organize a company? Roscommon Pioneer.

Commissioner Evans is making war on some of the so-called stomach bitters that are vended under the name of medicines, but which really contain a large amount of whiskey. Mr. Evans states that one brand of bitters in particular contains seventy-five per cent of good whiskey as a discovery. It is entitled to rank as a discovery. It is an open secret that many patent nostrums sold as tonics contain whiskey, but few people ever suspected that it was good whisky, or that an assay would show it to be present in anything, like paying quantities. Mr. Evans is silent as to the name of this brand of bitters, and for obvious reasons—he does not want to advertise the "medicine" and make it popular.

John G. Whittier, the Quaker poet, deplores in a recent poem, the disposition of the daily press to dwell upon crimes and all unnatural occurrences. The journals publish whatever appeals to a morbid appetite, and scarcely a paper that comes into our homes but contains items of news such as no parent would care to show his children. Unfortunately, it is usual occurrences which the public taste serves. Hence the prominence given to murders, duels, scandals, and reports of evil deeds. Still it must be admitted that the newspapers might be much worse if un they are. The proprietors and editors are generally heads of families, and much of the more reprehensible reports of vicious occurrences are modified or suppressed outright. Then the newspaper is beginning to add to its departments and furnish more serious matter. There ought to be a public sentiment which would strongly condemn such journals as make a specialty of evil news.

It would be well for us if we would heed in our domestic life the adage, "As the old cock crows, so crows the young," or according to the version of the German, "the young rooster crows so petter as the old rooster." There is very little use in trying to wipe out of our children's characters the sins which are bestowed upon them in their birth. "If you want to cure the box of his disease," said Dr. Holmes, "you must begin with the fourth generation before he comes into the world." "Make yourself a good man," growled Carlyle in his prime, "and you will be sure there is one rascal less in the world," and in that case, it is very, very to add, you will save the use of the birch on your offspring. If bad children could only turn around and give their great-great-fathers a good thrashing for transmitting evil qualities of character the right and would be let on the hand.

What tells so readily the standard of a town or city, truthfully says the Chicago Tribune, as the appearance of its paper? And its youth or its age can as well be told as by a personal paragraph. The enterprise of its citizens is depicted by its advertisements, their liberality by the books of the paper. Some papers show a good, solid, healthy foundation, plethoric purses, a well to do generally. Others show a striving to contend with the grasping thousands around them, trying to wrench out an existence from the close fisted community about them. Occasional meteoric display in its columns of bombs or of editorials, shows what it can do if it had the means, but it cannot continue its expensive work until support comes, which ought to readily be granted. A newspaper is like a church: it wants fostering, then it can reflect on its location. Take your home paper. It gives you more news of immediate interest than other papers. It talks for you when other localities belie you. It stands up for your rights. You always have a champion in your home paper, and those who stand up for you should certainly be well sustained. Your interests are kindred and equal and you must either rise or fall together. Therefore it is to your interest to support your home paper. Not grudgingly, but in a liberal spirit, as a pleasure. Not as a disagreeable duty, but as an investment that will amply pay the expenditure. Cheboygan Democrat.

ORIGIN OF POPULAR PHRASES.

"Pull up a Punkin and Help us Skin a Tater."—The roasted yam is intimately connected with the history of Georgian hospitality as genial and warm as the Virginia variety. There is a legend to the effect that a stranger, wandering over the roads of Middle Georgia on a winter's night, saw a light gleaming ahead and soon heard the welcome barking of dogs. A comfortable looking cabin stood by the roadside, and this the wayfarer saluted with a "Hello!" at once peremptory and plaintive. The stranger's horse was turned loose in the yard and a piggin full of corn placed at his disposal. The stranger himself was ushered into the house and invited to make himself at home. Huge logs blazed on the hearth, and upon one side, underneath a massive bow legged andiron, was a pyramid of embers. An appetizing fragrance filled the air. Around the fire a number of rosy-cheeked, bright-eyed children were squatting. Mother, fat and contented, smoking her pipe in the corner, and an enormous cat sat by her, lazily watching the sparks as they disappeared in the black covern of the chimney. There was not a chair to be seen, but the genial host was equal to the emergency. "Pull up a punkin, stranger, and help us skin a tater." With that she raked a pumpkin from under the bed, the stranger seated himself as gracefully as possible, the smoking yams were drawn forth, and just such another delightful meal as that—where hospitality offered on the opposite that yearned for the savory sweets of the roasted yams—has never been chronicled. This legend has given Georgia hospitality its watchword and motto, "Come right in, stranger! Pull up a punkin an' help us skin a tater!" And it may be said here that hospitality could act more completely justify itself than by making the roasted yam the basis of its offering.

"Drunk as Blazes.—This vulgar expression is a corruption of "drunk as Blaizers." Bishop Blaize is the patron saint of English woodcutters, who, at Leicester and elsewhere, celebrate his festival with charitable and great convivialities. In Sir Thomas Wyse's "Impressions of Greece," he mentions this custom and says: "Those who took part in the procession were called Blaizers, and the phrase 'as drunk as Blaizers' resulted in the convivialities common on these occasions.

"Ducks and Drakes.—To make "ducks and drakes" with one's money is an allusion to a game played by boys, who take oyster shells, or flat stones, and throw them horizontally along the surface of a piece of water, in such a manner that the missiles skim along the surface, touching it many times and again emerging. The first time the stone emerges it is a duck, the second a drake; and so on, according to the old doggerel:

A duck and a drake,
And a halfpenny cake,
And a penny to pay the baker, etc.

The meaning in the case of money, is that the spendthrift metaphorically uses coin as boys use stones, to make "ducks and drakes."

"God Save the Mark."—These words are connected with an old Irish superstition. If a person, on telling the story of some hurt or injury which another has received, should illustrate his narration by touching the corresponding part of his own or Learer's body, he averts the omen of similar injury to oneself, or a sort of claim his words, "God save the mark."

"On the Step from the Sublime to the Ridiculous."—This saying is generally attributed to Napoleon. It is, however, to be found in the work of Thomas Paine, before Napoleon's time. Paine says: "The sublime and the ridiculous are often so nearly related that it is difficult to class them separately. One step above the sublime makes the ridiculous, and one step above the ridiculous makes the sublime again."

"Blunderuss."—An old English name for an empty jated fool. Wordsteen, in his "Sixth Discourse on Miracles," page 50, says: "No wise man ever reprehends a blunderuss in any other way than by laughing at him." Pope speaks of a "Blunderuss of Law." The name seems to have been applied to the gun so called from its similarity in sound to the Dutch name for the firearm donderbuss, literally, thunderstoke.

When Not to Build Your House.

A house was built in the early part of winter, or, rather, the walls were then put up, and the finishing done during the spring. The house was not occupied until May 1, but within a week the inmates began to sicken. The—to them—mysterious influence operating against good health prompted an inquiry at the Health Department. The Inspectors found the interior wall dripping with moisture everywhere, the accumulations of which were so great at the base that it ran out upon the ground in streams. Even the floors were damp and the carpets beginning to mildew. Clothing and shoes could not be kept in closets, as they soon became coated with mold. The families at first attributed it to the "natural dampness" of a new house—as though a new house must necessarily be damp—and kept fires burning freely; but could not get relief. The owner had to lose to the humane demands of the law and lost his tenants. If the walls can be dried out with salamanders, he will be permitted to fill the rooms again. In spite of all he can do, however, except to tear the walls down and build anew in warm weather, it will be absolutely impossible to make them dry enough building fit to live in for years. The time on the other sides of the building will not readily be penetrated by heat from within.—Chicago Sanitary News.

The Original Nashville Students will give a jubilee concert at Bartholomew's opera house, Thursday evening, September 13th, under the auspices of the Congregational society. The reputation of this troupe is such that we need not make comment here. They are everywhere received with applause.

The original Nashville students, who are just closing a prosperous season of one month in this city, have been remarkably successful both in giving a pleasing entertainment, and in drawing crowded houses, and they certainly do give the most original and unique concert ever given by a jubilee party.—Chicago Tribune.

Mr. L. G. Evans announces by bills that he will carry passengers and small packages of freight between Charlevoix and Elk Rapids, stopping at any desirable point on or near his usual route at any time of day or night, as best accommodates the public. When traveling that way, give him a trial, and we have no doubt he will do all he advertises.

Arrangements are now being made by Col. O. F. Wisner to plat his island up the Arm for a summer resort. It is about twenty-two half acre lots, with a street through the center, giving every lot a water front and a street front. This is an excellent place for pleasure seekers, and we have no doubt it will be so used next season. Success to the enterprise.

Harbor inspector Corlett states that there is thirteen feet of water over the wreck of the Parsons, except one piece near the end of the pier, which is sufficient depth for any boat that can pass through the entire channel. Sand is drifting around and over the pieces of wreck. The U. S. Engineers have advertised that she will be removed by the government, unless the owners remove her.

The Cedar Springs Mail has passed the first year of its existence, and, as a sort of mile stone, issues what it is pleased to call a "Semi annual Mail," a handsome eight-page sheet, giving a history of Cedar Springs from its first settlement to the present time, and embracing a comprehensive review of the present business of the place. Typographically, this extra shows the resources of the job-printing department, and their ability to do fine work. It is in all respects a credit to the managers of the paper and the town in which published.

The "Carda," a steam yacht from Detroit, was in port last week. She has been making a tour of Lake Superior and Georgian bay since Aug. 1st, and came here to see our pleasure resorts before returning home. From here she went to Harbor Springs on Monday. She was built with a view to comfort and pleasure by her captain and owner, C. D. Waterman, of Detroit, and those on board have every comfort heart could wish. The party, consists of E. C. Beach and wife, Capt. C. D. Waterman, wife, children, and nurse, and Addison Moffatt.

H. B. Chapman is pushing his new Bay Springs hotel to completion as fast as possible, and will have it ready for next summer's trade. If Mr. Addis runs a passenger train regularly on his narrow-gauge road next summer, as now contemplated, this hotel will at once become a popular place with tourists, because so easily reached. If the road should ever be extended along the north shore of Pine lake to Charlevoix, Bay Springs property would "boom" and Mr. Chapman's investment would be one of the best in the county.

The Congregational society have begun the erection of a new church edifice on the corner of Main and State streets, the excavations having been made and masons now at work on the foundation walls. It is to be pushed to completion as soon as possible. The society is to be congratulated on their evident prosperity. Last Thursday evening about twenty-five persons joined, and the attendance at service is constantly increasing. Rev. C. F. Van Auken is doing earnest and thorough work, and the society's success is his reward. They show their appreciation of his work by unanimously voting to invite him to remain as their pastor.

Mr. Albert Jennings, formerly an attorney of Grand Rapids, later a resident of Grand Forks, Dak., but now a land broker at Traverse City says: "Dakota is a good place to make money if one has capital. Farming is the best business to engage in with limited capital. The winters are very long, cold and snowy. But I don't think Dakota will compare with northern Michigan as a desirable place of residence. The land here is generally of a light cast and admirable for fruit culture and general farming. The climate is delightful and healthy. A great deal of money is being made in speculation and the transfer of lands is common. There is a tendency to buy up and hold hardwood lands, but mills for cutting hardwood timber are multiplying. The northern part of this state is fast being settled up, principally from Ohio and Indiana. The latter state furnishes, by far, the most of the immigration, which is probably due to the influence of the G. R. & I. railroad."

The schooner Yankee Blade, which delivered a cargo of brick at Boston last week, went from there to St. Ignace and loaded with ore for Dexter & Noble, Elk Rapids. It is reported that she sprung aleak eight miles south of Skilligalee light house while the crew were at breakfast about eight o'clock Saturday morning, and went down in fifteen minutes with five hundred and sixty tons of iron ore. The crew had barely time to save their clothes and spring into the yawl, being only four or five rods away when she gave a sudden lurch and went down head first. As she sank a singular phenomena occured. The stern rose up as the low descended, and suddenly blew up with a report like the discharge of a cannon, scattering fragments in every direction. It is supposed that the explosion was caused by the sudden compression of air in the cabin and hold of the schooner sunk. The crew made Cross Village with considerable difficulty and came to Harbor Springs on the Grand Rapids, when they took the Champlain for Chicago. It has been stated that while she was here two seamen deserted her, alleging that she was unseaworthy, and with heavy freight was likely to sink at any time. The report of the sinking would seem to confirm the story of the seamen.

To whom it may concern: Among the many colored troupes of singers who have sung in this place, there are none of them can compare with the Original Nashville Students, who sung here last night. They far excel Devavin's troupe in many points, and and should they return again to us, we bespeak them a hearty welcome. We commend them to a generous public. Very respectfully,

E. M. PIKE,
Red Ribbon Club.

It must be understood that this list covers the whole county, and is intended as an official report of the entire business of the county above the limit of $100, as recorded in the register's office. It is a fair index of the value of property in this county, and where there is the most activity in transfers.

MY NEIGHBORS' DOGS.

BY EUGENE J. HALL.

I have a fine suburban house,
A handsome house and lot,
With splendid shrubbery and lawn,
With thrifty garden spot.
'Tis all I have to call my home to see,
And still one's to say this
How very much they vary one
In having such a place.

It lies no beauty to my sight,
No charm of power to please;
I feel no thrill of joy as I walk out
Neath shadowy tree or mass,
I leave with joy and glad heart, when
Like one who quits a tomb,
Demoralized walk with soul forlorn,
And mind oppressed with gloom.

I hear no music in the air,
No sound that makes my heart glad;
I find no recreation there,
My soul's at war with it;
I live in torment all the time,
My nerves are dogs designed
To bark, to growl, to yelp and howl
The livelong day and night.

My sweet young wife has fretful grown;
To me she is unlike thus;
She comes, she turns from side to side;
The baby wakes it at once.
Throws out a bracket or a stone
Or makes a noise in some way
For every time little I have thrown
To drive the cur away.

They chase my costly chickens down—
They kill them one by one;
They loudly proud about the lawn—
Yes, over my grass they run;
They stop and sniff in passing by;
They slink out as a coward;
My little children cannot walk
With safety on the score.

They scarcely could been ask my leave;
They know I care not to;
They never know quite as sense
By driving over a dog;
Ay, if a neighbor I engage
To keep his dog confined,
He's no sooner gone my back is turned,
Its manner is out unkind.

Ah, well! the time is coming yet
But one evening I'll fix
To sell my place to Dan and go—
It very soon will try.
Dan Lord, I think has gratefully
Thus, when he read the title,
My place is free from pretty gates,
Their dogs are left out-door.

BUDELL'S PROPOSAL.

This time two years ago our Square Club was flourishing; now I am sole member. Budell, Marby, Smithers and myself had formed ourselves into a private bachelors' club, for the purpose of which and other intellectual amusements, and a very good time we contrived to have together. We hadn't many rules and by-laws for our club. We were sworn bachelors and each of us had to allege a reason why he did not intend to wed, but we had so far recognized the possibility of a change in our sentiments as to solemnly bind ourselves to inform the club at once if we should ever meditate ending our pleasures and shunning our companionship. Smithers said he hadn't time to marry; I was too poor, and Marby, who was regarded as our most confirmed member, gave us indefinitely to understand that "blighted affections" had led him into the bachelor club and that, after Budell had first insulted him, he had no intention of resigning a reason, and he seemed to allege that he hadn't met Mrs. Budell yet. That was unanimously received by the rest of the club, when Budell taken aback, spoke his assertion that he was afraid of ladies; but I gradually came to see that there was some truth in it. So long as Budell was in a large company—at a ball-room or any place like that—he was quite at his ease and as bold as a lion; but if by any chance he happened to fall a temporary captive to a solitary damsel's love and spear he was almost overwhelmed with nervousness, and his usual powers of conversation completely deserted him. I cannot but think the Royal Academy, escorting a very pretty young lady, and holding so many as if he had a worse conscience than King Herod; and I have seen him tremble at a mere passing question of the conservatory by his partner at a dance. However, in the Square Club he was our most enthusiastic member, and horror and indignation filled our souls when we realized the direful fact that Budell was in love and doing his best to get married. Had we been women we might probably have seen the symptoms of the advancing malady, but we were only obtuse and unsuspicious men. Now as I look back over those months I recall incidents that might have been warnings. The gradual decrease of Budell's hilarity at the club and the gradual increase of his excursions into society could hardly, indeed, have been portents, for Budell always did go into society more than the rest of us. The first allusion that he made to me about the lady who was afterward to play Beatrice to his Benedict was at a concert—or rather in a church room after a concert. "That's what I call a pretty girl," he whispered to me, "that dark-eyed girl over there in the warm, fleecy brown shawl—none of your flimsy white opera cloaks." The girl was pretty in a fresh pulpit sort of way; and even a seven bachelor might have been excused for being pleased at receiving such a frank smile as she greeted Budell with. Again, not many days after he remarked to me apropos dies letter: "Met rather an interesting girl last night; quite agrees with me on the subject of issues." I may be excused for neglecting this hint; Budell I think would have found a mellow "interesting" if it had only agreed with him but there was nothing more objectionable than to have one's name murdered. He was nervously unsure that his name should be pronounced with the accent on the second syllable; and I afterward found that he had been introduced for the second time, to his "interesting girl" as "Boodle." "Just as though I rhymed to noodle"—as he indignantly expressed it. But the most important hint was given the night after Mrs. Burton's ball, at which we had all been present. We were lounging in Budell's room, and Smithers was giving us a highly-wrought graphic illustration of the frivolity that passes for conversation between young men and maidens. "That's all nonsense," broke in Budell; "it's your own fault at any rate. Why, last night I had quite a serious and interesting conversation about woman's education, with a maiden." I even quoted Spencer to me."

"Did you?" I had too mischiefed, "said the irreverent Smithers, who thought every one was as ignorant as himself.

"No, I'm not joking, it's a fact, and I got an idea or two, too, out of it. Had he only told us that he had waited and made the acquaintance in order to carry on his conversation in order to interruption, I am convinced that I, at least, would have surmised that the acquisition of an idea or two was not the only result. However, I was not long in my state of ignorance, for the next month or so after, Budell hinted me up to confide to me that the bachelor's club was all bosh; he was over head and ears in love, and did I think he ought to tell the other men? There therefore followed a shower of apologetics in which "soft brown eyes" and goodness knows what other personal attractiveness were prominent. When I recovered breath I assured him that I thought it was quite incumbent upon him to inform the club. I was rigid, and cold with him, for I felt disgusted, it was almost as much to select me as his confidant, as though my religious principles were less fixed than Marby's or Smithers'.

His announcement that evening was received in silence by the Square Club; I even thought that he had nothing to say. At last Marby asked:

"Is it permitted to inquire the lady's name, and when the marriage is to take place?" Budell looked uncomfortable.

"Well, the first," he said, "I thought I ought to tell the club at once; but I haven't—that is, I don't quite know how to set about asking the lady."

Budell looked so comically distressed as he made this confession that the club laughed it with a shout of laughter. The notion of the bold and confident Budell being found I assured him,

Around the County.

By Springs.

The six months term of school has just closed.

The harvest, which is splendid, is nearly finished. Everybody busy as ants.

James P. Biggs, the popular milkman, is erecting a new house, with a stone foundation and cellar.

William Hayward and Lewis Jeffords have purchased the new threshing machine lately owned Thos. Weir, and are ready for any amount of "straw shaking."

The three mills of this place are turning out a great quantity of hard and soft-wood lumber, besides a large amount in shape for the manufacture of furniture of various kinds, the supply of logs being received over Mr. Addis' narrow-gauge railway.

Mr. Chapman's new hotel is growing rapidly, workmen being now engaged on the roof. Its dimensions exceed any other building in the head of Pine lake.

In addition to the improvements about the hotel, Mr. Chapman has cleared nearly 100 acres in this vicinity. FRANK.

Springvale.

Harvest still lingers. It is two weeks later than last year.

"Wood chucks and raccoons, or some other varmints," are making it lively for the farmers in their corn fields, destroying the crops as completely as a drove of hogs.

E. M. D. Homan, from southern Michigan, has arrived, expecting to locate somewhere in this vicinity. His wife has been here several months.

The teacher in district No. 2 is liable to get "chew-ed." Somebody had better not undertake to bite, for if they should they would get a most bitter chew.

Mr. S. Bright, from near Sydney, Ohio, is stopping with S. B. Thatcher. He is a hay fever patient, and visits this country every year for relief.

Now that the school meetings are over, it behooves the director to keep his eye "peeled" for a "school-marm" for the winter term of school.

A number of our farmers are clearing ground for fall crops. Most of them intend putting out winter wheat in good season this year.

There was a young folks' party at the residence of James Miller, Sept. 3d, in honor of their daughter's birthday.

Mr. Fuller, a resident of Charlevoix, has been through this township the past week selling farming mills.

Mr. Wm. Adams now holds the "ribbons" over as nice a team of horses as ever traveled.

S. B. Thatcher and Wm. Adams go out with their threshing machine this week.

The way the sheriff took a man out of this locality a few days ago gives the impression that the laws are to be enforced. We did not learn the cause of his arrest. JACQUES.

Business at East Jordan.

From the last Enterprise we clip the following items of interest:

The Pine Lake Mill Co. will soon erect another mill at Dwight's landing....Stoepel, Martin & Co. shipped 500,000 lath last week on the propeller Oconto.....F. Lewenberg's store has been enlarged recently, on account of his rapidly growing trade.....The frame for the Presbyterian church is up, and work is being pushed forward by Messrs. Greenwood & Rogers.....Dan Munro has charge of the pulp driver, and is at present driving piles for the enlargement of Munro's dock, at South Arm.....The hammer on Munro's pile driver stuck a pile and drove it down so far that the hammer went into the lake and had to be fished out of eighteen feet of water and mud....Ch Tuesday last we crossed the river and called on S. G. Jenman, and while there we were shown a limb on a plum tree, eighteen inches in length and less than half an inch in diameter, upon which were over one hundred plums.....Messrs. G. A. Fraser, G. A. Starkweather, and M. Connor, of Plymouth, Wayne county, Mich., were in town several days, accompanied by their ladies, looking up a location for a bank. They were well pleased with our town and surrounding country, and think there is a probability of their returning and locating with us....The ground has been broken for the new machine shop, foundry, and sash, door, and blind factory at this place. Two of the firm, Messrs. Malpass and D. T. Manse, are getting material on the ground for the new building. They inform us that everything will be ready to run in sixty days. Late advices from Mr. H. Mitchell, machinist, say that he will ship the machinery from Port Huron by September 1st.

The editor of the Vermontville (Eaton county) Hawk has been rusticating in northern Michigan this summer, and among other things writes the following concerning one of the large manufacturing establishments of Charlevoix county.—Stoepel, Martin & Co.'s mill, at East Jordan:

This is one of the fastest-cutting mills in the state, and it takes about thirty-five men to keep it moving. As we have heard so much about "steam feed," we will try and convey to our readers some idea of it. It doesn't mean that horse feed is here made by steam. It doesn't mean that people eat by steam. Nor does it mean that the carriage is manipulated by belts and friction pulleys. It means that the saw carriage is literally moved back and forth by steam. The mill stands east and west, the saw cutting toward the east. To the west of the carriage, on the floor, and extending under the carriage, is a steam cylinder 48 feet long, with a piston inside of the same length, protruding from the east end of the cylinder. This end of the piston is fastened to the carriage. The head sawyer's position is to the south and west; he manipulates the lever, which is no more nor less than the lever of a throttle in the hands of an engineer. If it be a small log he moves it fast accordingly; if a large one he is more cautious, but it moves back and forth, never ceasing. Three men are on the carriage, one to set, one to dog; it takes them exactly two seconds to put on a log and dog it. It took them just two and one third minutes to saw a 45x1 foot pine log into inch boards. The exhaust from the steam feed corresponds to the speed of a walking beam to a common side-wheel steamer. The average day's work of the mill is fifty thousand feet—one saw. The saw-dust is carried to the arch by buckets on an endless chain, and about all the firemen does is to watch. Four double due boilers furnish the steam, and they drive a hundred horse power engine. There is no change in the motion, and the engine rolls on eleven hours each day, Sundays excepted, stopping only for dinner and to change saws four times a day. This mill is built twenty rods from the east shore of South Arm, a half mile from the mouth of Jordan river, and stands on piles over twelve feet of water. Two or three acres of made dock suffices for all the practical purposes, and this connects with the hard land by a splendid saw dust road.

Advantages of Charlevoix.

A late number of the Kalamazoo Telegraph has the following concerning the beauties and advantages of Charlevoix:

Charlevoix has the superb advantage of lake breezes in two ways and with the winds which commonly prevail in a Michigan summer has the advantage of them all. Its landscape surroundings are those of an inland lake, one of the prettiest sheets in the west, and in this respect it could scarcely be improved.

With these advantages understood, it is still a matter of wonder that so large a business of this kind should have been built up in the short period since the offering of inducements was first commenced. The railroad company have pursued a liberal and farsighted policy in helping the several associations to get on their feet. It has come to be an enormous item for the passenger department of the line. It is already the most valuable specialty of the Grand Rapids & Indiana road, although the business is still in its infancy.

It is worthily a subject of pride that the chance of location was so happily made. The Charlevoix resort gets water breezes both ways. It has the inside and outside lakes. It fronts one way on the bay harbor, a beautiful spouting ground for small boats; and the other on Pine lake, extending away 16 miles in a winding changing landscape of hill and valley and woods and meadows. It resembles the lakes of central New York.

The place is not so conveniently accessible as some, but will naturally have millroad connections of its own not long hence. It is reached by four ways now, and one of them, the bay trip from Traverse City will always be a favorite, however much more direct a railroad line may do. The boating privileges of the Charlevoix resort could not be surpassed. There are two long lines of boat houses, many of them having elegant boats.

It has been said that "straws tell which way the wind blows." It is a positive fact that to-day there are more democratic papers starting in the state of Michigan, than has been thought of in the past twenty years, and they are being liberally supported too. This is no bad omen for the future success of the democratic party in the state. It shows conclusively that the masses are getting awake, and beginning to realize a sense of their situation, that they want a change of administration, and are bound to have it. Our republican exchanges are now offering premiums to increase their circulation, such as the "Texas Siftings," "Peck's Sun," etc., in fact, anything to bolster up their decaying carcasses. The party is on the downward road, and they no longer put their hands into their pockets and draw forth rolls of greenbacks, in order to keep their party organs agoing, and many of the papers are getting very thin, and ere long they must succumb, and new live democratic papers will be taking their places. Hundreds of these little republican sheets throughout the state, who have, heretofore lived out of the state printing will soon be singing that great old song: "We'll wait not live always; we ask not to stay."—St Ignace Free Press.

"I'm glad Billy had the sense to marry a settled old maid," said grandma Whaling at the wedding. "Gals is billy-skitty, and widdows is kinder uncertain an' upsettin', and maids is kinder thunkful an' willin' to please."

The Bay City Press says there is a place in that valley where ten per cent a month is the rate of interest adopted, and others where they feel that they have done well by loaning if they take the principal and interest and let the party off with his life.

Almost Marvelous.

The way Parmelee's Blood Purifier works upon the human system. It is such a thorough purifier, it strikes at the root of the disease and by its perfect workings effects a cure almost before the patient is aware. It seizes upon every particle of poisonous matter in the system, expells it and instills new health and vigor through the entire body. $1.00 per bottle. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co.

H. W. Sage, besides making a present to West Bay City of a library building which will cost $25,000 when completed, has purchased for the library 8,000 books at a cost of $12,000. He also proposes to deed to the city the block on which the library stands, which is worth $12,000 to $15,000. His whole gift will aggregate from $40,000 to $50,000.

Quick Relief.

Hamilton's Jamaica Ginger Tonic and Pain Cure is not only a valuable internal remedy for all stomach and bowel difficulties, such as Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Heartburn, Flatulence, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Cholera, and colic, but cannot be excelled for an outward application in Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Sciatica, Sprains, Stiffness and backache, and strains in any part of the body. Used freely with warmth and rubbing it gives quick relief. Price 25 and 50 cents per bottle. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co. 9

The South Carolina moonshiners have struck a new lead. A reward of $50 is paid by the government for the destruction of illicit stills, and it has become a profitable industry among the "crooks" to erect a chain of stills in some remote locality and afterward make a raid upon and destroy the same, receiving the government reward. Verily, there are many ways of turning an honest penny.

Medicine for Children

Must not only be effective but so compounded that no harm will result from the use. Such a preparation for worms do which almost every child is subject to Parmelee's Vermifuge Pills or Lozenges, which are made from the best drugs, particularly adapted to this use. They work quickly, surely, and harmlessly, passing off the worms after they are dissolved. Do not neglect the children, even though they do not complain. Worms are almost always present. Price 25 cents per box. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co. 9

The recent volcanic disturbances at Java and adjacent islands constitute one of the most serious disasters of this year of horrors. The full extent of the calamity is not yet known, but in the nature of things the loss of life must be heavy, as the region devastated was for the most part thickly populated. Some estimates place the loss of life as high as 75,000. New islands have arisen where the sea rolled before, and other islands have disappeared beneath the waves. The physical convulsions which could thus change the topography of the entire region must indeed have been tremendous.

One of the Invalids.

E. M. PARMELEE: Dear Sir,—I have been taking your Aperients, and find they are the cure for some time past, and have received great benefit from it. Inclose you one of the $50 worth of doctor's medicines that I have taken for no less than years. Before taking the cure I was weak and tired out, and had to stay home one week out of my sixteen days. Would not be able even in the house. Believe it is one of the best medicines in the world. Yours,

ROBERT A. LOCKHART.

John W. Mackey, the California millionaire, has taken the presidency of the postal telegraph company, and announces that the work of extending the lines will be pushed forward as rapidly as possible. He says that the program heretofore announced will be adhered to, and that telegraph poles will be put down in hand-pace. It is possible that these promises may mean something, and that an era of cheap telegraphy is near at hand; but the public will be well to accept occasionally, and not place too much reliance on promises. In actual fact the Western Union is making money, and making it at the rate of $1,500,000 net annually on a capital invested of about $20,000,000. It is high time for competition and a reduction of rates.

A TRIFLE.

He put his arm around my waist—
I did so, and looked, oh, very silly;
And yet, at being thus embraced,
I did not frown in the air was chilly.

He reached my hand and I put his chin
Just a little above my left ear;
The little blush I was in was—
To tell the truth, I did not miss it.

Then, as I turned my face toward his,
Our lips were near—near to forbid it—
Somebody kissed! The trouble is,
I don't exactly know who did it.

Pear Growing.

Northwest Farmer:

Col. D. S. Curtess, in the National Farmer, says: The veteran pomologist, Col. M. P. Wilder, once remarked that "Pear-growers can scarcely go amiss or too far in the use of ashes, charcoal, lime and salt about the roots of their trees to produce healthy trees and sound fruit."

At a discussion on this topic some time ago, by the Pennsylvania pomological society, it was maintained that if cultivation was given at all to pear trees, it was bad policy to do it by plowing near the trees, but that the ground should be dug or stirred by pronged hoes or spades. It was also urged in the same discussion that no stimulating growth should be made which produced soft, unripe wood late in the season, too late to become hard and ripened before the frost comes, as such soft wood was subject to speedy injury from frost, and thereby liable to bring on blight or other disease to the unripe wood.

Low branch pruning was also earnestly recommended as beneficial, tending to healthy trees and better fruit. That is, in pruning, limbs should be left low down on the body of the tree, to shade both the trunk and roots from the cold winds and hot sun rays, which injure the roots.

And to make this shading more perfect, mulching the earth for several feet around the trees is found to serve a very good purpose, preserving both moisture and coolness to the roots during the heat of summer, which is highly beneficial to the health of fruit trees, as the heat and dryness are injurious to both tree and fruit, tending to blight and other disease.

Wm. Saunders, S. Melton and Paschall Morris, all good authority in this matter, concurred in the above views of the society.

As to the distance which pear trees should stand from each other, so much depends upon several circumstances that no specific rule or distance can be recommended. It is enough to say that standard trees require and occupy more room than dwarfs. One thing is certain, that trees are more frequently confined to too small space rather than too much; it is well to give liberal room, where land is plenty, that the air and light may freely circulate among them. No doubt you have noticed that very generally the outside trees of an orchard are more healthy and vigorous, producing finer, larger specimens of fruit than the trees of the same variety in the middle of the orchard. It is believed that an orchard of fewer trees, at ample distances, well cared for, will afford more profit, one year with another, than a larger number of trees in smaller space, at shorter distances from each other.

Then let the pruning be low down, with short or clipped heads, so that the fruit can be more easily and safely gathered than from taller trees with higher heads.

It is conceded by most growers that the best aspects for pear trees are northern slopes, where they will be less liable to the direct hot rays of the sun at any time of the year, especially in winter and early spring; as it is well known that the direct rays of the sun on the frozen trees are a most frequent source of destruction or injury to the trees, sudden change from extreme cold, or frosty state, to that of hot sun, is far more severe upon trees then hurdled freezing in mid-winter, or the hottest sun of midsummer.

Another consideration of decided importance is, protection against early sprouting of the fruit buds in spring, often during warm, mild weather in the latter part of March and early April, the fruit buds will begin to put forth and get forward enough so that the cold, rough blasts, later in the month, destroy the buds and prevent fruiting. Now trees occupying northern slopes get less direct sun heat; and the buds are slower putting forth, and consequently are less liable to be destroyed by the April blasts of cold winds. Shelter from severe prevailing wind is also desirable.

Taxation.

In discussing the tariff question it should be borne in mind that the tariff is merely a system of taxation. A tariff like our own, is a tax levied upon thousands of articles in common and constant use by the people. Necessarily it increases the cost of living. Furthermore, it is taxation for two purposes. One purpose is to obtain money to support the government, to obtain money for star-route thieves, and to pay the unnecessary costs of their prosecution; and the other purpose is to benefit private interests. Taxation is of two kinds—direct and indirect—or internal taxation and tariff taxation. All internal taxes, less the cost of collection, go into the treasury. This is taxation for revenue entirely. Tariff taxes not over one-third go to the government. The other two-thirds go to enrich a few persons engaged in certain kinds of business. The one-third is for revenue, the two-thirds is for protection. Now all taxes are a burden to the productive labor of a country. Taxes to support government are a necessary burden, while taxes to benefit private business interests are an unnecessary burden. And tariff taxes are a heavier burden than internal taxes, for the reason that the former are levied in part for the benefit of private interests, while the latter are levied solely for the benefit of the government. Tariff taxes by a treble burden upon the people.—Patriot.

Jay Gould has been, it is said, for two years trying to work up a sentiment in this country in favor of a government telegraph. His plan is said to be to give the government the Western Union system upon a basis of annual payments to stock holders of the surplus earnings for a period of 20 years. It was on a plan of this kind that the British government purchased the telegraph lines. The net earnings of the Western Union telegraph company are said to be about $7,500,000, so if Gould should secure its lobby and carry the scheme through, the W. U. stockholders would get $150,000,000 for a telegraph system which has been constructed for about $20,000,000.

This is the kind of a horn protectionists and protection journals toot. Protection enables manufacturers to get higher prices for their goods and consequently enables them to pay higher wages. But when employes ask for an advance in wages on account of this protection they are coolly told if wages are advanced the increase will be absorbed by the increased price of articles. And yet we are told, our laboring men are made to believe it, that protection is the laboring man's bonanza. Eaton Rapids Progress.

Airing Rooms.

Northwest Farmer:

Airing rooms is sometimes carried to excess. We have been sent to sleep in a room destitute of stove or fireplace, and found the windows open, with the mercury at the freezing point. It was so cold in the rooms as "all out doors." We might just as well have undressed out in spring, often during warm, mild weather in the latter part of March and early April, the fruit buds will begin to put forth and get forward enough so that the cold, rough blasts, later in the month, destroy the buds and prevent fruiting. Now trees occupying northern slopes get less direct sun heat; and the buds are slower putting forth, and consequently are less liable to be destroyed by the April blasts of cold winds. Shelter from severe prevailing wind is also desirable.

The Ontonagon Miner says: It is a shame the way the bird's-eye maple is being destroyed in this country; all because we have no mills that make a business of manufacturing that kind of lumber. This timber if put into market in the shape of plank, would sell at from $40 to $160 per thousand feet. We confidently believe that there is more to be made in manufacturing hard wood lumber, than there is in pine.

An exchange sarcastically remarks: "Only a few more weeks of toil and the farmer will hang his hoe in a sighing and throw his plow in a fence corner. The corn will be husked and the tools will not be needed until the next season. Then a new mortgage can be given to buy tools to take the place of those rotted through neglect."

The Frost.

Last Sunday and Monday mornings a severe frost did much damage to crops throughout the northwestern states. The following paragraphs from the Detroit Evening Journal of last Monday will show something of the extent and severity of the damage:

At the Chamber of Commerce New York, Monday, bushels of telegrams were received concerning the effects of the frost in the northwest on Saturday and Sunday nights. The reports caused the greatest excitement among the traders. The latest advices may thus be summarized: Minnesota and Michigan corn crops ruined; Wisconsin tobacco and cranberry crops ruined; Kentucky and Tennessee, heavy frosts, much damage. Corn is rising on the strength of these reports, but the loss to farmers will be immense.

In many places near St. Joseph, Mich, the corn was killed, and tomatoes largely cut. One man lost $700 worth of melons. The ground was frozen solid at Ewin Springs. The grapes are slightly injured.

At Orion were heavy frosts Saturday and Sunday nights, doing very much damage to the corn, cloverseed, buckwheat and garden vegetables. The corn was just in roasting ears, and will be almost a total failure.

Gillet & Hall, of Detroit, have received advices from Jackson, Lansing, and Charlotte, and northern Indiana, which indicate that corn and cloverseed are badly injured. Corn has advanced 1@5c since fears of frost were first felt, and went up 1@c Monday.

F. T. D. Dewy, of Owosso, and C. Young, of Concord, say the frost was very severe, and materially injured crops at their places Saturday night, and at Owosso the farmers are cutting their corn and setting it up in shocks, as it will mature better that way.

John. H. Wendell of Detroit, says the corn crop of Michigan is a small factor in the corn crop of the country. His advices from Illinois are not positive, but in Michigan advices say there is fear of injury to clover, and that there is great injury to corn. The frost has caused a marked advance in the price of corn and oats.

J. W. Flynn, of Detroit, says only meagre advices have been received, but they indicate considerable damage to corn and all vegetation by frost. There are fears for the clover crop.

The tomato and cucumber crops are reported almost entirely ruined. Tomatoes have advanced from 50 cents to $1.50 per bushel.

At Rochester, Mich., there was a heavy frost Saturday night, and a still heavier one Sunday night. At daybreak Sunday morning the thermometer stood at 32 degrees, and on Monday morning at 28. All the late vegetables are destroyed. Ice froze Sunday night a quarter of an inch thick.

A Chicago Tribune editorial says that reports indicate that two-thirds of the corn crop is damaged by frost in the northwest and north half of the corn belt.

Notes and News.

Shoe and leather dealers claim that their trade will stand alone against the competition of the world. Then what is the necessity of a protective tariff?

Ex. Gov. Hubbard, who, it will be remembered, went back on his daughter because she had married a poor man, has now lost his entire fortune by speculation in Wall street.

Among the names mentioned for a democratic gubernatorial candidate for 1884 are ex-state senator A. B. Morse, of Ionia; Don M. Dickinson, of Detroit; and state senator M. Shoemaker, of Jackson.

The Detroit Free Press reproduces a paragraph from the Boston Globe giving the methods adopted by a bashful young man to cure himself of bashfulness and receive "check." Heavens! what a deal of trouble that young man would have saved himself, if he had only joined the republican party and got an office.

If the high tariff woolen men get one more opportunity to tinker with the revenue laws, poor people will have to warm themselves with mustard plasters instead of overcoats. —Lansing Journal.

The various street car lines in Grand Rapids have been consolidated under one management. It is possible some faster motor than horses will be placed on the fair grounds line, for the benefit of races, fairs, etc.

A Newark, N. J., man has invented an artificial egg which can not be distinguished from genuine hen fruit. The machinery will turn out a thousand an hour. This would be an excellent place to set up in business, and bring down the price of eggs.

Anyone wanting state news combined with orthodox republicanism can get it in cheap, convenient, and handsome form by buying the Lansing Weekly Republican. It is the best exchange we receive on that side of the political line.

The shoe and leather trade is reported by large manufacturers to be absolutely able to stand alone against all free trade competition that can be brought against them, and with lower prices on some articles of raw material they can beat the world.

The amalgamated Irish and Catholic societies of Fall River, Mass., have resolved to "boycott" the daily Herald because the latter refused to print an appeal for aid in behalf of the families of the men who were executed for complicity in the Phœnix park murders.

A manager of a large boot and shoe manufacturing house says that he found journeymen shoemakers in London getting wages on the basis of $12 a week for the same grade of work for which $15 is paid Boston. This difference of wages is more than over balanced by the difference of cost of living.

An exchange observes that the greatest man after a newspaper is the one who is too mean to subscribe. He is always in waiting for the latest paper, and it is not two minutes on the owner's premises when the nonsubscriber pounces upon it, and never lets up till the last line is read, and then perhaps cast it aside with the remark that he could make a better paper himself.

The New York Tribune says the "Dog Star" is the cause of all our great disasters to human life this year, as well as the unusual state of the weather. While Father Saturn has cracked his whip, and the Ball has been tossing his horns and kicking out its hoofs, this terrestrial ball has been so well shaken up that even Wall street is out of joint. Glad to hear some satisfactory solution of all this trouble.

"The government has decided that the mottoes made of poor whiskey, flavored with various harmless drugs, and sold under the thin disguise of bitters, must pay an internal revenue tax. The trade to them is sustained by men who assume too much respectability to buy a quart of whiskey, and by those so far gone in intemperance that few rumsellers would supply their demands," says the Chicago News.

A new idea in intemperance reform is offered by one Jonathan Mann, of a small town in the little state of Massachusetts. He says the way it is now managed makes drinking more attractive than ever, and he believes that if intoxicating liquors were sold by all grocers in good repute there would not be one-tenth as much drunkenness as at present. But his great idea is to offer rewards to men and women to abstain from the use of intoxicating liquors.

Harper's Weekly is recognized as good republican authority. Read what it says about its own party: "The republican party is snirched with the whiskey ring swindles, and the star route swindles, and the Belknap swindles, and the salary grab, and the third term plot, and a myriad other similar jobs, and thefts, and crimes. The argument will be that no reform is possible until such a party is turned out, and that it can be turned out only by putting in the democratic party. That such a plan is shrewd and promising is undeniable."

A long needed reform, it seems, is soon to be attempted by so revising the Roman alphabet that the English language will be simplified and made much easier to learn. A Chicago lawyer has been spending a number of years in arranging a spelling book which he claims will accomplish the great work. Should the new system be adopted, nineteen twenties of the present labor and expense of learning the English language will be saved.

It has been claimed by some that the republican party may always be found upon the right side of all moral questions and in accord with the best sentiments of the people. We would like to ask how the republicans of Michigan can favor a license, and the republicans of Iowa favor prohibition, and both be upon the right side. And if one state is wrong, which is it? The republicans brag too much about their morality. It sounds suspicious. —Charlotte Leader.

The campaign in Iowa at this time furnishes many illustrations of the wavering of the republicans upon vital issues. One of the most prominent is that of Hon. John A. Kasson. Fearing that his party was suffering by being loudly identified with the temperance movement, he said in a speech at Jefferson: "I am no total abstainer. I cannot be called a fanatic on this question, for in truth I would not object to a beer garden on every square." And yet Mr. Kasson is a republican member of congress.—Charlotte Leader.

When such industries as mill making are compelled to lie idle one fourth of the time to keep stocks down, and the firms are still able to make handsome profits, is it not time to reduce tariffs, make prices lower, and thus extend markets so as to give employment to help the whole year instead of a portion. The same wages for a year, with steady employment, is far better than a high rate with enforced idleness a large portion of the time, for idleness leads to dissipation, and dissipation to pauperism, regardless of rate of wages.

"Any system of political economy that bears heavily on the working masses is radically defective. Free trade as a system is unfair to laborers because it subjects them to unfair competition. A protective tariff, because it saves them from such competition, is directly to their advantage. Therefore a protective tariff is the true policy for the country."—Breeze. A protective tariff does not prevent unfair competition in labor. There is no duty on imported labor. The price of labor is regulated by the laws of demand and supply, while the articles of consumption necessary to life are protected by heavy tariff taxes. And suppose the wages are a trifle lower, which we doubt. Lower wages and steady employment is far better to any class of laborers than a high rate and enforced idleness one-fourth of the time or more. Idleness begets dissipation, and dissipation leads to pauperism.

People may make injury worse by unreasonable comfort, by giving way to sage and satisfying that for the moment, instead of thinking what will be the claim of the future.

The old gentleman who got tripped up while trying to cross the ball room, remarked to the man who crowded in a supposititious, that it was always pleasant to be thrown in the company of young people.

An exchange, in alluding to Mahone's desperate effort to retain the political control of Virginia, says that that individual is "pulling his best foot foremost." Long-eared animals like the one referred to usually pull their "best foot" backwards.

The Sun says that "the republican party need go." Over at Paris they won't go, and in 1884 they should not go down at Washington. It does begin to look as if there is but one power that can get a republican "go" and that is the republican party.

In the telegraph strike the operators had the best wishes of good men, because, 1st, they did not interest themselves with property, or the right of any man to work if he chose to do so; and 2d, because the object of their strike, if attained, would make us poorer and poorer.

The Polygamy problem in Utah is not solved. In the recent election three theocratic were routed humiliatingly. Verily, with polygamy, priestcraft, treasonnace and a number of other vital questions, Uncle Jonathan is going to have plenty of work on hand for the next fifty years.

John Kelly has written a letter in which he says that certain movements in the political field mean that "the end of Tammany is to be remoulded by the democracy. He says "Tammany is not conducted to suit he suggested with as much vigor and effect as that made in 1871 by us."

It is stated that no city built on the site of old Indian towns has yet been a third-rate one, or worse, that no big town among others of Chicago, Omaha, Denver, and Kansas City, has yet been a rival to our municipal business, even when what they were about when they selected a town site.

Dress in a Hot Country.

It is, of course, superfluous to say that the better classes of Hindoos are always decently or even elegantly dressed from boyhood, yet the children of the most wealthy are sometimes introduced to visitors without any clothing but a string of beads around the neck, or a pair of elegant slippers on their tiny feet, while in the photographic galleries one can find few pictures of any kind but nude children. Among the lower classes boys are frequently never dressed till they are 12 years old. Girls commonly wear clothing sooner, though the first few years of their lives "pass with only a pair of earrings, which find their way into the ears of every female child before she is 1 year old. With servant women the costume consists of a long, trailing skirt, whose waist is out very low around the shoulders, from which it is constantly slipping. The short-sleeved waist is often the only under-garment of white; but, as a rule, they are extremely fond of the gayest colors and delight to make their dresses from the kind of print designed to imitate patchwork. When their children are dressed at all they wear a single, long-sleeved loose garment, which covers the knees and which sometimes almost touches the ground. For these slimpsless little dresses black is one of the favorite colors, and the effect is the climax of singularity.—Para Correspondence San Francisco Chronicle.

Turkey and Chicken Wings.

Turkey and chicken wings should never be thrown away. Many preserve them to brush off the stove or range. That is right. But there is nothing better than a clean wing to wash windows. Chamois or buck-skin is very good, but wings are far better for washing. The chamois is better to polish after washing. The wings cost nothing, so their use is good economy, utilizing that which would otherwise be thrown away. Keep some of the wings to dust furniture, others to clean stoves and ranges, if possible, but if not able to secure enough for the various things where they can be made useful, don't fail to keep some to wash and clean windows, because nothing so thoroughly cleans the corners as a wing, and it leaves no lint behind as cloths will do. Nothing is better than a wing to spread on paste when papering walls, and a clean dry one to smoothe out the paper after putting it on. Nothing we have ever tried does that kind of work so thoroughly and neatly.—Mrs. H. W. Beecher, in the Housekeeper.

Political and Government Townships.

A full township, according to the United States Government land survey, is six miles square and contains thirty-six sections. This is often called a "Congressional township," sometimes a "Government township." Along the border of large lakes and navigable rivers, and particularly next to State boundaries, fractional Congressional townships are common. For purposes of township government, fractional townships are in many cases united with adjoining townships, or two full townships may be joined under one town organization. In other cases three or more Congressional townships organize under one or two political town governments, according to the convenience and wishes of a majority of the inhabitants.

Rev. Mr. Daniels goes to Cadillac the coming year. Mr. D. has been here two years, and so far as we can learn there has been a steady growth in membership and attendance, in his charge. We have no doubt he will be as successful in his new field.

The business card of Mr. J. M. Clark, will be found in this paper Next week it will appear in its proper place in the directory. Mr. C. also has a stock of groceries in his building on the corner of State and Antrim streets, to which he will add from time to time until it is equal to the needs of that end of town.

Evan's express is making good time these days. Mr. Evans is the most accommodating man ever on the route, and we sincerely hope he will continue.—Enterprise. We are assured by Mr. Evans that he has teams at his disposal to meet the wants of the traveling public, whatever direction they choose to go.

Last Tuesday evening an old-fashioned tea-meeting was held at the M. E. church, which was also a farewell social to the pastor's family. One of the events of the evening was the presentation to Mrs. Daniels of a quilt on which was written in indelible ink over five hundred names of our citizens. The entertainment was a most enjoyable one, and will be long remembered by all the participants.

The following is a dispatch to the Grand Rapids Democrat, from Ionia: Mr. Van Vleck owns a cottage on the river, and has been a regular visitor to Charlevoix for a number of years. "Word was brought here this evening that Virgil Van Vleck, cashier of the second national bank of this city, had been found dead with his brains blown out, near Palo. Van Vleck's parents reside in that place, and he went there a few days since to visit them. It is said that he went out hunting this morning alone and was not seen afterward until found dead. No further particulars have yet been received, but there are rumors of suicide. Van Vleck has a wife and two children, was a prominent member of the Baptist church and apparently happy in his domestic and business relations. His connection with the bank is supposed to be straight, but an investigation will be made tomorrow."

O. D. Mason is building a pleasure boat 13 feet long somewhat different from the usual style of building boats, being made of pine strips 9-16ths by one inch, hollowed one side and rounded the other and beveled sufficient to give form, without inside ribs, and nailing one piece to the other. It is expected to make a much lighter boat than can be made in any other way with same strength, and it can be kept cleaner inside.

The Redpath Lyceum Magazine is a handsome quarto volume of 64 pages, devoted to the interests of the Redpath Lyceum Bureau. This bureau is agent for the best lecturers, readers, and musical talent in the country, and the magazine gives briefly the specialties of each person, with a few press notices and testimonials. Local societies desiring high class entertainments should send for a copy, to the Redpath Lyceum Bureau, Tribune building, Chicago.

Mr. W. J. Stevenson is building a new shop 45x28 feet, two stories high, on the corner of State and Antrim streets, the first floor of which is to be occupied as a blacksmith and woodworking shop and the second floor as a paint shop. Mr. Stevenson came here two years ago with but small capital, and has not only built up a good trade, but invested his surplus in real estate, and become fully identified with the growth and best interests of the town.

"The natural laws of business say that the farms and work shops should be near each other." We have the finest and best hardwood timber skirting Pine lake and South Arm; we have excellent facilities for shipping; we should have the mills and factories to convert this timber, as near as possible, into articles ready for use. The men who work in these factories must be fed, which will give a home market and better prices for every article of produce the farmer has to sell. The farmer is consequently directly interested in promoting manufactures.

The Original Nashville students, the celebrated plantation singers, are coming to Charlevoix and will be at the opera house Sept. 13th. Already the event is becoming "town talk." The Port Huron Times contains the following: "There was a good attendance at the concert given by the Nashville Students, at the social rooms of the Congregational church, last Saturday evening, and the programme, with a few changes was carried out in fine style. The company is an excellent one, and the songs of the old plantation of the South are rendered by them with spirit and feeling. A quartet, 'Come Where the Lilies Bloom,' the singing of the male quartette, and variations of 'Home sweet Home,' as a male duet, by G. F. McPherson, were the most pleasing features of the entertainment." Ticketts on sale at Wood's drug store.

Last Friday evening a meeting of gentlemen prominently identified with the business and growth of Charlevoix was held at the office of Upright Bros. to consider a proposition of a gentleman who desired to erect a grist-mill here, if a suitable location could be furnished. It was stated at the meeting that two lots could be secured on the south side of Round lake, and a paper was presented for subscriptions. One third of the necessary amount was pledged then and there. Since that time the paper has been circulated, and more than half the necessary amount has been subscribed. It is to be hoped that there will be no hitch in the proceedings, and that the mill will be built at once. We are authorized to state here that the site is to be secured, and if the gentleman above referred to does not build a mill, the site will be offered to some other man who does mean business.

Mr. Avery and Mr. Hicks visited Luther last week and while there fell in company with a business man from Baltimore who said that the extension of the C. & W. M. railroad would reach their place by the middle of November and would push on to Traverse City next year. Sherman Pioneer.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

Crop Items.

The following items from the Grand Traverse Herald show the capacity of the soil in those portions of this northern region. Will our farmer friends in Charlevoix county bring in similar items, so we can show what can be done here in agriculture:

F. A. Stover, of Garfield, has left at the Herald office magnificent specimens of Early Rose potatoes weighing a plump eight pounds to the dozen.

George A. Blood, of Fife Lake, the other day picked a bushel of white huckleberries, which far surpasses the ordinary kind, both in size and sweetness.

J. T. Crane, of Blair, brings to the Herald office early dent and white flint corn 10 feet, and 10 feet 6 inches high, respectively. This is not much of a year for corn, you know.

This isn't much of a year for wheat, but Judge Hannah'll showed us the other day the yield of one kernel's planting, and we counted thirty heads and many of the heads contained twenty "business," and many of these three kernals each. Now figure it up yourself.

F. J. Stover, of Garfield, reports stalks of corn, of dent varieties, 11 feet 8 inches in height, from ground to top, and still growing. It is plump 6 feet to some of the ears. A favorable September will mature the crop. The seed was brought by Mr. Stover from Indiana, and is of varieties that mature early in that state.

Giles Milks, of Wilson, Kalkaska county, called at the Herald office a few days ago and left samples of wheat and potatoes grown on his farm. This farm is upon the "plains," and the success Mr. Milks has met with is another proof that the pine plains of northern Michigan can be made into good farms. Mr. Milks went on his place about nine years ago, and reports increasing crops each year. The wheat shown us is the White Russian, and is as well grown and well headed as any we have seen this season. The potatoes are large and fine and are of a variety ripening some two weeks earlier than the Early Rose. Mr. Milks has helped to settle the vexed question of what shall be done with our plains land.

The Influence of the Moon.

Northwest Farmer.

A Cadillac, Mich., correspondent of the Country Gentleman asks these questions: Does the moon have any effect on peas or any other crops, or in other words, does it make any difference when planting or sowing, whether the moon is old or new?

To which the editor responds as follows: The moon has no influence on the growth of plants, the entire light of the moon for one whole season not being equal to that of the sun for five minutes. Where full records have been kept for years they show no average influence; but for short periods sometimes bearing one way and sometimes the other. Superficial observers will remember coincidences with these rules, forget the failures, and become confirmed in error.

This, doubtless, is sound doctrine, and the quicker all farmers come to believe it the better for them. Then, instead of waiting for the proper time in the moon to sow their crops, they will put them in the ground when the soil is in order and the weather favorable. It is the earth not the moon, that has to do with the success or failure of crops.

The Smithsonian Institute.

The Smithsonian institution is the greatest literary and scientific clearing-house in the world. Its scope in this field is universal. Any person can send here any number of copies of a scientific publication, addressed as described, and the institution sees that they are delivered without cost to the sender. An American author can thus distribute an edition of a learned treatise through all foreign countries, near and remote, as well as his own, while foreign writers can in turn reach every learned society and student in this country or in other foreign countries. Practically the exchanges are made in most cases between societies rather than individuals, and so much does can be gained of the proportions of the work from the fact that the institution now has 3,154 societies or agents with which it is in regular correspondence. The report for 1881, just published, gives 2,908 foreign correspondents in that year, distributed as follows: Africa 26, America (outside of the United States) 135, Asia 68, Australia 82, Europe 2,578, Polynesia 2, miscellaneous 7. Ten years ago there were only 1,085, while in 1850 the institution was in communication with only 173.

One of the witnesses before the senate committee on labor, last week, told an important truth in an eloquent manner when he said that the workingman was the beautifier of the nation. but those who live in elegant houses, wear purple and fine linen, and fare sumptuously every day, pointed upon this expression of the witness and realize, if they can, how much they are indebted to the working man and woman for their beautiful homes, beautiful garments, splendy linens, exquisite pictures, fine jewelry, elegant carriages and the ten thousand things that money can purchase, but which no one but the workingman and woman can supply. —Elk Rapids Progress.

During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, nearly four hundred million dollars for the support of the government, and not less than six hundred million dollars for the benefit of private interests were taken from the people in the way of taxes and bounties to a few manufacturing interests. Of this enormous sum a portion runs the wheels of government, and a portion goes as a sinking fund to some capitalist who has conceived the idea that it would be a fine thing to run an industry to which the government would act the part of wet nurse. No farmer was ever protected thus; no laborer or mechanic ever felt this influence. It is only the class who desire to make goods and sell them to the laborer for twice what our British cousin asks, and if the laborer kicks on the price the manufacturer cries out that if his industries are reduced he won't survive. When the laborer complains he is told that a whole ship load will take his place.—Saginaw Times.

Since Dorsey's very damaging disclosures of republican rottenness, many other even more wicked and outrageous acts committed by the leaders of the "party of morality" are daily coming to light. The Mormon letter ghost will not down, but is fast developing into a material body; the letter written by Silvernail to Amberson and Webber is in good hands in Washington, the New York Truth is coming to the front again, and the time with such sort evident, palpable "facts" to back it, that no appeal to the courts will again be made by republican leaders; Stanley Matthews is "mum" respecting the motives which influenced Garfield to appoint him associate justice of the United States supreme court; and taken altogether, the republican party is now in such a demoralized plight that the approach of the national campaign is a matter which its leaders contemplate with anything but joy and gladness.—Chippewa Democrat.

Mr. C. Cree, formerly of Eagle, Clinton county, last spring moved his aspiary to this county, locating it about one and one-half miles south of here, sometime in May last. The growing of bees heretofore has been a matter of speculation, but he looked over the ground and became satisfied that no better place in Michigan could be found for the successful culture of them, and he brought with him sixty swarms. His success has been good thus far, having now 120 swarms and about 2,000 pounds of beautiful white honey, judging by the sample left on our table. He has also 1,100 pounds of clear extracted honey, which is as clear as water and very thick. The time has gone by when there is any doubt as to raising anything in any part of the state that can be raised in any part.—Pelosky Democrat.

Gov. Begole has already passed the crisis of his administration, with a general approval so decided and strong, that it is sure to secure for him a popular endorsement next election, should he consent to enter for another term. His undisputed honesty, his kindness of heart and simplicity of manners, combined with that native sagacity that has made him one of the foremost business men of the state, have won for him the love of the timesses and the admiration of all unprejudiced thinkers. The allied press of the greenback and democratic parties should be on the alert ready to receive the unscrupulous attacks of the regular press with that strong defense the subject affords and deserves.—Grand Rapids Leader.

The fact is shown by a congressional investigating committee that the government has absolutely collected from the people and paid over to the bond holders $100,000,000 (in coin) more than the bonds cost them, with interest on such sum up to the present time.—Chicago Sentinel.

"Death's shining mark—the grim archer scores a bullseye in the person of an honored fellow townsman. Alderman Smith—he no longer blocks the sidewalk—has gone, but leaves the golden pave."—Denver Tribune Herald.

We don't take in all this bosh about protection advancing wages or free trade so called cutting them down. Labor like any other commodity for sale is regulated in a large measure by the supply and demand. If the supply is abundant, wages for labor will decrease. On the other hand if the demand is sharp and the supply is limited wages will increase, tariff or no tariff. Why we remember when the iron company were building the furnace here, it being late in the season, there was a sharp demand for mason and a short supply, and the company were forced to pay $4 to $4.50 a day to some parties who scarcely knew a trowel from a pudding-stick. —Elk Rapids Progress.

When making soup in which roots or herbs are used, a good way to put the seasoning in the bottom of the bottle and place the roots or herbs on it, boiling, for four days in small pieces, cover with cold water, and then put a plate over the mess, pressing it down closely; let this cool slowly, and when this water is almost evaporated put in the desired quantity for the soup.

Almost Marvelous.

The way Parmelee's Blood Purifier works upon the human system. It is such a thorough purifier, it stands at the root of the disease and by its perfect working clears it out so almost before the patient is aware. It strengthens every particle of poisonous matter in the system, expells it and leaves no health and vigor through the entire body. $1.00 per bottle. Sold by O. R. Weed & Co.

An excellent method for testing the purity of soft water is to fill a quart jar two-thirds full of the water, and take it pin a teaspoonful of granulated sugar. If after standing forty-eight hours the water is of a milky hue, it is impure and unhealthy. Saccharine matter always causes a fermentation of organic matter, and hence the sugar discloses its presence.

Queer people show their oddity in the modes which they take to shuffle off this mortal coil, as often as any other way. Perhaps the best recent illustration of this fact is the case of an old lady who wished to die, and, willing all she was a heavy storm about to break, took a rocking-chair down into the cellar, seated herself calmly rocked and waited till the rising water submerged and drowned her.

Medicine for Children

Must not only be effective but so compounded that no harm will result from its use. Such a preparation for worms to which almost every child is subject is Parmelee's Vermifuge Worm Candies, which are made from the best drugs, particularly adapted to this use. They work quickly, surely, and harmlessly, passing off the worms after they are dispatched. Do not neglect the children, even though they do not complain. Worms are almost always present. Price 25 cents per box. Sold by O. R. Weed & Co. e

Prosperity usually ruins nearly as many men as strong drink. The sudden coming into the unaccustomed use of money, admission to a style of living never dreamed of before, the acquaintance of men and women who have known the fashionable world all their lives, upset their common sense, fire their vanity, and plunge them into the dissipation in fast life that leaves them financially bankrupt and physically wrecked. It requires a level head to withstand the enticements of prosperity.

One of the Invalids.

E. M. PARMELEE: Dear Sir,—I have been taking your Compounds, diabetes, Condition fever cure for some time past, and have received more benefit from it than from all of the good worth of doctor's medicines that I have used in the last five years. Before taking the cure I was weak and tired out all the time, but now can work all day without fatigue. Would not be with out it in the house. Believe it is one of the best medicines in the world. Yours,

ROBERT A. LOCKSHAVE, JR., Somers Iowa, Pa.

"Yes," said the farmer to the keeper of the store in the village, as he came down to report the effect of using a new preparation which had been recommended as sure confusion and sudden death to insects of all sorts whatever, "it works like a charm; I never saw anything that so discouraged the bugs. I tried it on my potatoes and squash vines, and now there isn't a bug in either patch." "Good," said the storekeeper, "killed 'em all, eh, didn't it, just as I told you?" "Not exactly," said the farmer, "but it killed every tarnation vine on the place, and then the bugs got discouraged and left. Got any quick-growing squash seed in your stock? And how about good planting potatoes? It's pretty late to start crops again, but I reckon if the season holds off until late I shall realize something. And if the man for that box of liver comes round, tell him he can get a box of seven pills, I'll be right up to my place."

TO THE COLONEL.

A riddle you have told me many
And to prove it you I'm not a jimpsey.
This wondrous mystery I'm in amazed—
Eighth wonder it may be, it shall be told.

What but the year has twelve months rolling by Thousand times twice twenty days revolving high
Has filled with Ills? Pray, what kind of ills?
One that a'l splendor eclipses other ills?

But let me hint; a slight mistake was made!
Not thirty leaves on every branch to fade;
Some leaves have three more, and one has less,
As the colonel himself will have to confess.

Changes in Protectionist Opinion

Bradstreet's, a conservative commercial journal, says in its issue of August 11:

We have heretofore, as occasion seemed to suggest, endeavored to make clear to our protectionist friends that the time commercial policy of the United States for the future must lie in the direction of greater freedom of exchange, and that the time will soon come when the tariff controversy will be found in the adoption of a plan looking to the gradual reduction of duties on a sliding scale extending over a period of years. While admitting that the vested interests which have grown up and have been fostered under the tariff policy of past years, are entitled to large and generous consideration and should not be arbitrarily and suddenly interfered with, we have been careful to remind those in favor of maintaining the existing system that by insisting upon terms that they are likely to provoke the enactment of radical and unconsidered measures in the not very distant future. Our position in regard to the tariff difficulty, while such as to commend itself to temperate and judicious men of all shades of opinion, naturally did not fall in with the extravagant views of the more extreme adherents of the protective system. This was not to be expected, nor did it occasion surprise that the utterances of journals published in centers of protectionist effort and dependent upon protectionist support should continue to advocate the maintenance of protection as a permanent policy.

Of late, however, there have been some signs of a change in this respect. Some weeks ago the Philadelphia American, disclaiming the idea that it was in favor of the tariff as a permanent institution, declared that it could conceive of circumstances in which the tariff would cease to be required as a means to the industrial independence of the nation, and that in such a case it would favor the reduction of duties to the revenue basis. This, however, while in some sense a concession, considering the quarter from which it came, was still hypothetical and only dealt with the matter in the abstract. A much more significant declaration perhaps the most significant that has been put forth upon the tariff question of late—is contained in a recent article in the Pittsburg Leader. That journal, commenting upon Mr. Wharton Barker's scheme for distributing the surplus revenue among the states in order to save the war tariff, says: "We may as well look the matter in the face, gentlemen of Philadelphia; by no such artificial means can the inevitable be shunned, and the inevitable is just this: unless there is another war of such a prodigal expenditure of public money on rivers and harbors and public works, and Mexican and Confederate pensions, and workingmen's homesteads, etc., such as the world has never yet seen, the tariff must go, not suddenly we hope, not disastrously if we properly prepare ourselves for it, but as certain as this country is to grow in population and wealth, good sense dictates that we Pennsylvanians should not fight this result with wild projects and fanciful dreams like the Barker scheme, but should give our best thoughts and patient endeavor to found our industries while we have yet time on such a solid basis that they can undergo the coming change without shock, and blossom out into new prosperity when they stand no longer on government props but on their own merits."

The interest of the paragraph quoted is, as will be seen, by no means of an abstract nature. Its significance lies in the fact that it discusses the tariff controversy in the light of actual present circumstances and of the inevitable future. The conclusion reached by the Leader is that a reduction of duties on a sliding scale extending over a period of years. While admitting that the vested interests which have grown up and have been fostered under the tariff policy of past years, are entitled to large and generous consideration and should not be arbitrarily and suddenly interfered with, we have been careful to remind those in favor of maintaining the existing system that by insisting upon terms that they are likely to provoke the enactment of radical and unconsidered measures in the not very distant future. Our position in regard to the tariff difficulty, while such as to commend itself to temperate and judicious men of all shades of opinion, naturally did not fall in with the extravagant views of the more extreme adherents of the protective system. This was not to be expected, nor did it occasion surprise that the utterances of journals published in centers of protectionist effort and dependent upon protectionist support should continue to advocate the maintenance of protection as a permanent policy.

The Michigan Central Bridge Across the Niagara.

The Michigan Central railroad is building a new bridge over the Niagara river a little distance below the falls. The chasm at that point is 850 feet from bluff to bluff, and the grade 245 feet above the surface of water, and being just at the head of the rapids the structure must be such that it can be erected with out false work or temporary supports. The bridge is to be a double track steel bridge built to carry upon each track at the same time a freight train of the heaviest kind extending the entire length of the bridge, hauled by two "consolidation" engines, and a side pressure of thirty pounds per square foot, which pressure is produced by a wind having a velocity of seventy-five miles per hour. Under the above loads the structure is strained to only one-fifth of its ultimate strength. The total length of the bridge proper is 850 feet, divided into two cantilevers of 375 feet on the Canadian and 395 on the American side, supported by steel towers rising from the water's edge. A fixed span of 125 feet is suspended from and connects the river ends of the cantilevers. The clear span across the river is 500 feet, being the longest double track truss span ever yet built. The Central Bridge Works of Buffalo have charge of the work, and they are to complete the bridge by Dec. 1, 1883.

So accurate is the design and workmanship that no two pieces are put together until placed in their final position in the bridge, yet every member must fill its place to the hundredth part of an inch. By the powerful machinery used here, the steel having a strength of 80,000 pounds to the square inch, is cut, punched, bored and planed with as much ease as though it were pine. After it is completed, it is loaded on cars by aid of steam derricks—one thing—three men to handle the heaviest pieces with perfect ease—and sent to its location. For erection at the bridge site, temporary scaffoldings of timber using some 600,000 feet of timber, will be built from the bluff on either side out to the edge of the water on a level with the top of the bluff. Upon these the shore arms of the cantilevers will be erected, one end resting on the steel towers and the other upon masonry upon the bluff. The shore end will be firmly anchored to this masonry, so that it will take an uplifting force of 400 tons at such end to displace it. This constitutes the counterweight to balance the unequal loading on the river arm referred to above. As this, under the most unfavorable conditions, can never equal 200 tons, the provision is ample.

After the structure is completed, from the shore to the steel towers, comes the difficult portion of the work, i. e., to span the 200 feet across and 245 feet above a roaring river whose force no earthly power can stay. No temporary structure can survive a moment, and here the skill of the engineer comes in to baffle nature and laugh at her powers. The design of the cantilever is such that after the shore arm is completed and anchored as above, the river arm may then be built out, one panel or section at a time by means of green traveling derricks, and be self-sustaining as it progresses. After one panel of twenty-five feet is built and has its bracing adjusted, the traveling derrick is moved forward and another panel erected. Thus the work progresses section by section until the ends of the cantilever are reached, when there still remains a gap of 125 feet to close. Into this will be swung and suspended from the cantilever arms, an ordinary truss bridge forming the connecting link and completing the structure.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

A TEXAS steer broke loose from a beef-white coming out of the Charleston yards to Boston. He then one workman in the area and ran down the aisle, and dashed through Dorchester to East Cambridge and back again to Boston, finally plunging off a pier into the Charles river, where he was lassoed with a derrick and lifted out. Several persons, principally children, were gored and trampled on before being finally injured. Stephen Harris, butcher, was cited, President of the Quadruck Company, of Illinois, and, soon in Van Cortlandt and demanded protection. The ex-Senator said he would kill Harris if he attempted to enter his cell, and that he was would make a corpse of anyone who went to the property in his absence. It has been which left Boston came in contact with the Fast New York express, Conductor McMillan, Thirteen persons were injured, and seriously, but none fatally, thought, killed.

The Foreign Exposition in Boston was formally opened on the 30, though still very incomplete. The Japanese exhibit which is large and artistic, is attended by natives in their native costume. Among the products of Japan are some of the finest silk tapestries ever woven and exquisite specimens of the famous Japanese bronzes. The Egyptian exhibit is the finest ever brought to Boston, and the Algerian exhibit is the finest ever brought to Boston

BUSINESS.

Sixty-four Thousand Dollars in New Buildings and Additions.

Fifty-two New Residences and Cottages this Year.

An Exhibit of what the Charlevoix House Builders have Done and are Doing.

The question is frequently asked by strangers, "What are you doing in the way of new buildings and improvements?" To give a correct and satisfactory answer, the JOURNAL has made a careful canvas of the whole village, and finds a total of fifty-two new residences and summer cottages, besides numerous other improvements, the cost of which, in labor and material, aggregates sixty-four thousand dollars.

To make this canvas it was necessary to go from house to house and inquire of the owner or occupant. Where neither could be found, inquiry of neighbors or an estimate based on the cost of other houses of similar size and construction was found necessary. In no case have the estimates been exaggerated, and we believe the totals represent fairly the business that has been done.

In the beginning of the canvas, the intention was to print the cost or value of each house or improvement, but a few owners made objection, giving good reasons, and suggested that the size of building or description of improvement be given instead. As this could not be done without going over a portion of the ground the second time, it was omitted, and the figures were given with the understanding that they were to be used only in making totals.

A few residences are included which are just commenced, but which will be completed and occupied this winter, and property come in this year's work.

In the matter of public buildings and stores there has been very little done, the work on Mr. Batters' store alone covering fully one-third of the entire amount.

On the subject of shops, warehouses, and docks, which properly includes all manufactories, the people seem to be just awakening to their necessity and importance, and another year we shall expect to see the amount multiplied several times. Two industries already agitated (the fruit-canning and the grist-mill) would crowd pretty close to the total for this season, and there is little doubt that others may be secured this fall if our people work for and try to get them.

There was considerable hard work connected with making this report, but we shall not have worked in vain if it is the means of inducing even one man to locate here, either in mercantile or manufacturing business. It represents fifteen hours tramping, up hill and down, cross-lots and through the sand, with the hot sun beating down like a summer day.

First taking up

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND STORES,

we find a small list, with an aggregate of only eleven thousand dollars, as follows:

A. Batters, brick store, two stories.
L. D. Bartholomew, finishing opera house.
Congregational church, to be partially completed.
Odd Fellows' hall, finishing.
John Bell, store 21x40, two stories.
John Bell, addition to store, 20x12.

Following with

SHOPS, WAREHOUSES, AND DOCKS,

we find the list slightly increased, but the aggregate is very low, being only four thousand six hundred dollars, as follows:

Stockman & Iddings, two-story warehouse for hardware, and tin shop.
Washburn & Ackert, foundry, pattern room, and black smith shop.
Wm. J. Stevenson, blacksmith and wagon shop, 45x28, two stories.
Joseph Hyland, boiler works.
John Nicholls, dock and mill improvements.
Upright, Emrey & Co., dock, warehouse, and improvements.
Chicago resort, boat house for 12 boats.
Charlevoix resort, boat house.
Greening & Geiken, dock, fish house, and ice house.
E. Carpenter, warehouse.
When we come to the list of

NEW RESIDENCES

we find something to be proud of. Fifty-two new houses in one season is a large number for a village like Charlevoix, and forty-three thousand dollars for new buildings, and five thousand four hundred for additions and improvements, is a large sum to expend in so short a time. But large as it is, from what we can learn, next year will largely increase, if not double it. To give a better idea of the class of buildings erected, we have classified them by their value in thousands:

$3,000 and upwards.

A. R. Upright, Henry Bennett.
Byron See.

$2,000 to $3,000.

Harrison Berdan. E. M. Clark.

$1,000 to $2,000.

C. F. Van Auken, Burr cottage.
L. Lewis, Allen Potter, cot.
Chas. Swallow, R. S. Abbot, cot.
Kirkpatrick cot., D. C. Loveday.
Moore cottage.

Under $1,000.

Philip Maulge, O. Blair.
E. P. Houghton, Chas. Ely.
H. B. Weir, cot., Jos. Beauvais.
A. J. Mudge, Jas. Beauvais.
J. Cook, A. F. Mather, cot.
O. S. Satterlee, cot. Horace Hull.
C. Lamoreaux, H. Wade.
J. J. Kanaga, H. S. Harsha.
C. R. Bellinger, A. Cameron.
—Sheridan, G. W. Crouter.
G. M. Rice, D. S. Way.
G. W. Wrisley, Geo. Pappin.
Fred See, Jos. Pappin.
Hayes Bros., (2) —Hurlburt.
H. C. Cooper, O. I. Wheat, (2)
A. R. Colgrove, Robt. Willkes.
C. B. Gloss, Wm. Horton.
C. S. McCausland, John Lamphere.

In the following list of

ADDITIONS, IMPROVEMENTS, AND BARNS,

there are but three items of less amount than $100, and none less than $50. And the chances are that we have missed a considerable number that ought to be represented here. If there are any, we shall be pleased to mention them in another issue. The total is five thousand four hundred dollars:

Mrs. O. A. Sears, addition to cottage.
S. Parker, finishing and improvements.
L. E. Allen, finishing and improvements.
G. W. Bell, finishing and improvements.
W. A. Smith, improvements.
John West, addition to cottage.
H. S. Harsha, addition to residence.
W. S. Johnson, addition to board ing house.
Dr. L. Lewis, addition to residence.
Dr. L. Lewis, barn.
Jas. Ackert, barn.
D. C. Loveday, barn.
F. J. Meech, barn.
Rev. C. F. Van Auken, barn.
John Kelley, improvements.
N. Aisslie, barn.
B. P. Bisbee, addition to residence.
John Bell, barn.
L. Cook, addition to residence.
J. A. Lawrence, addition to residence.
Mrs. McElroy, addition to residence.
W. H. Carr, finishing and improvements.
Wm. Evans, finishing and improvements.
Mrs. Lynn, finishing and improvements.
H. S. Harsha, addition to tenement.
J. M. Easton, finishing and improvements to tenement.
Horace Hull, barn.

If there is a village in northern Michigan which can make a better showing, let them print their figures, with names, as we have done. And when we get through with buildings we will look around for some other evidence of industry and prosperity and compare notes there. There is a bright future for Charlevoix, if we all have faith and work for it.

For some time past the republican organs of the state have been asserting that State Senator Michael Shoemaker, of this city, is quietly engaged in laying the wires to secure the nomination on a union ticket next fall as a candidate for governor. This statement, perhaps, might be believed in some portions of the state by those who are not personally acquainted with Col. Shoemaker, but here in Jackson county no one can be found who will believe for a moment that the assertion has any foundation, for the simple reason that Mr. Shoemaker has never engaged in any scheme to secure his own nomination as a candidate for office. Whatever aspirations he may have harbored with in the past have come as a spontaneous offering from the representative men of his party, who were prompted by a feeling of confidence in his ability to represent his party and its principles creditably. So far as the gubernatorial candidate for 1884 is concerned, the Patriot knows that Col. Shoemaker has made no movement to secure the nomination, and is not a candidate for that or any other office. He feels, however, a deep interest in the success of the opposition to republicanism, and realizes the importance of harmony and judicious nominations at the next state convention. To this end he will labor and lend his influence, and if all members of the union party are controlled by the same feeling, we have no doubt the entire state ticket can be elected. While the democracy, and we believe also the greenbackers of Jackson county, are gratified with the record which Senator Shoemaker has made during two terms in the state senate, and while they are confident he would make a most excellent governor in every respect, there is no desire to urge his nomination for that position unless it shall become apparent that he will be the most formidable standard bearer to lead the combined forces against the stalwarts in the campaign of next year. That contest, coming as it does in a presidential campaign will be an important one, and especially here in Michigan. Disappointed and chagrined at their partial defeat on the state ticket, and the loss of half the congressmen last term, the republicans will undoubtedly make greater efforts than ever before, and use every means within their power to regain entire control of the state and the congressional districts, and we suspect that as a part of their tactics they have been charging Col. Shoemaker with laying plans to obtain the nomination for governor, with with the hopeof creating discussions among the democratic and greenback elements of the opposition. If this is their object they can rest assured, however, that it will not succeed. Neither the democracy or the greenbackers are willing to have the republicans dictate who shall be their candidates any more than what shall be their platform of principles. We predict that at the conventions of the two parties next year harmony will prevail, and a union ticket will be unanimously agreed upon, and that it will be elected by the people. The republican organs, fearing this, are already sounding the tocsin of alarm by imploring their party to reorganize throughout the state, preparatory for work during the next campaign.—Jackson Patriot.

An abundant crop makes the farmers prosperous. An abundant production of corn makes the iron manufacturers prosperous. The farmer sells his surplus products in the open market of the world. The iron manufacturer shuts the doors of the world's markets against our iron. When our market has enough iron the mills stop, wages stop, and business ceases. When our market has enough wheat we ship it and the plow goes on.—Charlotte Leader.

A telegram from Rev. J. T. Iddings, received yesterday afternoon, announces that he cannot be with us next Sabbath.

Particulars from Ionia in regard to the death of Virgil Van Vleck at Palo seem to indicate that he committed suicide while under mental depression caused by overwork. When found dead he was lying with the breech of his gun resting upon the muzzle toward him. His accounts at the second national bank are all right and great sorrow is felt at his untimely death.

A steer around the north side of Round lake would open up an excellent manufacturing district. We believe the owners could donate the water front and sell the balance of the property as soon as the factory was running for more than they can get for the whole as it is now without a street. But it is not necessary to donate. Just open a street, and give some one a chance to lay at a reasonably low figure.

Mr. John Bell informed us last Saturday that the frost had not touched his corn or other crops, and his tomatoes and peas were still green, thrifty, and in blossom. And several farmers living south of the village, report about the same state of facts. Those of our citizens having friends in other counties seeking new homes, should remember this among the inducements offered to locate here for agricultural pursuits.

Mr. C. H. Mead, of Lansing, has been traveling extensively through northern Michigan this summer, and came to Charlevoix this week for the first time. He is delighted with our location and surroundings, and predicts a prosperous future for business of all kinds. The opinion of a man who has traveled as much, and is so well acquainted with business as Mr. Mead, is of value, and should be remembered by those who stand, doubting, in the way of others, more ambitious and progressive.

Mr. W. P. Brown has a bed of bright blooming cereus which will open in a few days. They will notify their friends in the afternoon of the day of its opening.

Dr. W. M. Preston, surgeon and homeopathic physician, remembers the JOURNAL this week with a business card, which will hereafter be found in our directory on the first page.

Next Sunday will be the first anniversary of the organization of the Congregational church in Charlevoix, and the event will be celebrated at the opera house with appropriate service.

The Chicago & West Michigan R. R. Co. disbursed $56,000 among its employes at Muskegon last Wednesday, being one month's wages. What a bonanza that would be for Charlevoix.

Will our neighbors up the lake print a fair and honest list of new buildings and improvements, like the one in this paper, and show to the outside world how much they are doing?

Miss Hattie Sneed, editress of the state news department of the Lansing Republican, visited Charlevoix last week, stopping with the family of J. S. Dixon. While in town she favored the JOURNAL with a call.

Mr. A. A. Nichols and wife of Lansing, visited Charlevoix during the past week. Mr. Nichols is a member of the firm of A. Clark & Co., carriage manufacturers, and took advantage of the cheap excursion rates to see this region.

The barn of Chas. Root, of Marion township, burned Saturday night, destroying five acres of wheat not threshed, and some poultry and household goods. A cow which had been locked in was turned out. Supposed incendiary.

Mr. Frank E. A. Smith, of Charlotte, has been prospecting in this region for an opening in some manufacturing or mercantile business. He represents a firm of ambitious young men, and we hope he will decide to remain with us.

Geo. Budd, of the Sentinel, has been prospecting for a business for himself, and has gone this week to work it up. When started we shall probably have more to say of it. George has the reputation of being a faithful and thorough workman, and such a man seldom lets business drive him when working for himself,—he drives the business. Success.

S. J. Rogers, farmer and lumberman, of Grand Junction, with wife and daughter, are stopping at A. R. Upright's.

Mrs. E. McLester and son, of Plainfield, Ills., who have been stopping at Mr. Aisslie's for a few weeks, returned home Wednesday.

The infant daughter of G. S. Thomas died Tuesday night, of cholera infantum, after an illness of only about 24 hours.

If you want to see some fine samples of needle work go to Dr. Crouter's and watch the operation of the Davis sewing machine.

Buy a few extra copies of this JOURNAL and send to your friends. Let them see how you are working, and what you have to show for it.

Mr. Geo. W. Mead, of Charlotte, visited Charlevoix last week, while prospecting for a possible location in the law and land title business.

W. J. Stevenson, will get into his new shop this week, and tear down and move away the old shop now in rear of Woods & Co.'s harness shop.

An entertainment in elocution by two gentlemen of diminutive stature, is announced for the 28th, at the opera house. Particulars next week.

While southern Michigan suffered greatly from frosts, Charlevoix and vicinity escaped unharmed. Tomatoes, peas, and beans are still thrifty, and in blossom.

John Bell has torn down the old building next to L. D. Bartholomew's hardware store, and will erect a new store building 21x40, to be finished as soon as possible.

Mr. C. W. Clinch and wife, of the office of state board of health, took in the cheap excursion from Lansing and remembered the editor and family while in Charlevoix.

The Grand Traverse Herald came out last week as a sixteen page paper, —112 columns, 76 of which were live advertisements. Verily, the good people of that burg have faith in printers' ink, and know where to use it to the best advantage.

The entertainment given by the Nashville Students at the opera house last Thursday evening, could not easily have been surpassed, and the house was crowded. They are a fine looking company, and their singing here fully sustains the reputation given them by the press of large cities.

Last Sunday evening about half past seven o'clock was witnessed a very brilliant and beautiful display of aurora borealis in the north and northwest. It rose in waves, many-colored like a rainbow, and the motion corresponding to the motion of Lake Michigan, which had been considerably disturbed by high winds during the day. We understand that the display about midnight was much more brilliant, but that was after our bed-time, consequently did not see it.

Miss Alice Cantright, who has been stopping with friends in Charlevoix for a few weeks, has been teaching a class of girls in penmanship, offering a prize to the one making the most improvement. At the close of the term, it was decided that Miss Aggie Kirkpatrick had earned the prize. From the specimens shown we should judge that Miss Cantright is a successful teacher, as all the pupils have shown decided improvement. She went home on Wednesday, but may decide to return and teach another class this fall. If so, we have no doubt she will be as successful as in the past.

In Grand Traverse the accounts are conflicting. Meeting one farmer he tells you things look black. Meeting another he will tell you everything is bright and green. From careful inquiry we gather that there has been considerable harm done in spots and on the low lands, but almost invariably the high lands have escaped. We do not think that, all in all, there has been much damage done through this and adjoining counties, although, as before said, there are localities where crops will be badly cut. Certain it is, that the farmers of Grand Traverse have escaped much better than many in other parts of this and neighboring states.—Grand Traverse Herald.

Will some person tell us why an agricultural implement manufactory will not pay as well in Charlevoix as in any town in Michigan? Hardwood timber for frame work grows here; pine is more available than in many places further south; iron may be shipped in entirely by water without reshipment by rail, as most iron furnaces and mills are reached by water navigation, and the product will easily find a market in northern Michigan and Wisconsin. Such an institution would also add greatly to the inducements to some railroad company to extend their line to this village, and when built, add to the freight business of the road.

A correspondent suggests the following as the philosophy of frost visiting certain localities more disastrously than others contiguous: "It is nonsense to talk about its being the winds upon the higher lands that has exempted them from the depredations of frost; as the air on that frosty night, Sept. 9th, was as still as the grave, on the high lands as well as upon the lower. The philosophy of the matter seems to be this, that freezing is the natural state of all things when left a certain length of time without the life-giving rays of the sun. The valleys and lower lands are in most places overshadowed by the hilltops for a length of time before sunset; hence their liability to freeze before the higher where the sun's rays linger longest. Of course this law is counteracted often by various causes; such as warm winds, the evaporation of heated lakes, springs, etc."

There are a few business men in this village who ought to be represented in the advertising columns of the JOURNAL, to show that they appreciate the beneficial influence of competition, if for no other reason. We aim to make our paper represent, as nearly as possible, the business interests and material growth and prosperity of the village, together with its resources and advantages. To do this requires some money and a good deal of hard work. Our article this week reviewing the building done have represents about fifteen hours tramping in the hot sun. The figures could be obtained in no other way than going from house to house and inquiring what had been done and how much it cost. A large number of extra copies have been purchased and sent by our citizens to friends in other counties or states, who probably would not have seen a paper or had any idea of what we were doing in this lively little burg if this work had not been done. Every paper so sent will be preserved, and be a record, not only of the article in question, but of the business men who patronize and support the paper which thus works for their town. This article will answer a question frequently asked by strangers, "well, what are you doing in the way of improvements?" Any man could answer by pointing in any direction to the new buildings everywhere visible. "But how much in dollars and cents?" "Don't know." An answer is now possible, and the names and figures are available. Gentlemen (who do not advertise), will you show your appreciation of this work by representing your business in our advertising columns? Take a space of some size, or a card in the business directory. You will get a benefit, if not in increased sales, you surely will by the addition of every family or every dollar of capital brought here by the influence of this paper. We shall not stop with this. Can't tell what will come next, but will find something. Give us a "boom" in advertising.

Mr. M. E. Byers, of Banks, who went to Colorado Springs a few weeks ago, wrote an account of his trip to the Bellaire Breeze, from which we make the following excerpt: "The chief industry of Kansas from Brookville west, is stock raising. Owing to a very dry spell of about three weeks' duration, the grass looks as though there was no nourishment in it for the cattle. The farther west we went the fewer were the settlements, until there were no settlements at all, except a house or two at the stations. The plains are very desolate looking, not a tree to be seen for hours and hours, and the wind dry and hot." What a contrast with our Michigan! Those seeking new homes will find these northern Michigan counties with more advantages and with fewer shortcomings, and withal a more desirable place for a young man to build a home and rear his family, than those western counties where the hot sun and parching wind in summer, and the "blizzards" of wind, rain, and snow in the winter make life unpleasant, and work very unprofitable. Many ambitious, hard-working families are lured to these western prairies,—barren plains,—by the carefully-worded circulars of railroad companies who have land to sell, and a chain of circumstances make them slaves for years, and their business prevents their taking any unfair advantage in order to get money to come back to Michigan, which they would do if they could. We have met hundreds of men with a pitiful tale of suffering, and their advice invariably was, "Stay in Michigan." Mr. Byers' description agrees with article this week reviewing the building done, and represents about fifteen hours tramping in the hot sun. The figures could be obtained in no other way than going from house to house and inquiring what had been done and how much it cost. A large number of extra copies have been purchased and sent by our citizens to friends in other counties or states, who probably would not have seen a paper or had any idea of what we were doing in this lively little burg if this work had not been done. Murder Will Out.

It seems that while everything is so quiet and peaceful around us, that it is impossible for a crime equal to murder in the first degree to take place in our midst without any apparent feeling or sympathy; but alas, such is life! On Monday, 10th inst., at the clothing house of Upright, Emrey & Co., a wholesale slaughter of ready-made clothing began. From that time until now the clerks have had their coats off, throwing overcoats, pants, vests and full suits in every direction. The company's object is to close out their clothing at cost. Call and get an overcoat for $2.00.

The late frost, said to have done so much damage to crops in nearly every part of the state, I notice has been mostly confined to low lands in this town.

Nearly everybody in this vicinity are now keeping up their cattle. Mr. Chupamn started the good move. He has a large potato patch, without fence, and proposing to use Paris green to kill the bugs, cattle owners took the hint, and few cattle are now seen on this old range. A scare like this does good sometimes. It has made the cows very handy to find every night and morning.

The new "pound" constructed on one side of Mr. Chupman's barn does not work to complete satisfaction. An Indian pony imprisoned there a few nights ago concluded that he'd rather be on the outside, and charged over the fence. Mrs. Addis' "fancy stock" got imprisoned there, too, but he charged under the barn and got fast.

RAISING A CHURCH DEBT.

BY REV. WASHINGTON GLADDEN.

The Methodist Church at New Albion had been struggling under a load of debt. Its edifice, built in the dull times following the war, was an ambitious piece of architecture—the church of its future, beyond a doubt, since it was much larger than the congregation, and the pews were still vacant—but the sanguine builders had expected to see filled by the men who were expected to pay off the mortgages. The Rev. Mr. Thorpe, the pastor, had carried this debt now for two years. It had been the burden of his days and the nightmare of his dreams. At length he had brought his congregation to the point of attacking it. He had made several uniform pilgrimages to the rich Methodists in neighboring cities, but found small encouragement. It was evident that the Methodists of New Albion must shoulder their own load. Accordingly, the first Sunday of October was devoted to a carefully planned effort for the payment of the debt. Mr. Thorpe had concluded to dispense with the services of a "financial agent" and to direct his own forces. There was to be no regular service in the church, but the public were invited to meet at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, and, by the grace of God, the meeting would not adjourn, Mr. Thorpe said, until the debt was paid. A collation was provided in the basement, so that the people might spend the day in the work.

The debt amounted to $32,000, and when the meeting opened in the morning $17,000 were at once subscribed, this amount having been secured before and by private conference with the older contributors. The excellent start awakened great enthusiasm, and for a time subscriptions came in rapidly. At last long before noon the limit of the people's ability seemed to have been reached, and the list footed up only about $24,000. Mr. Thorpe kept his forces well in hand, however, and allowed no signs of wavering. Exhortations and appeals were interspersed with singing; a judicial and energetic committee did a great deal of personal work with individuals; messengers were dispatched to labor with absentees. But it seemed evident that the large gifts had all been gathered in, and there was still a deficiency of $7,000, and the small subscriptions yet to be obtained would by no means supply it.

As Mr. Franklin, of the Congregational Church, walked home after the service with his pastor, they passed the door of the Methodist Church.

"Let's look in a moment," said the pastor, "and see how they are getting along."

They sat down on one of the back seats and watched the proceedings. From Mr. Thorpe's occasional remarks they learned the situation of affairs, and saw that the case was probably hopeless, though the resolute leader did not for a moment assent to such a conclusion.

As they walked along, Mr. Franklin said:

"Making a strong fight, aren't they?"

"Yes."

"But they will not take the fort?"

"I don't know."

"I do. They have got to the sticking point, and they will not get past it."

"Pity," said Mr. Strong, sentiemtiously.

After a moment's thought Mr. Franklin asked, with a new interest:

"Is it lawful to pull your fellow-creature out of a pit on the Sabbath day?"

"I should say so, especially if he is trying to get out himself."

"Lawful to hitch up your horse to pull him out?"

"Yes," laughed the minister.

"Well, you go home and get your team and I'll get mine and have Major put into the buggy. I'll be around here before 1 o'clock, and we'll see what we can do."

"All right."

It was not long before the good white horse came at a week-day pace to the door of the parsonage, and the friends were soon whirling away.

"Now, we've got to be swift," said the banker. "My first thought was to call only on some of our own people, but I am now inclined to give some of the rest a chance. The Episcopalians and the Free Baptists have a heavy debt of their own, and the Adventists are not able to help much. We must enlist the others. Brimsmide must call on the First Church folks, Ellsworth on the Baptists, Thompson on the Universalists, and you I will look out for our own."

They were stopping at Mr. Brimsmide's door, and the master of the house answered the bell.

"We have set out," said Mr. Franklin, "to give the Methodists a little hit in paying their church debt. Will you go and stand in the vestibule of your church and waylay as many as you can of your strongest men, as they go into the afternoon service, and get subscriptions from them? Start the paper yourself. Then ask Mr. Phelps to take up a collection before the sermon for the same object. Get cash subscriptions, payable to-morrow at my bank. Report the amount to me at Mr. Strong's house by 4 o'clock, sharp. Will you do it?"

"What a stampeded you are!" said Brimsmide, laughing.

"Will you do it?" said Franklin, strenuously. "No time for nonsense, old fellow."

"Yes, I'll do it."

"All right. Good-by!"

And the white horse was soon flying down the street.

None of the other churches had afternoon services, and all that could be done in them must be done by personal application to a few of the most prosperous parishioners. But Mr. Franklin had selected the right men as commissioners in each society, and after they had been out of work he and his pastor returned to their own parish, which they divided between them, contriving before 4 o'clock to see a good proportion of its most generous members. At that hour they all met at the parsonage, as by agreement, bringing with them a membership one than the most sanguine of them had hoped to get.

They came down handsomely," said Brimsmide. "Three or four refused to give anything, but most of them had their names down before they knew it. It dropped on them so suddenly that they hadn't time to hunt up excuses. The old doctor warmed up to the business beautifully, and bagged like a professional. Didn't suppose it was in him. They brought in nearly $400 in the boxes, beside all I got from individuals."

The others had much the same story to tell. Sympathy with the Methodists in their courageous efforts was universal, and it had found a generous expression.

"Now each of you sit down and write a short letter," said Franklin, "explaining that the amount you have collected is from friends in your church, naming the amount and stating where it may be called for to-morrow, and we'll go over at once and send the letters up to Brother Thorpe. I trust he is holding out yet, but it must be pretty tough for a man who doesn't believe in the perseverance of the saints to hang on to such a poor promise."

It was about half-past 4 when Mr. Franklin and his friends entered the Methodist Church. The back seats were all occupied, and they stood in the space behind the pews and looked on. The church was pretty well filled, and Mr. Thorpe was still keeping up a lively fire of appeal and argument, but there were no responses, and it was plain that hope had departed from most of the solicitors.

"Will you walk forward and take seats, gentlemen?" said one of them.

"No, thank you," said Franklin, "we are only lobby members. How do you get on?"

"Slowly."

And the solicitor shook his head dolefully.

"How much have you got?"

"Only a little over twenty-five thousand."

"Why don't you stop where you are?"

"Then we lose everything. The greater share of the large subscriptions are conditional upon the raising of the whole debt."

"Won't your subscribers make them unconditional?"

"No. Were begged them to but they are obstinate."

"Pity, isn't it?"

"Yes sir. It will be a hard blow if we fail now."

The discouraged gentleman walked away.

Mr. Franklin's air had been so indifferent that he had not ventured to ask him for particulars.

"Stand up your letter, Brimsmide," whispered Franklin. "Get that small bow to take it up."

The small boy toddled up the aisle and handed the envelope to the pastor.

"Pity," said Mr. Strong, sentiemtiously.

After a moment's thought Mr. Franklin asked, with a new interest:

"Is it lawful to pull your fellow-creature out of a pit on the Sabbath day?"

"I should say so, especially if he is trying to get out himself."

"Lawful to hitch up your horse to pull him out?"

The Alligator Fever.

It beats all how a Northern man does hanker to shoot an alligator just as soon as he gets beyond the Ohio river, and the further South he goes the stronger grows the feeling. It is a sort of "buck fever," and nothing will cure it except the gore of the reptile. A chap from Rhode Island went down to Biloxi from New Orleans with the party. Small alligators were plenty enough along the creeks and ditches, and every time the Ohio State-man saw one he almost kicked his boots off. He tackled everybody around Biloxi for an alligator hunt, and he finally paid a darky $3 to drive him to a lake four or five miles out, where the saurians were said to be numerous enough to crowd each other out of water. The hero had been over in the morning and hired blades, a rope was tied to either end of a water-soaked log and led into the bushes, and no sooner had the hunter gone down and discovered a movement in the water than he opened fire.

"Dat's yer game, boss," said the darky, as he scaled himself in the shade, and the way that old log was boarded at was a caution. The man made ex-shots over the shots and dead shots, and after he had fired about twenty-five times he began to wonder why his game didn't turn from up.

"Takes a heap o' lead, boss, but you is a terrible' hitty mighty bad," argued the darky, and the bombardment was renewed with a determination to hit the bull's-eye dead. Pretty soon a man broke from the bushes to the left, and in a voice of authority called out:

"Shooting alligators out of season is an offense punished by a fine of not less $10."

"Now?"

"How many shots have you fired?"

"Only thirty-nine."

"Shooting off a revolver in the State of Mississippi, except in self-defense, is a fine of $5 for each time! Have you a permit?"

"Permit for what?"

"To shoot at Col. Fred's alligators. If not, he can recover damages not to exceed $500. Did you cross that field?"

"Yes."

"That's trespass, and the fine is not less than $25. You must come with me."

"But, sir—I—"

"I will bring up my horse and buggy and you must go the county jail."

The "constable" started. So did Rhode Island. They went in opposite directions, the latter to make his way into Biloxi on a canter, settled his bond in it without stopping to count the change, and picking up his satchel he dusted off along the railroad track as if called to a death-bed. When he reached his home in Mobile a few days later he had shaved off his whiskers and blackened his eye-brows. He also complained of a lame back and corns on his feet.

"Say!" says he, as he carefully looked around for listeners, "If old Mississippi feels so stuck up over a few ponds and alligators and rooshables she can go ahead and be licked to her! I'll wish St. Jacobs oil, I'll send him, and this is the truth."

A MAN in Massachusetts was sent to reform school for breaking windows and stealing apples when he was 9 years old; then he stole a dog and went to prison when he was 11; he got out in time to set fire to a house and get two years sentence before he was 15; and picked a pocket and got run in on his 19th birthday. Before he was old enough to vote he received a sentence, and since then he has served three terms in as many prisons. It is time he quit this restless, wandering life, and find some good, quiet prison that suited him, where he could settle down and stay.

The World's Population.

The latest estimates by German scientists of the total population of our earth are in round numbers as follows:

Australia	2,000,000	4,000,000
Africa	200,000,000	200,000,000
Europe	300,000,000	305,000,000
America	100,000,000	105,000,000
Asia	850,000,000	855,000,000

Europe is the most densely populated of the continents; Asia contains more than one-half of the inhabitants of the globe. As long as there is evidently room for untold millions of people, there need be no fear of over-population. According to their religious creeds, the above 1,442,000,000 may be classified thus: 212,000,000 Catholics, 121,000,000 Protestants, 85,000,000 Schismatics, 7,000,000 Israelites, 200,000,000 Mohammedans, 163,000,000 Brahmins, 423,000,000 Buddhists and 230,000,000 Pagans. The number of Christians, aggregate, therefore, 420,000,000, the worshipers of one God are less than one-half of the inhabitants of the earth, and 522,000,000 are given to idolatry.

Beauty.

Socrates called beauty a short-lived tyranny; Plato, a privilege of nature; Theophrastus, a silent chest; Theaurius, a delightful prejudice; Cicero, a solitary kingdom; Demetian said that nothing was more grateful; Aristotle affirmed that beauty was better than all the letters of recommendation in the world; Homer, that it was a glorious gift of nature, and Ovid, alluding to him, calls it a favor bestowed by the gods.—From the Italian.

"I like to get some lawyers on a gang of young fellows," he replied as the Chief of Police asked him what was wanted.

"What do you mean?"

"Well, I thus shambled and made some tools out of them. When I thinks it will offer I can see how it will do! I clean out my own cigars and a glass."

"Do you want to enter a complaint?"

"Yes! I want some lawyers to enter-inter forty complaints if I had a sheet."

"Make your statement."

Scarcely less old—from fire, pestilence or war, and far more than any other causes wholly aggressive, a natural tendency to decay, consumes the vitals of our cities. The violent extinguishes in a day, or a year, the accumulations of ages; but leaves no specific section upon the river. The Alexandria of Antony and Cleopatra, Roman Britain, Troy's valley different from the adjacent sea of Greece, Palmyra, half buried in the sand, and Palmyra, half disinterred, remain. It balances a million of dollars, and change in the habits of nations, alike the fear to proceed actively in the pathways of the Mississippi, Sandusky, Brooklyn, Boston, and numerous Hydrocarbon Cities, and suggests the discovery of the Amazon, and the Mississippi, and Sandusky which accompanies their disaster. Fewer days and years will do our cities, which are always advanced with enough disorder of the subject organ, are preserved and relieved by a fire, as it is a medicine of sing and excellence in the hands of Chicago, Boston, Brooklyn, Sandusky and Sandusky.

The frost of last Saturday and Sunday nights was not confined to northern Michigan alone, but was general throughout this and many other states, doing a large amount of damage to crops which had not fully matured. The frost of Sunday night was very severe and was something almost unheard of in this part of the country at this time of the year, but as this is a seasonably off year, such surprises are to be expected.—Petoskey Democrat.

A fishing excursion of two days, 20 miles south on the Intermediate lake was remarkable in its make up and achievements. Two reverend clergymen head of department in the university with the added honor; a distinguished legal ex-regent, and three solid business men, made the company of disciples in the two partner fishing boats. The lake was a long, narrow and beautiful Gedhoe. The toiling was long and benighted, and the Peter could say that he had taken nothing. But his companions, especially those in the other ship beckoned that a big haul was theirs. Fifty-two inches in length and twenty-five pounds in weight describe within a small fraction the mighty muskalunge that with terrific struggles yielded to his captors, and was borne between two. Eight handsome pickerel and numerous small fry pinned the eclipse of their honors to this huge windover of the writers Charlevoix resort celebrated joyously as "the boys came marching home." * * * Some are disappearing from their summer nests, and by next week old birds and young will have flown southward, and with strong wing and clear voice, we hope; and these shores will be silent of the life and songs that have gladdened them. A respect community however abide hard by, larger and more rapidly growing and better domiciled than we had known.—Charlevoix correspondence of Detroit Herald.

He Bought a Box of Sermons.

Stephen B. Mitchell, a Saco, Me., druggist, went to Boston the other day, dropped in at an auction of unclaimed freight, and purchased a large box. He took it to the Parker House. When Mr. Mitchell opened the box he found that he was the owner of about 2,000 manuscript sermons. These extended over a whole lifetime, each having inscribed the date and the locality of its delivery. The clergyman employed a system of stage directions, and had written along the margin of his pages such suggestions as these: "Deliver this passage in solemn tones," "Scornful smile after 'never.'" "Pause long enough to count 25 after this passage," "Close Bible with a violent slam after this passage," "Contemplate ceiling in attitude of adoration at this point," "Slow, emphatic wave of hand," "Rapid gesture." Manuscript sermons do not possess a world charm for Mr. Mitchell, and he will dispose of them by giving one to every customer until exhausted.

Sharp Practice.

A tag on a pair of boots in front of a Hebrew establishment on South Illinois-st. reads "$1.25, not cash." The strange device was clear only after the contemporaneous history of unremunerative life on that thoroughfare was learned. A rival of the above house advertises boots at $1.25. A customer makes a purchase, and the guileful shopkeeper demands $2.50 — $1.25 for each boot. The same house displays shirts at 124 cents each. The yeomun goes in, tosses down a quarter, and asks for "two of them shirts," whereof the brilliant salesman behind the counter declines to sell two, and for one must have the exact change to the half cent, or the price is doubled or trebled as the alternative.—Indianapolis News.

One Touch of Nature.

A boy met a youthful acquaintance in the street, and exclaimed: "Didn't I tell you, Jack Busby, that I was going to whip you when I caught you out?" "Go away Bill, I don't want to fight." "Maybe you don't think I can whip you?" "It don't make my difference whether you can whip me or not. I don't want to fight. My mother—" "Yes, your mother knows I can whole you?" "My mother is dead. She died this morning." "I didn't know it, Jack, and you mustn't think hard of me. I won't fight against you. I wouldn't hit you, and if another boy was ter come up and hit you now, I'd knock him down. There, don't cry. What yer got in that bundle?" "A black dress." "Come on and let me carry it for you."—Arkansas Traveler.

What fact upends more strongly in the mind of thinking people in favor of an least a greatly modified tariff, if not absolute free trade, than the admitted truth that the depressed condition of many of the large industries of this country is such as to challenge serious consideration. The New York Herald calls attention to this subject and says that "as the symptoms are nearly alike in every case, it ought to be very easy to recognize the cause and prescribe a remedy. The fact that many commodities are almost unmarketable, that there is an excess of supply over the immediate demand, and that prices have reached the lowest limits compatible with a continuance of production, shows beyond all reasonable doubt that the productive capacity of manufacturers has outrun the power of the nation to absorb and consume the products. In less than four years the industries of the country have passed from a period of great prosperity to one of stagnation." Well, what other remedy suggests itself, if it is not a material reduction of an excessive tariff, which alone has caused this condition of things? The time was, no doubt, when a protective tariff was necessary; but they our industries were in their infancy, and capital, being proverbially timid, hesitated at investment without protection. Now, those protected industries are strong enough to cope with competition. At any rate, as the predictions exceed the home demand, it would seem to be a good plan to seek outside markets, by adopting a reciprocity policy with other people and exchanging our manufactured goods for their raw materials.—Chippewa Democrat.

There is a good deal of talk in the papers and among citizens because a cowarly English woman is the wife of a Chihuaua, and lives with him and helps him do the wasbing. There is nothing about the affair to create talk. If she had married a lazy white man, who would get drunk on the money she earned, and beat her, instead of helping her earn the money, there would not be much talk about it. Give the woman a chance. A Chihuaua is not pretty, but he works like a steam engine, and don't whip his wife.

This is genuine, practical Christianity, and will do more to elevate and humanize the street gamin than volumes of ninety-second homilies. If there is any use of this sort of missionary work, and somewhat less of that which keeps the suffering and sin of home to look after the needs of foreign heathen, the true excellence of missionary work would be better understood and appreciated by people of the world.

I believe it is one of the best medicines in the world. Yours,

The last spike was driven in the Northern Pacific railroad, at a point 55 miles west of Helena, Montana, last Saturday. There were about 500 people present, notwithstanding the excursion occurred in an isolated place at the western base of the Rocky mountains. Wm. M. Evarts was the orator of the occasion, and delivered a fine address. Speeches were also made by President Villard, Secretary of the Interior Teller, Lord Lionel Sackville, the German minister to America, and General Grant. The one thousand feet of uncompleted track was quickly laid by three hundred workmen. During the progress of the work, which was witnessed by the foreigners with amazement, the band played and the people shouted. When nearly completed a common saloon was fired by a detachment of infantry present. The last spike was driven by Mr H. C. Davis, assistant general passenger agent of the road, who drove the first spike, and this was the same one as first driven by him. The end was reached as the sun was setting behind the mountains. The enthusiasm of the people was indescribable. Thus brought to a happy conclusion a very remarkable event in American history.

ON THE STAIRWAY.

Go up higher, sturdy school-boy,
Do not loiter long below;
You are wanted at the summit,
Briskly, bravely, onward go.

Go up higher, little maiden,
Tripping lightly at the start;
By and by you may grow weary,
Yet go up, be strong of heart.

Go up higher in your lessons;
Go up higher in your play;
Step by step, you'll climb the stairway,
Go up higher every day.

Burdette's Advice to Young Men.

Burlington Hawkeye.

Keep up with the procession, my boy. Don't hang back in the breeching. You may be able to make things drag a little, but you can't stop the team, and you'll have to come along.

There was a man, an eminent mathematician, Dr. Larder of England, who published a treatise to prove that no steamship could ever cross the Atlantic ocean, and the steamer Sirius a few weeks later brought the first copies of the pamphlet to America. This same eminent scientist also staked "his reputation as a man of science," before the house of commons, on his statement that no railway train could ever go faster than ten miles an hour, and the slightest curve would invariably throw it off the track. Babinet, the French calculator, declared that no telegram could ever be transmitted from Europe through the Atlantic to America. There was a man right here in America only one hundred years ago, who opposed the rebellion of colonies because he knew it would be a failure. There was a man who laughed himself sore at Fulton's absurd ideas about steamboats. There were members of congress who wanted Morse shut up in an insane asylum because he talked about a telegraph, which was an impossibility. There was a man who said you never could build a bridge across the Mississippi. There was a man who said you could never raise wheat on the great American desert. There was a man who "knew" that nothing but a steam horse could ever trot in less than 2:40. There was a man "knew" you couldn't make the sun draw your portrait. There was a man who "knew" you never could find a better light than a whale oil lamp. There was another man who knew you could never heat hard oil. There was another man who said Colonel Drake was a gibbering idiot because he said he could pump a better oil than lard oil out of the ground like water. There was another man who said Edison was insane when he talked about an electric light. There was another man who said the phonograph was a clever trick of ventriloquism. There was a man who said the telephone was a newspaper lie. There was a man in England who led mobs of agricultural laborers to destroy threshing machines. There was a man in America who "knew" the invention of the sewing-machine meant starvation for the poor seamstress. And there is a man to-day who "knows" the Indians can never be civilized. There is man who "knows" we have reached the limit of human progress. There is a man who "knows" the people are helplessly enslaved, and will never rise to assist themselves. There is a man who "knows" that all politics are corrupt, all politicians mercenary, the civil service rotten to the core, and our social life is honey combed with decay.

Now, my dear boy, there's only one way for you to escape that man's whining, and obstinate, nullish opposition to every thing. Keep so far ahead of him you can't hear him. And do you keep moving and drag him along. Rasp him with the double-trees; he has to come, for the old chariot never stands still a second. The difference between you and the man, my boy, is that you run, and he is dragged. You spring along with your eyes open, your head erect, and you help to keep things moving. He has his feet set in the road, his eyes shut tight, his back up on his shoulders and his heart under the wheels. Every time you make a leap you throw the dust back in his face.

Don't, my boy, whatever you do, don't get back beside that man. Don't have any breeching on your harness. Put on the breast-collar and that is enough; you'll run more lightly and feel freer. Let the man in the breeching hang back. All that you have to do is to step out, keep pace with the times, sing as you trash along, and keep the man in the breeching so covered with dust, the world will only know he's there by the dirt around him. It may be, Tecumseh, you will run a little fast sometimes; it may be that you will kick over the traces in your exuberance of spirit; you may sometimes want to strike a 2:10 gait on a 3:20 road; you may need more curb than whip, but go it my boy. There is a good driver on the seat, and a firm hand on the lines, and I'd rather see you coasting down the long vistas of history with the bit in your teeth, your heels in the air, the brake rod sprung, and the dashboard flying than down on your haunches, your eyes shut, and your back bowed, the lash on your flanks, and your collar up to your ears, your legs set like crowbars and the dust of the whole team flying in your face, while you hang back in the breeching and only come along because you can't help it.

The Campaign in Iowa.

In the political campaigns of the past, the republicans of Iowa have had everything their own way in that State. The usual majority for their ticket has been about 50,000. The democrats were not able to get up much enthusiasm against such odds. In fact, there were never any steps taken to perfect an organization of the party until last fall. The brilliant success that crowned their efforts then—electing six members of congress—has aroused the democrats to wage an aggressive campaign this year.

The two most important issues involved in the Iowa campaign, relate to the tariff and prohibition. The republicans have boldly endorsed the high tariff scheme of public robbery and and the Utopian effort to regulate men's appetites by statutory enactment. The democrats have pronounced for a "tariff for revenue only" and licensing the sale of liquor. Their campaign was formally opened at Council Bluffs on Tuesday, ex-Senator Hendricks of Indiana and Congressman Springer of Illinois making powerful speeches to immense crowds of people. It is proposed to keep things hot until the close of the contest. The republicans will be stubbornly opposed at every point. It is conceded that the republican majority will be greatly reduced, if not entirely wiped out. The democrats are winning vermin every day. The justice and wisdom of their position is recognized by the conservative citizens of the state, and the latter will vote in harmony with their honest convictions regardless of all purely partisan considerations.

It is an encouraging sign when a state like Iowa, which has always been so one-sided politically, is shaken with a mighty political contest. "Let the waters be troubled that there may be health in their flow."

Woman is just awfully lovely in newly laundered Wamsutta and lawn, when fresh from close communion with toilet soap and a crystal watery bath. She has the ripe peach bloom of Paradise and the breath of the vale of the gape jasmine of the tropical empyrean. When a fellow passes to the windward of a lovely woman who is filling the air with sweetness and purity as she trips gracefully along he delicately sniffs the air for an hour, as if he had got a snatch of heavenly perfume and was trying to woo celestial battlements. God bless the women! If there were none on earth, bald-headed men and babies would be awfully scarce, and courting would lose more than half its flavor. —Burdette.

The utter heartlessness of the monopoly magnates, and their lack of the common feelings and instincts of humanity, are becoming more and more apparent every day. My lord Vanderbilt's "the public be d—d," finds its counterpart in the soulless computations of the Western Union bandits, as voiced by Dr. Green, president of the company, who in a recent interview said: "As I told General Eckert, this afternoon, the several hundreds of thousands of dollars which have been lost in the strike I regard to be the best financial investment made by the company. Hereafter, General Eckert tells me that he will get one-third more work out of a man for a day's service, and the economy of such a step will retrieve the loss in less than six months."—Crowell Democrat.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

A BOSTON dispatch says that "the severe drought in which New England is now suffering has not only ruined the pasturage everywhere, but has killed, which, every farmer expects, not a few of the brooks and weds and scorched the foliage of the forests to a sickly yellow. Many brooks and springs are going to spring into a base on the first rain that comes. Dried fires have been burning for several weeks in some of the outlying districts, and it is impossible to estimate the damage done to timber lands. Fodder is already quoted high in Boston, and should the present drought continue for a few days longer there will be a famine in the matter of fodder. It is impossible to estimate the loss to farmers from these causes, but it will probably reach $1,000,000. Destructive forest fires are also reported in New York and other Eastern States." Mrs. John F. Smith, the novelist, was killed by a runaway at New Hartford, Ct.

A SCORE of villagers attended the auction in Chappaqua, N. Y., at which Horace Greeley's farm was sold. One bid was made for the seventy-seven acres, and it was sold to John Cochrane, Greeley for $10,000. Neighbors who wanted the property had to be satisfied with the daughter. The place cost Horace Greeley about $40,000 and he expended on it in time at least $7,000. N. A. H. Wheeler, a Democratic conqueror from Jersey City were confirmed by the senate, with all the remaining last eight on hand or slaves. The total loss is about $4,000.

T. J. Hitchcock and Mr. Dudley to Mr. G. D. Stoddar, at Stromsburg, Pa., was discovered to be true. The loss is estimated at $15,000, covered by insurance.

THE Newark (N. J.) Evening News publishes two letters from the sickness of little Charlie Ross, written Nov. 22 and 29, 1874 (the month in which the child was stolen) to Dr. Chisholm & Bros. and demanding $20,000 ransom or his son would be put to death. The documents were found among the papers of the late William Hitchcock, Chief of the Philadelphia detectives. The price mined at the time was that the cost losses of $40,000, insurance, $20,000, deposits from Arkansas represent the nation crop as being injured to the continued dry weather. Some counties entirely half a crop will be made. Southern Arkansas is not severely from the drought, and the cotton crop is not affect the corn crop very materially, being matured in most localities.

WASHINGTON.

THE Treasury Commission appointed to investigate the counterfeiting of Treasury Hall have submitted their report to Secretary Fokker. They find the office which has been guilty of official negligence, which in its consequences on the part of great loss to the government, the firm of Bartlett, Robbins & Co., of Boston, who were at the time of the forging the plans for the heating apparatus in question, in the case of the outer shutters were rejected because they were too small, and finally the quality advertised for, Mississippi red cedar, which is known to be the best kind of insulating material, was not used. The report concludes with a recommendation that the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized to employ a competent person to devise a system of internal check upon the issue of warrants, and to make a report to the President of the United States.

WENDELL PHILLIPS denies that he has become dissatisfied with the methods and administration of Gen. Butler. Hitherto the remarks recently credited to him, the Bay Butler would seem to excited Governor of Massachusetts, and now was the Presidential nominee for the Democrats. Mr. Hallet says the reverse of this are the views which he holds.

A BILL for the incorporation of the Southern Pacific Company is pending in the house. Immigrant Commissioner, one scheme of the parties interested in a consolidation of all the railroad and steamship lines in Texas and Louisiana, the aggregate capital of which would exceed $60,000,000, and own, inside, 1,000,000 acres of Texas lands. Gov. Butler, of Massachusetts, has appointed to a Police Judgeship at Charlestown, a colored man named Edwin Walker.

GENERAL.

THE Mercantile Agency of R. G. Dun & Co., of New York, in their last weekly review of the state of business, say that during the week nothing occurred to a change for anyone to the steady improvement of trade. It is true the exchanges show a considerable increase over last week, but this may be the result of business and holidays. Speculation is still dormant, and the depression in securities and produce. But in fact, such indices, when they appear, show the volume of business is large on the whole, and the tendency is to be very much the same. Iron and the cotton manufacture of New York, are the most prominent. The iron and general business begetting into better shape, and is fair market and for our products is very good. The cotton manufacture is very dull, and unfavorable the Sheriff's party and the demand is lagging. In the last few days, about large quantities of goods have been purchased for the spring trade

"Michigan and Its Resources."

We have just received from the commissioner of immigration the third edition of this famous advertisement. It is a volume of 221 royal octavo pages, printed in a handsome bevelled type, with numerous maps and illustrations, and is the result of much study and research. The book is a mine of wealth to one desiring to know the resources, advantages, and possibilities of Michigan. Its articles are classified and indexed so that it is very easy to find any particular subject treated. Under the head of "A description by counties," we find the following concerning Charlevoix county, and we may find occasion to use its pages still farther:

Charlevoix county was organized in 1869. It is bounded on the north by Emmet and Lake Michigan, on the east by Cheboygan and Otsego, on the south by Antrim, and on the west by Lake Michigan. It has an area of 396 square miles, and had a population in 1880 of 5,115. Charlevoix, a flourishing village of 1,500 inhabitants, situated on Lake Michigan, is the county seat. The surface of the county is every where rolling, and in some parts decidedly hilly. The county is well watered. Pine Lake, a beautiful sheet of water, stretches 14 miles in an easterly direction from Charlevoix village. Six miles from Charlevoix, a branch of the lake runs in a southerly direction eight miles. The branch is fed by the famous trout fishing stream, the Jordan. The Boyne flows in at the east end of the lake, and the county generally is covered with innumerable spring brooks of the coldest water. There is some available water power, particularly on the Jordan and Boyne rivers. The soil varies from a light sandy to a heavy clay, filled with calcareous matter. The subsoil is of as varied a nature as that of the surface.

Sugar maple, elm, beech, basswood, ash, hemlock, and cedar timber is found in great quantities throughout the county.

The principal crops are winter wheat, oats, corn, hay, clover, potatoes, and root crops. The summer resorts at Charlevoix furnish an excellent market for all sorts of garden vegetables.

All fruits do well, excepting grapes and peaches. The hardier kinds of apples are especially successful. Charlevoix county is at the northern extremity of the celebrated Michigan fruit belt. The cost of clearing averages $20 per acre, although the wood produced, generally pays for the clearing.

There are no government lands in the market. There were 344 acres of state swamp, 1,995 acres of primary school, 3,525 acres of agricultural college, and 42,285 acres of Grand Rapids and Indiana railroad land, subject to entry May 1, 1883.

Unimproved lands are held at from $7 to $10 per acre, while improved farms average from $15 to $60, in the interior, and from $25 to $100 near Charlevoix. There is a state road from Traverse City to Petoskey, which crosses the county. There are a number of wagon roads traversing the county, most of which are new, but are steadily improving. There are also several tramroads built through belts of hard-wood timber which facilitate travel. Much of the travel in summer is by water. The winter is very steady, snow falling by November 15th, and lasting five months. The summer season is delightful, and the county is a great resort for invalids afflicted with asthmatic difficulties. The schools are very creditable for a new county.

As Pine lake is navigable for large vessels, the timber business is an important enterprise in this county. Wood, ties, fence-posts, hemlock bark, and logs are cut during the winter, and are shipped during the summer to Chicago, Milwaukee, Racine, and other lake ports. There are several saw-mills in the county. An iron furnace at Ironton, on Pine lake, furnishes employment to a large number of men. The fishing industry is also a considerable one.

The Grand Rapids and Indiana railroad crosses the county from north to south, and a railroad is expected at Charlevoix within a year.

The famous resorts on Pine lake have contributed largely to the development of the county, and are thronged every summer with admirers of the beautiful scenery and delightful climate of Charlevoix county.

Persons having friends in other states not satisfied with their present surroundings, would do well to send them a copy of this work. Address the Commissioner of Immigration, Detroit Mich.

An exchange boasts that the marine business is looking up in Chicago, from the fact that in the twenty-four hours ending Monday night 131 vessels arrived from and 96 cleared for ports on the great lakes. We might say that the marine business of Charlevoix was equal to one-fourth that of Chicago, from the fact that a few weeks ago 18 vessels arrived in twelve hours from four o'clock in the morning to four in the afternoon.

The business card of Mr. C. R. Bellinger jeweler, will be found in this paper. This gentleman has recently obtained the agency of the celebrated Rockford watch, which he will handle in connection with his other business, and our citizens will henceforth be supplied with reliable time. He has just ordered a large stock of jewelry, silverware, and clocks, to prepare for the holiday trade, which will give our citizens an excellent chance to make valuable christmas presents.

Mr. Robert Miller has resumed management of the Bridge Street house, and his card will hereafter be found in the JOURNAL with other livemen of the village. With Mr. Miller's experience as a landlord, and his acquaintance in this vicinity, we have no doubt he will keep the house up to a high standard and receive, as he deserves, a large share of the patronage of the traveling public. This house contains a sample room, a feature appreciated by commercial travelers. Former patrons will be cordially welcomed.

Rev. A. J. Eldred, late presiding elder of this district, has at his own request, been given the Sherman charge. Mr. Eldred has done a good work in this district, and has made many warm personal friends during his four years residence in Northern Michigan who will be glad to learn that he will remain here.—Grand Traverse Herald.

"The light of Asia," by Edwin Arnold, editor-in-chief of the London Daily Telegraph, "is a poem in which the effort is made to bring before our modern age, in the western world, that sublime embodiment of the finest genius of the Orient, in its prime, whom we call Buddha, in living form, and to sketch this outline of his speculative and ethical systems in vivid pictorial representation." It is a poem which requires study to thoroughly comprehend, and each reading brings out some new sentiment, well worth remembering. Possibly our citizens will have a chance to subscribe for a volume in the near future.

The board of health of Charlevoix township is desirous of making a complete record of all the burials in the township cemetery since its occupation, and intend to continue it complete in the future. The facts desired are contained in the following headings copied from the book of record: Date of death, name of deceased, age, color, sex, occupation, place of birth, residence, town where death occurred, decease, where buried, lot and block. The board are improving the cemetery, and desire the co-operation of individuals in making and keeping it in a condition worthy our corporation. It is to be hoped that all who have friends buried there will furnish the necessary information as soon as possible, to F. W. Mayne, clerk of the board.

The $1,200 lost by Will. A. Stone, on June 30, was found on Sunday last by his clerk, Mr. Fast, while taking an inventory of some shoes. He was removing the shoes from the box when he discovered the envelope lying on the bottom. He says Mr. Stone described the contents to a cent, told how it was put together, and after Mr. F. wrote the description as given by Mr. S., they proceeded to open the envelope, and found everything to be just as described. Mr. Stone had good grounds for suspecting the parties he had arrested and it is doubtful if they, at the next term of circuit court, would not have been found guilty and sentenced to imprisonment. This should be a sufficient warning to young men to let liquor alone in the future.—Enterprise.

FIRE.

S. M. See, Mason & Co.'s Planing Mill Totally Destroyed.

Loss About $12,000, with No Insurance.

About 11 o'clock yesterday fire was discovered in the boiler-room of S. M. See, Mason & Co.'s planing mill. The engineer promptly pave the alarm, but before help could arrive the flames communicated to the roof and to the main building, and were soon beyond control. The fire department and citizens responded promptly, and put a stream with little delay, but the wind was strong from the southwest, which, with the dry condition of everything about the building, made the small stream thrown by the hand engine of little use. After a few minutes of unsuccessful work at the mill, the engine was moved to a point east of the fire, and efforts directed toward saving lumber and other property, which proved more successful. With the aid of a bucket brigade the fire was confined to the mill yard. With the strong wind and great heat, it is almost a miracle that the whole row of dwellings and tenement houses was not destroyed.

The fire department and citizens generally are entitled to much credit for their earnest and faithful work, and there is no doubt but the property saved pays for the engine many times.

The loss will aggregate nearly $12,000, and as there was no insurance, it will be a total loss to the firm.

Eighteen men are thrown out of work now at the beginning of winter, and the loss to our citizens who are building cannot be estimated.

At this time it is impossible to determine what will be done toward rebuilding. It has been suggested that if the firm cannot rebuild, a stock company should be organized, and the institution rebuilt at once. It is certainly a necessity.

Cinders and sparks were blown across Round lake, and for a time endangered the property of the Chicago resort, but prompt assistance prevented serious results.

To give an idea of the rapidity with which the flames spread, an employe states that when the alarm was first given, he with others went down to assist in putting out the fire. Seeing that it was impossible, he started back to secure his books, but could not reach the second floor on account of the heat and dense smoke.

Most of the employes lost all their tools.

Numerous minor accidents are reported, but none serious.

The fire is supposed to have caught from a spark flying into dry dust which had accumulated on some of the timbers above the boiler.

A GROWING INDUSTRY.

Ten Thousand Dollars Expended in Building and Repairing Water Craft.

We stated last week in connection with our article on the building interests, that we had other good things in store for our readers, and one of them is now produced. In it we can see the possibilities of a business of great value to Charlevoix, if properly developed.

We first interviewed the pioneer ship-builder in this region, Mr. James Washburn, and found him busy putting the finishing touches to a new two-mast schooner, but he answered our questions, and gave as fair an idea of his business as he seems who to knowledge of the technical names of the parts of a ship is likely to get in so short a time. Last year he was the only builder here, and the aggregate of his business was between four and five thousand dollars. This year, by a combination of circumstances beyond his control, the aggregate will be somewhat less, but it is still healthy. Among those circumstances are two other builders. Messrs. Campbell Bros., and E. H. Swain. But he still has the greater part of the new business, and his work has the reputation of being well done.

His last work launched last spring was the schooner Hercules, which had been thoroughly repaired during the winter. Since then he has built three scows for Hoskin, of Petoskey, one for the resort, and one for Allen's pile driver. This last is said to be the best ever launched on these waters. He is now finishing a schooner for C. Willis & Bro., and is pushing along rapidly a new schooner for Capt. Tallock. With all this new work has been carried a large share of the repairing done here.

Following Mr. Washburn in quantity of new work is Mr. E. H. Swain, who launched the A. B. Upright early in the season, and is now engaged on a schooner, 86 feet keel, to be ready for next year's business. These two boats will aggregate $2,000 or over.

Campbell Bros.' work has been confined mostly to repairing, the only exception being a fifty-foot scow for E. M. Clark. Their business will aggregate not far from $2,500.

Not least among the new work in this department of our business interests, is L. E. Allen's pile driver. Not wholly the work of our yard, it is still the work of Charlevoix, and is a machine which daily adds to the value of our water front. It is a well-made, compact, and complete machine, and will doubtless do good service many years.

In addition to the above there has been probably a dozen new boats launched this season, at an average cost of not less than $50 each. Jos. Brancaleo and O. D. Mason are the principal builders in Charlevoix.

Shall we Rebuild the Burned Planing Mill?

Now is the time for the capitalists of the village who are interested in its welfare to come forward and take the lead in organizing a stock company to rebuild the planing mill and stock it for business. Let the capital stock be fixed at not less than $12,000 or $15,000, making the shares $25 each. Then our wealthy citizens can subscribe for $1,000 or $2,000 worth of the stock, and there are few men in this village who will not take at least one share. Let a two-story brick-veneered building be erected on the site of the old mill, and in sixty days a shop could be in condition to employ twenty-five men, and could be run, as it should be, all winter—this on the presumption that the parties burned out yesterday will not rebuild. This matter is of vital importance to Charlevoix—more so than any other at the present time. Look to it that it is not neglected until we have all lost money by it. Investigate it, and you will find it a paying investment.

THE LONELINESS OF DEATH.

The pain of loneliness comforts at the close,
The loneliness of death is the last foe to face;
Never mind the sound of its wheels from wheels,
Yet each it presumes feels.

No changing lots, on tangs of passing feet,
All dangling lots, and other sip and down the street,
And yet there not at not keep it waiting there
Not one lack blood pulse.

The words, with some strangy Other interruptions,
Kind of serious as like bored, estranged,
With sense that not know be not right, or things that are out.

Like like a sun-struck star.

An I from ten week and again and to lift
The cry to angels by fright, the dark, or shift
Thy pillow, now with another help most true,
Not wait our substitutes.

Then, and cherished, must go forth alone,
Begone, alone family to the door, not away
No head to intend to be not the are, we may
Where then, and pain.

No pain, lonely, or white, per time first,
Our with are cold tobacco, or to street
It waits, it waits for thee, to thee alone
Alone, to be happy.

Alone, alone, open thine ambo, say,
Or wait some few kindness? Are alone
Thy hand where, or the alone sunrise
Whisper, "Be a good sleep?"

We know not. Nurses are taken from us
None hear the sound of thy departing car;
Only in a dream we know, blown
Roll on twilit sea and clear.

THE BLACK VALISE.

The excellent wife of the Rev. Septimus Medd felt vaguely uneasy on the morning of her husband's departure for London. He had never left her for a single day since their marriage upward of ten years ago. He was a mild-eyed, long-faced, of a timorous disposition, utterly ignorant of the ways of the world, and likely to be easily imposed upon by designing persons. When he came down to breakfast, equipped for the journey, he looked so pale and nervous that his wife said:

"I wish I could come with you, Septimus. I feel sure you will get lost, or something. You are like a great child."

"Oh! I can take care of myself, my love," said the Rev. Septimus, stoutly. "You can't spare time at present. Besides, I shall be back in a day or two, at the end of the week at the latest."

"Where can I write or telegraph, in case I have anything to communicate?" inquired his wife.

"Well, you see, my darling, I don't quite know whether I shall be able to get in at the Lavinia," said the Rev. Septimus, with an air of hesitation, "London is very full at this time of year, I'm told. Perhaps I had better arrange to call every morning at letters at Charing Cross Postoffice."

"Very well. Mind you write and let me know where you are coming back. Here's the pencil-case. Now, Septimus, remember I'll be told you, and see that you ——our full share of your Aunt Julia's estate, of the children's cake. Don't let those Londoners, and don't sign your name to anything without thoroughly understanding it. Come, children, say good-by to your father, or he will miss the train."

The Rev. Septimus tore himself from the bosom of his family with considerable emotion, and took his seat in the post-chaise, to be driven to the station.

His wife waved her hand as he disappeared from view, and shed a furtive tear on the doorstep before returning to the house. She could not shake off the uncomfortable foreboding that had taken possession of her, and the next day she wrote her husband a long letter, repeating all her injunctions and warnings, and urging him to take care of himself.

Three days passed without bringing any news, and Mrs. Medd's somewhat unreasonable anxiety increased to such a pitch that she could not refrain from sending the Rev. Septimus a telegram. If he had been too busy to reply to her letter, he, at all events, would not leave a telegram unanswered—the more especially as she begged him to let her hear from him at once. To her disappointment, her last communication was not more successful than the first, and she became seriously alarmed. She felt certain he had received her letter and telegram, and wondered unkindly what could have happened to him. Had he been suddenly taken ill, or had some more serious evil befallen him? In the midst of her suspense and perturbation she was startled by receiving a visit from a Police Inspector, who had driven over from the neighboring town.

"Are you Mrs. Medd, ma'am, the wife of the Rev. Septimus Medd?" inquired the officer, on being ushered into the room.

"Yes. My husband is away in London. What is the matter?" rose Mrs. Medd, in an agony of apprehension.

"I have had a telegram from the London police, directing me to ascertain Mr. Medd's address in London, and what his movements are," said the Inspector, mysteriously.

"Why? Is anything wrong? For heaven's sake tell me!" exclaimed the distracted wife.

"I hope not; but a suspicious individual, giving the name of Smith, has been apprehended in London on some charge of a serious kind, and some of the luggage found in his possession is supposed to belong to your husband."

"Good gracious! He must have been robbed," cried Mrs. Medd, turning pale.

"That is just what we want to find out. Will you kindly give me his address?"

"I don't know it," exclaimed Mrs. Medd, in despair. "I am anxiously expecting to hear from him. He may be at the Tavistock Hotel in Covent Garden; but he told me to address letters to the Charing Cross Postoffice.

"Have you done so?" said the Inspector, making a note in his pocket-book.

"I wrote two or three days ago, and have since sent a telegram; but I have had no answer," said Mrs. Medd, bursting into tears.

"We can easily ascertain if he has called there, and also whether he is staying at the Tavistock Hotel," said the Inspector, in a matter-of-fact tone. "There is no cause for alarm at present."

"Are you driving back to Hitchester? Let me come with you," cried the poor lady, in a positively agitated state. "I shall then hear the answer to your telegram without delay, and, if necessary, I will go up to town immediately. I'm afraid my husband is ill."

"Don't be frightened, ma'am; but come with me by all means, if you wish," said the Inspector, soothingly. "In fact, it will be just as well."

Accordingly, your Mrs. Medd went off with the Inspector, who, during the drive of eight miles, asked her a great many questions about her husband, and plainly showed that he entertained disquieting suspicions which he was unwilling to communicate. What time night be, the unfortunate lady was too frightened to inquire, for her apprehensions were aroused, and she hardly dared even to speculate upon the subject. On reaching Hitchester she determined to consult the doctor, who was an old friend and adviser, and she in the meantime asked the Inspector to meet her at that gentleman's office as soon as he had received an answer to the telegram he was about to despatch. Fortunately, the lawyer was disengaged, and Mrs. Medd was shown into his room immediately.

"How is your dear Mrs. Medd? Take a seat. What can I do for you?" inquired old Mr. Brook, cheerily, as he shook hands with his visitor. "By-the-way, have you heard from that husband of yours since he went away?"

"No. Why do you ask," demanded Mrs. Medd quickly.

"I've had a letter from Simpson & Hall, the lawyers who are administrators of the late Miss Julia Norman's estate. Somehow, you know — said Mr. Brook, taking up a letter from his desk, "they expected to see your husband personally, but he never called. They write to ask if he is in town, and for his address."

To the lawyer's surprise, the poor lady burst into tears at this fresh piece of information, which increased her apprehensions. It was no longer possible to doubt that something had happened to her husband. In a few words she proceeded to explain to the lawyer the object of her visit, and earnestly besought him to accompany her to London.

"By all means, my dear madam. I will start this instant if you wish. But you mustn't give way. I'm no doubt your husband's absence can be easily accounted for," said Mr. Brook, whose expression, nevertheless, showed that he was thoroughly puzzled. "At all events, we must wait and see what the inspector Marshall has to communicate. Perhaps you will find it in the newspaper while I write a letter or two."

Mrs. Medd strove in vain to fix her attention on the columns of the paper, while Mr. Brook proceeded with his correspondence; and thus a dreary two hours dragged along, at the end of which the Inspector arrived, looking very grave.

"I'm afraid you will have to go to London, ma'am," he said, after respectfully saluting the lawyer. "Your husband has never called at the Charing Cross Postoffice, and he is not known at the Tavistock Hotel."

"When is the next train?" inquired Mrs. Medd, tremulously.

"The express starts in three-quarters of an hour," said the Inspector. "If you will travel by that, you will be met at the other end by a police officer, who will give you every assistance."

"But what occasion is there for the lady to go?" interposed Mr. Brook. "I know Mr. Medd perfectly well, and can do whatever is possible. Surely Mrs. Medd might be spared the journey."

"Well, sir, you see they want her to identify Mr. Medd's things," explained the Inspector. "They want some one to swear to 'em."

"Beside, I could not bear the suspense if I remained here, I would much sooner go," said Mrs. Medd, eagerly.

"He it so," returned Mr. Brook; "I will send a messenger to your house with any note you may wish delivered, and if you will step up stairs to my wife she will, no doubt, be able to lend you anything you may require for the journey."

The lawyer and his companion travelled to town by the express, and on reaching the London terminus they were accosted by an officer in plain clothes, who addressed Mr. Brook by name, and said he had a cab waiting.

"Not so fast," said Mr. Brook, who was a shrewd old gentleman, with a good deal of quiet determination. "Where do you propose to take us?"

"To Bow street Police Station," said the officer.

"I think this lady requires a little rest and refreshment after her journey," returned the lawyer, quietly. "Beside, I should like to ask you a question or two first. I will order rooms at the hotel, and perhaps you can spare us a few minutes' conversation."

"Certainly, sir, only the sooner we get on the better," said the officer, rather sulkily.

"Quite so. Meanwhile, I dare say, you will not object to take a glass of wine," returned Mr. Brook, disregarding poor Mrs. Medd's imploring glance. "The lady prefers his arm to the chief and led the way to the hotel entrance, followed by the officer. Mr. Brook endeavored in vain to persuade Mrs. Medd to leave him alone with the detective, but she insisted upon being present during the interview.

"Well, now, what do you know about Mr. Medd?" inquired Mr. Brook of the officer, when they were all seated in a private room.

"Nothing at all," said the man; "I want you to assist me to find him."

"When did you see him last?" inquired the 12-o'clock train on Tuesday," said Mr. Brook.

"If so, I didn't notice him. The prisoner Smith—the man in custody—traveled by that train, and he then had Mr. Medd's portmanteau in his possession, or, at least, we believe it to belong to Mr. Medd."

"How do you know that?"

"An officer had his attention drawn to Smith at Basingstoke, and his suspicions were aroused by the man's manner. I was ordered to watch for him when the train reached here."

"Well?"

"I saw at once he was disguised, and followed him to a private boarding-house in a street off the Strand, where he took a room in the name of Smith. Beside the portmanteau he had a black valise, which he guarded with as particular care that I began to wonder what was in it. In fact, I suspected he was one of that dynamite gang."

"Had your husband a black valise?" inquired Mr. Brook, turning to Mrs. Medd.

"No; but he had a portmanteau."

"I kept a close watch on the man," continued the detective, "and followed him everywhere. Wherever he went he carried the valise about with him. At length I arrested him. He made no resistance, but the moment he came out without the valise. He said he was under the influence of it, and seemed flustered, but we didn't believe a word he said. We thought we had passed a clean bill of health, however, on opening his valise. We found it empty, except for a few articles of linen, marked with the initials S. M. On his person, we concluded the portmanteau and its contents belonged to Mr. Medd."

"Have you asked the man how he came by the things?" inquired Mr. Brook.

"He denies ever having heard of Mr. Medd, and says the valise was given to him by mistake. The initials S. M. suggested the name to him, Montague Smith, which he gives as his name, but, of course, that's all bunkum," said the officer, with a wink.

"What sort of a person is that man Smith?" demanded Mr. Brook.

"Well, he looks like a sort of chap, Seems as if he came up to London on a spree. Went to the Derby with a swindy party; from the boarding-house, and to theaters and music halls every night, and, I dare say, would have had a fight with a policeman, I shouldn't have arrested him if it hadn't been for that valise. Now, sir, are you ready?"

"If you will kindly wait for me below, I should like to speak two words to the lady," said Mr. Brook, quietly. "You can call a cab if you please."

The detective glanced rather uneasily at the lawyer and disappeared. He had hardly time to call a cab, however, ere Mr. Brook descended with Mrs. Medd, who looked very pale, and her eyes were red from weeping.

"Be a rough-looking man—this Smith?" inquired Mr. Brook, as the cab rolled over the stones.

"Well, not exactly that. Stout and red-faced, with sandy hair and whiskers. Wore blue spectacles till he was arrested; but doesn't seem to have anything the matter with his eyes. Would the lady like the window down?"

"Thank you. No. It is sitting hot in here, and Mrs. Medd is naturally greatly upset," said Mr. Brook. "I suppose the prisoner has appeared before a magistrate, and been remanded for inquiries?"

"Yes; he wouldn't open his mouth, so the magistrate had no alternative," said the officer. "To-morrow he will be brought up again, and charged with unlawful possession of property belonging to Mr. Medd—that is, of course, if the lady can identify the things."

"A further conversation took place till the cab reached the police station. The Inspector in charge, a taciturn individual, proceeded without comment to the business on hand, and produced the portmanteau which had been found at the prisoner's lodgings.

"Does this belong to your husband, madam?" he asked, solemnly.

"Certainly not," said Mrs. Medd, with emphasis.

"What! are you sure, ma'am?" interposed the officer who had accompanied them.

"Quite sure. No. None of those things belong to my husband. There is a mistake!" the poor lady answered as the Inspector silently produced two or three articles.

"I'm afraid you've arrested an innocent man," remarked Mr. Brook, quietly, as the door closed on the officer. "

A LEGEND OF THE RHINE.

BY G. F. WISNER.

In her castle lived a maiden, fair and brilliant, by the Rhine,
Where the waters roll in splendor, making music all the time;
Dashing onward, dashing wildly, like an arrow, in their flow—
Grand old music ever making, as the waves to ocean go.

And the maiden sometimes wandered by this silver flowing tide,
'Neath the moon-beam's nightly glintings,—near the passing wavelets wide;
Met her there 'neath starlight gleamings,—he a youth, as soldier dressed;
And as lovers walked together, whilst his suit he anxious pressed.

But the maiden by the river, though she loved him well and true,
Still his suit as oft rejected, by those waters bright and blue.
"Longer wait," she said, so coldly, as he pressed her hand in his—
"And the future we'll think over," proudly answered only this.

Then her lover by the river said, "I've waited well and long,
'Till my soul is chilled by waiting, though my heart is brave an' strong."
But her pride still kept him waiting, though she loved him well and true,
In her castle by the Rhine-waves, rolling 'neath the skies so blue.

Then he left her by the river,—left her to her thoughts alone,—
Left her there like marble statue, turned, like Niobe, to stone;
And her heart grew faint within her, for her soldier-boy had left—
Left her by the brilliant waters,—left her, of his love bereft.

Now when years had floated past her, in her castle by the Rhine,
Mournful strains of music mingled with the river's ceaseless chime;
As the moonbeams fell so silent on her castle by the wave,
And she thought of him who loved her,—him, the soldier-boy so brave.

Then her pride, exhausted, left her,—left her by the Rhine in tears,—
When she thought of him who loved her, through the long departed years;
And she spoke to page beside her, "Go and tell him I am ready."
Then he darted like an arrow, still repeating, "I am ready."

And when days had slow departed, by the blue Rhine's shining wave,
Stood the page, returned with answer, from the soldier boy so brave;
When his pallid lips were parted, he returned for answer this:
"You must wait forever, fair one!"—and his only answer this.

Then the maiden by the river felt a shadow o'er her come,
And, by page assisted gently, sought her snow-white couch at home,
In her castle by the Rhine-waves; and her lute no longer played,
For her lover had deserted,—for his country drew his blade.

But the soldier, years thereafter, came to look upon her grave,
And his heart was wrung so sorely,—heart of manhood, now so brave.
Then he cursed his pride and hers,—pride that never brought relief,
When the heart was filled with love,—love so constant, yet so brief.

And above her, in the grave-yard, creeps a green-leaved tender vine—
Creeping over stones and fences, and o'er ancient walls of time.
'Tis the maiden seeking, ever, him she proudly tossed away;
And this vine is ever creeping,—creeping over walls to-day.

Return of the Wanderers.

Now that the president has set his face toward the capital, it is to be supposed the members of his cabinet, the heads of bureaus, and the chiefs of divisions, who have been scattered in different directions during most of the summer, will find their way to Washington too. It is high time.

All the public business requiring the responsibility of executive action has been postponed on account of the absence of these officials. The only connection that they have maintained with the government has been to draw their full pay for every hour they devoted to personal pleasure. In respect to the salary, they all have been remarkably punctual.

Whether cruising at sea in vessels of war equipped and supplied at the public expense, or travelling on land at the charge of the army appropriations, these officials have been diligent in delighting the treasury. During the past year some of them have been absent from their posts more than two months in the aggregate. Perhaps some of them propose to make up a full quarter before finally settling down to regular work.

The law regulating vacations only applies to subordinates, and it was passed at the last session. Abuses in this matter had become so flagrant that it was necessary to impose some restriction on the discretion that had formerly been allowed. A limit of thirty days was fixed for the annual leave, with pay, "except in case of sickness." This last saving clause opened the door to a new abuse.

How well the outside sharpers improved their opportunities while the clerks were practically carrying on the government, will be known as the accounts are reported and the jobs are disclosed. Gunning and colluding contractors make it a business to visit Washington at the season when the president and cabinet and the officers next in authority are certain to be absent. They know how to time their pressence and to make it most profitable.

Trifles like the finding of ten thousand dollars under a part of the machinery in the redemption bureau of the treasurer's office, and sheets of bank bills in the waste basket of the comptroller of the currency, will not disturb the serenity of the administration. Explanations have been made, and if they happen to be lame, there are others ready for service.

The president will find liberal estimates for the public expenditures prepared by the clerks for his approval, after the refreshed secretaries have glauced over them and exhibited their gentle revisions. These estimates will discreetly cover all the junketing by land and sea, so that the economists of the house of representatives will have to explore deeply before discovering in detail how the people's money was squandered for personal pleasure.

But the committee of appropriations in the next congress will be composed of different elements from that in the last house of representatives. Keiffer will not be in the chair, and Secor Robeson will not be there to lead a reckless majority. Randall will be on hand, and Holman will be at his old post, to lead reform and retrenchment. Loose estimates will have a bad show next winter.—N. Y. Sun.

The High Low Tariff Game.

We have been expecting that some grand magnet of protection would put forth the chain, for the sake of holding fast to the republican machine the woolen manufacturers of the country, that the tariff has had the effect to reduce the price of wool; and now comes Senator Morrill, of Vermont, the father of the wool tariff of 1867, and the chief manipular of all tariff legislation since 1862, with the very significant assertion, made in defense of the reduction of the wool tariff by congress last winter, "that the depression in the wool market is not due to importations, for these are light, but to the strong competition naturally produced by high duties." On the other hand for the sake of holding fast to the republican machine the votes of the farmers, Senator Sherman of Ohio, another high-tariff expert, demands the restoration of the old high duties on wool in order to keep up the price. According to the plan of action developed by these republican leaders the matter is presented about as follows: The high tariff on wool is commended to manufacturers because its effect has been to depress the price, and it is commended to farmers because its effect is to increase the price. Two things, however, are certain—the tariff has been very high for a great number of years, and wool has been steadily shrinking in price. It is also quite certain that if our wool product is still further increased, and we do not manufacture woolen goods for export, the price must go still lower. In the meantime we leave it to the tariff experts to establish the truth of their contradictory propositions—that the high duties on wool have depressed the price for the benefit of the manufacturers and consumers, and that they increase the price for the benefit of the farmers and producers. It is Morrill against Sherman; but Morrill is after the manufacturers' votes, and Sherman is begging for the farmers' votes. It is a nice game—illustrative, throughout, of tariff trickery and pretense.—Jackson Patriot.

Fuel and Clothing.

Cold weather is approaching. Suggestions of frost are already in the air. Fuel will soon be in great demand. Last winter, in order to put money into the pockets of wealthy operators, the republican congress increased the tariff tax on all bituminous coal from about 50 to 75 cents a ton. Who asked congress to do this? Who log-rolled and traded and begged for an increase of the tax on coal? Not the consumer. The whole job was done by the wealthy mine owners. Those who are engaged in producing coal for consumers got the tax increased. Was it for their own benefit, or for the benefit of the consumers, that they did this? The great coal monopolies wanted the tax increased to put more money than they were getting into their pockets. That was their game, and nine or ten Michigan congressmen voted for the law increasing the tax. They voted in favor of the coal monopolies and against the interests of the consumers.

Besides fuel, warm clothing will soon be needed. Heavy woolen goods are required for comfort in this winter climate. The same congress and the same congressmen voted to make the tax on woolen goods and woolen clothing 35 cents a pound on the actual weight, and in addition thereto 40 per cent on the market value. The coarser and heavier the clothing, the higher the rate of taxation.

Congress when it put on these taxes voted away a part of every family's earnings for fuel and clothing. It voted to take money out of the pockets of consumers and put it into the pockets of the producers of these things. The tax on these articles is what is cheatingly called a protective tariff. It is easily understood. It is a method of taxing the necessaries of life for the benefit of those who produce them—of taking the money of the many for the gain of the few—of plundering the great mass of the people for the enrichment of monopolies and combinations.

All those in favor of releasing fuel and clothing from taxation will hereafter please vote against any Michigan congressman who wears a republican label, and will vote only for some opposition candidate who is hostile to the republican policy of levying high taxes on the necessaries and comforts of life for the advantage of monopolies and combinations. Cheaper fuel and clothing will not harm our people those long and cold winters.—Jackson Patriot.

Pilfered Paragraphs.

Who ever heard of slandering a bad man? Who ever heard of counterfeiting a bad note? Slander, as a rule, is the revenge of a coward. It is generally the best people who are injured in this way.

Imperfect sweet apples, which are not suitable to bake whole, may be made a delicious dish. Pare and slice the best part of the apples, put them in a pudding dish, and when tender serve with sugar and cream.

A lovely gift for grandma is a shawl made that—Choose a square of drap d'ete or of cashmere, add it may be black or white or a soft Turco color; footwarmth a rare row here, and then embroidery a border with repeats of the same shade. These shawls are so soft and light, and so much prettier than a plain square or one with fringe, that they are really graceful.

Nice breakfast cakes, to be baked in muffin tins, are made of one cup of wheat flour and one cup of graham flour, a little salt, one egg beaten very light, sweet milk enough to make a thin batter. The irons must be hot before putting the batter in.

Tomato hash is a good dish for tea. Take some cold meat, mince it and put in a pudding dish with layers of bread crumbs, well seasoned with pepper, salt and butter, put moist enough to keep from burning. No water is needed if the tomatoes are ordinarily juicy.

An exchange says that newspaper editors never "strike" but the assertion is just borne out by the facts. An editor once struck an hard that a whilipod man, with long hair and a long pawn, went down seven steps at a time, and landed on his spinal column at the bottom of the stairs.

An excellent garnish for corned beef or boiled ham is made by boiling some fresh eggs ten minutes, then cut them in thin slices, dip each in beaten egg and fine cracker or bread crumbs, and fry brown in hot lard. A little parsley chopped and mixed with the raw egg is a decided gain.

Pickles made of citron are appetizing. Pare and cut the citron in small strips; boil until tender in water in which you have dissolved a small bit of alum; drain this out, and pour vinegar seasoned with spices, over the citron. Let this all come to a boil. Put away in glass cans, and keep in a cool room.

When a workingman reads that "There is a necessary protection against cheap foreign labor," as he frequently will in reading republican sheets, let him ask how. Let him look up the law that places a tariff on imported cheap labor; let him consider whether the protected anthropic manufacturers really pay him any higher wages on account of the protection they receive at the expense of the country that laborers could demand under the inexorable law of supply and demand.—Cheboygan Democrat.

Michigan with an area so great that the distance from Detroit to the northern end equals the distance from the same city to New York; with a yearly product of crude iron exceeding that of any state in the Union; with a salt product greater than that of all the rest of the United States, and an output of copper only equaled in the whole world by Chili—with so great natural elements of wealth as these the great state, even though it does its present foremost rank as an American lumber mart, may yet remain its coming centuries of continuous and abundant prosperity.—New York Evening Post.

Harry Dankoehler, a compositor in the office of the Advocate, at Sturgeon Bay, Door County, performed the difficult feat recently, it was said, of setting 25,000 ems of solid minion type in eighteen and three-quarters consecutive hours. He picked up his stick at 5:30 in the morning and dropped it at 1:45 the next morning. Two cups of coffee at 9 p. m. was all the nourishment taken during the whole time. After four hours sleep he began work again in the morning as usual without experiencing any fatigue after his unusual task. Robert Bonner, the renowned editor of the New York Ledger, set many years ago, on a bet of two dollars, 25,000 ems of solid type in twenty hours and twenty-eight minutes' steady work. Harry thought he could equal Mr. Bonner's time; said he be the best on record for rapidity and endurance, and accordingly made the attempt, with the above result. He is twenty years old and has been four years at the business.

A nervous looking man went into a store the other day and sat down for half an hour or so, when a clerk inquired if there was anything she could do for him. He said no he didn't want anything. She went away and he sat there half an hour longer when the proprietor went to him and inquired if he wanted to be shown anything. "No," said the nervous, "I just want to sit around. My physician has recommended perfect quiet for me, and says above all things I must avoid being in crowds. Noticing that you did not advertise in the newspapers, I thought this would be as quiet a place as I could find, so I came in for a few hours isolation." The nervous chap picked up a ball of candwie to strike his, but the man was out. He said all he wanted was a quiet life.—Ex.

On the last regular trip up the Hudson, Jay Gould's new yacht, the Atalanta, encountered Samuel Ward's yacht, the Vesuvius, with the sage of Tremmery and a party of his friends on board. There has long been great rivalry between these two vessels, and when they come alongside a race begins in earnest. For several miles the race was so even that it was impossible to see that either was getting the advantage of the other. Finally, by degrees, the Vesuvius forged ahead several lengths, and soon dropped anchor off Greystone, having succeeded in leaving Gould's yacht some distance in the rear. One of the engineers said that the boilers of the Vesuvius has been tested at 28 pounds. During the race the steam was allowed to rise to 120 pounds. Thiers enjoyed the excitement of the race, out he was not aware, until it was all over, of the risk that he ran. Could, on the other hand, will not allow a strain of more than 28 pounds on the boilers of the Atalanta, although they are tested for 90 pounds.

The government has reduced the amount of the debt redeemable at its pleasure to a little over $300,000,000, and under the existing conditions of its revenue this can be easily paid off in three years. No other part of the funded debt will, then, be redeemable till five years afterwards. It is an interesting question, therefore, what will be done with the surplus revenue. The government can use it to buy up its native bonds, but this will require the payment of a large premium on them—14 to 20 per cent. The 4½ per cents will cost in the market 114, and the 4 per cents 20. There will be a strong protest against this policy from the national banks which have the bonds deposited as security for their circulation, since the promoters say, in lieu of internal revenue; they will demand that those taxes which are the least felt, the most easily collected and the most productive be abolished and the tariff rates maintained at the present high rates—while democrats will, on the other hand, insist that the imperceptible taxes on spirits, beer and tobacco be left as they are, and the reduction be made in those duties which are a burden and tax on the materials of our industries. The question will have to be met and settled by the approaching congress.—St. Louis Republican.

HOPE.

The night is mother of the day,
The winter of the spring;
And ever upon old decay
The greenest mosses cling.

Behind the cloud the starlight lurks,
Through night's black bosom the sunbeam pierces full;
For God, who doeth all his works,
Hath left us hope with all.

A Tariff is Taxation.

Why should our manufacturers be restricted from producing goods at a price that will enable them to compete with the manufacturers of any other country by a tax on raw material? Why should our farmers not be permitted to exchange the produce of their farms for the greatest quantity of articles they need that the markets of the world afford? Why should our workingmen be compelled to pay a price and a half for nearly all the necessaries of life to sustain the policy of protective taxation? The effect of protective tariff legislation is hostile to all the true interests of the country. Undoubtedly a few men are made enormously rich as the result of tariff legislation. The money they thus obtain is not made out of it without a corresponding loss. It is squeezed out of their fellow countrymen by the operation of law. The tax on raw material is a burden to the manufacturer which the law tries to give him back by a tax upon the finished goods; the tax on iron, woolen and cotton goods is a burden to the farmer for which he gets no adequate return even under the spoliation system; and the tax on the other necessaries of life is a burden upon the workingman, for which he gets no equivalent. In the grab-game which is the essence of protective tariff legislation, the farmers and workingmen get the worst of it every time. We shall have frequent repetitions of crippled manufacturing industries as long as the raw material to increase the price of goods; we shall have smug times among our farmers as long as they are compelled to buy what they want at tariff-inflated prices and to sell their surplus at prices fixed in foreign markets; and we shall have constantly recurring hard times for workingmen by the stoppage of production and throwing them out of employment whenever the home market is supplied, the foreign market being closed to us by our so-called protective tariffs. It is a time so holy writ that the scheme of protective tariff legislation is upheld upon false pretenses for the benefit of a few manufacturing capitalists, and for their enrichment the whole country is outrageously taxed. A tariff is taxation, and it is nothing else. A revenue tariff is taxation for the benefit of the government. A protective tariff is taxation for the benefit of private business interests, and is a burden that the people ought not to be compelled to carry. Law ought not to protect robbery and stimulate jobbery.—Patriot.

A few weeks ago we called attention to the fact that the majority of new papers being started in Michigan were democratic and also that many of the old ones, with republican proclivities were getting upon the fence. The following from the Boston Statesman shows that it is not in Michigan alone where democratic papers are rapidly taking the place of pap-sucking concerns of the republican stripe, but the democratic tendency is universal. "As showing which way the wind is blowing in the political world, two of the recent newspaper changes are suggestive. The New York Graphic, heretofore an able republican champion, with occasional independent leanings, is now democratic. The Chicago Herald, which well posted people believe has the brightest future before it of any paper in the great western metropolis, has changed hands and aspires to become the leading exponent of democratic principles in the northwest, a position which it will likely attain, as it is backed by a notable combination of brains, and business energy. For some years past the Herald has been a slashing republican paper. Similar changes of lesser importance are reported from other parts of the country, and in numerous localities new democratic weeklies are springing into existence. These are good signs and make it clearer than ever that the people are in dead earnest when they declare that the republican party must go.—Cheboygan Democrat.

In naming probable candidates for the governor's race next year, the Washington Gazette has this to say of Daniel W. Voorhees: This great political leader, who is familiarly known as the "tall sycamore of the Wabash" is one of the most deservedly popular democratic statesmen that has ever represented his party from Indiana; his social and political fame is not limited to his own state; his genial democratic bearing, free from airs, pomp or arrogance, has won for him thousands of devoted and admiring friends in every section of our republic. Mr. Voorhees would prove a worthy standard-bearer for the democracy, and would bring to their support thousands of the working classes who now vote with the republicans. If elected, Dan would make a popular and conservative president. Possessed with oratorical powers of the highest order, intensely enthusiastic in his deliveries, yet never harsh, severe or impolite; kind, generous and sympathetic with the humblest, as with the most favored citizen, a democratic ticket with his name is the leader, coupled with a Pennsylvania democrat of strength and ability as vice president, the great state of Pennsylvania would be captured from the republicans and placed in the column of the democracy."

To be Rebuilt.

There is every prospect that a new planing mill and door, sash, and blind factory will be built at once. A meeting was held at the office of J. Milo Eaton last Friday evening, and a temporary organization effected, by the election of a president, secretary, and a committee of five to solicit subscriptions. It was proposed to organize a stock company of 400 shares at $25.00 each, if a sufficient number of shares could be taken. A large amount was promised at that time, and the meeting adjourned to Tuesday evening following, at 7:30 o'clock, at the same place.

The committee canvassed the village pretty thoroughly, and at the meeting on Tuesday evening reported some thing over half the necessary amount subscribed.

Owing to the absence of the president, J. Milo Eaton, the secretary, W. F. Brown, called the meeting to order, and D. C. Nettleton was elected chairman for the evening.

Minutes and reports were read, and considerable discussion followed concerning the increasing of subscriptions by those who had already subscribed liberally. Some could double their amount if the assessments were to come in a way that they could meet them.—they wanted some assurance of how much and when.

It was finally decided to increase the committee by the addition of Mr. See and Mr. Cook, of the late firm, let them make as close an estimate as possible, of the amounts necessary to be paid, and report to a future meeting. After some further discussion as to site, subscriptions, etc., the meeting adjourned till this Thursday evening, at the same hour and place.

At this writing we have not the least doubt that the whole amount will be subscribed, and the organization effected within a week. If it is, the machinery will probably be ordered so as to reach here before the close of navigation, the building erected to cover it, and business fairly commenced before winter sets in. We see no reason for a failure to move along in this manner, and hope none will arise.

Will Stand upon his Record.

A reporter of the Flint Journal attempted to interview the governor the other day for the purpose of drawing out some defense against the attacks of several republican newspapers of the state, but instead found that gentleman inclined to pass them with out notice. He thinks his reputation is such that no defense is necessary to these assaults: The Journal says:

Our reporter called at the executive office this week to see the governor, and said to him:

"Governor, the Post and Tribune, Saginaw Herald and Lansing Republican are pitching into you, and I want to get some points—if you have no objection."

"Yes, but I have an objection. These papers did more to make me governor than any of the union papers in the state, and I have no desire to do anything that would change their course towards me in the least. Should I conclude to positively decline a renomination, I may then find it necessary to have them speak well of me, so I can get down and out."

"Yes, but these papers are saying—"

"No matter what they say. They can't say anything that should place me on the defensive. If you read in the Post and Tribune that I have robbed a contribution box, turned my wife outdoors, or murdered my grandson Josiah, don't deny it, or come to me for facts or authority to contradict it. If during my 46 years' residence in Michigan I have built up a reputation that needs to be defended from the cowardly personal assaults of certain republican editors, I am to be pitied indeed. The republican voters take no stock in these assaults, but everywhere I go assure me that they are heartily ashamed of them. It was thought the Post and Tribune had reached its lowest depth under Col. Board's management. The effort of the present manager seems to be to make Col. Board's course compara tively respectable. At first thought this would appear to be impossible; and yet at present the chances seem to be all in his favor."

"Then you don't care to be defended, governor?"

"You are right, I don't."

Notes and News.

It has been decided by the customs division of the treasury department that hemlock bark is dutiable under the provision of the tariff act which fixes the rate of duty for "extract of hemlock and other barks for tanning," but is free of duty under a provision in the free list.

The comet recently discovered has been proven to be the long looked for comet of 1812, and during the past week has undergone remarkable changes in form and has increased in brightness fifteen fold. It is expected before long to become visible to the naked eye.

Bradstreet, in its weekly review of the state of trade last Saturday called attention to the fact that pig iron has dropped 50 cents per ton, and that wheat and corn have declined on account of the increase of visible supply and the lack of foreign demand. Pork has also declined, and millers and produce dealers are only buying for present demand. The heavy failures in New York and low water in New England have kept the tide of trade at about the level of the past month, although the city goods trade has been generally well maintained.

Is not a church a little out of its sphere when it adopts resolutions like the following, in an attempt to regulate the votes of its members, as was recently done at a conference in this state? Honest people differ on political questions, and do not like to have their church say how they shall vote. "Resolved, That we will not support by our influence or ballot any political party that refuses to submit to the people the question of constitutional prohibition, and that does not stand by all legitimate means to suppress the traffic in intoxicating drink."

One of the works of the legislature of 1883, was the repeal of the law forbidding marriages between white persons and negroes. The law did not prevent miscegenation. Where persons of different color fancied that there was an affinity between them, that they wanted to marry, they usually lived together as man and wife without the formality of marriage. The colored people of the state felt that the law was inoperative except to fix a brand on them, and they were anxious for its repeal. Not only are such marriages to be permitted in the future, but the sanction of law is given to may such marriages heretofore made, and the issue of such marriages is legitimized. This strips from our statute books the last trace of an attempt to discriminate against negroes on the ground of color.

From the views gathered by representatives of the Evening Journal, and elsewhere presented, Hon. Samuel J. Tilden is a very lively political corpse. Many of the leading democrats of Detroit express themselves in admiring terms of his wisdom and political sagacity in the past and present; while others, admitting his great ability, fear he is too old and decrepit for the office if elected. It is, however, quite evident that it will take very little urging to bring the rank and file of the Michigan democracy to Mr. Tilden's support should it be disclosed within the next few months that he is again an aspirant for the presidency. It should not be forgotten, however, by Mr. Tilden's friends that it was not he who was outraged, if an outrage was committed in 1876, but the democratic party of the nation; that it is not he who should be vindicated, but the party which claims that it was defrauded by the counting out of Tilden and the counting in of Hayes.—Detroit Journal.

A reporter of the Detroit Evening Journal interviewed Hon J. M. Ashley, of Toledo, the other day. In answer to a question whether Judge Hoadley purchased the democratic nomination as a suitable for governor, Mr. Ashley said: "Nothing is more false than that accusation. Judge Hoadley is wealthy, but he is a pure man, above the arts of the trucling demagogue and self-seeking politician." Touching the subject of unity of party on each side, he said: "Republicans have placated to a remarkable degree the liquor element. They have made them believe that they will protect them in the future. If a large percentage of the German element does not remain loyal to the republican party, I shall know myself very much mistaken." Mr. Ashley is a republican, and worked with them in congress, during the tremulous times of '61-8, and afterward until he left politics. He knows what he is talking about, and is but one of many to expose the slanders and duplicity of the republican party. The republican party is a great temperence party, in theory, just before election, but it never fails to trade with the liquor element when votes are a consideration.

ZEEK.

Striker Stowe's Way.

For years Striker Stowe, a tall, powerful Scotchman, had held the position of "boss striker" at the steel works. Nearly all the men in his department were hard drinkers, and he was no exception to the rule.

But one day it was announced among the workmen that he had become religious; and sure enough, when pressed to take a drink, he said: "I shall never drink mair, lads. Na drunkard can inherit the kingdom o' God. The knowing ones smiled and said, "Wait a bit. Wait until hot weather—until July. When he gets as dry as a grayed pit he will give in. He can't help it."

But right through the hottest months he toiled, the sweat pouring off in streams; yet he seemed never to be tempted to drink.

Finally, as I was taking the men's time, one evening, I stopped and spoke with him. "Stowe," said I, "you used to take considerable liquor. don't you miss it?"

"Yes," said he, emphatically.

"How do you manage to keep away from it?"

"Weel just this way. It is now tan o'clock, isn't it?"

"Yes."

"Weel, today is the twentieth day o' the month. From seven till eight I asked that the Lord would help me. He did so, an' I put down a dot on the calendar, right near the twenty.

"From eight till nine he kept me, and I put down another dot. From nine till ten He's help me, an' now I gie him the glory as I put down the third dot."

"How long shall you keep this up?" I inquired.

"All o' my life," was the earnest reply. "It keeps me sae full o' peace an' happiness that I wouldn't gie it up for anything. It is just as if He took me by the hand and said, 'Wark awa,' Striker Stowe, I'm wi' ye. Dinna be fearfu.' You teek care o' yeer regular wark an' I'll see to the de'il an thirst, an' they shall no trouble ye."

Income of the Czar.

The annual income of the Czar of all the Russias probably averages a great deal more than $25,000 a day. The crown domains comprise more than a million square miles, covering an area exceeding that of all our New England, Middle and Southern States. These include cultivated lands, pastures and forests in different parts of this vast empire, which embraces in its despotic arms more than one-sixth the entire land surface of our globe. Beside the revenue from Imperial estates, the Czar derives a large income from gold, silver, copper and other mines in Siberia. The actual total of his immense revenue from all these sources is not stated in the Government budget, or finance accounts, the crown domains being considered the private property of the imperial family. In a British Consular report of 1867 the total income of the imperial family is estimated at £2,450,000 sterling, which is an average of about $33,500 a day. The Imperial contributions to charities, theaters, etc., are estimated by the same authority at about £450,000, leaving a net sum of £2,000,000 a year to "keep the family."—Chicago Inter Ocean.

A needed improvement has been made to the Lewis block, being a large brick chimney near the center of the building, from the ground up. It will better accommodate the numerous stoves, and with less danger of fire.

The Spalding brothers gave an interesting entertainment to a small house last Friday evening. The opinion has been expressed that their rendering of some of the poems was more natural than that of more noted elocutionists.

The schooner Mockingbird arrived on Monday with a consignment of shingles from Manistee, 300,000 of which were unloaded at John Nicholl's dock, and 100,000 at Upright, Emery & Co.'s. This is an unusual large consignment for our trade, and is said to be the largest ever received here.

The Cheboygan Democrat is to have a new office, new press, new out fit of type, and numerous other good things. The sheet before us contains 28 columns of advertising to eight of reading matter, and mention is made of a supplement, so that one is led to infer that they do lots of business over there.

Mr. S. R. Boardman, of Chicago, who bought the Pickerd lands on Manitou Island, has taken possession of the premises and will give special attention to stock raising. He recently purchased four very high grade Hereford heifers of Mr. Aldrich, of Northport. The Island is said to offer excellent facilities for stock raising.

N. B. Pioneer.

The JOURNAL is in possession of information, which will become public in a few days, that there is a plan being developed by which if success ful, a railroad will be built from some point on Pine lake in a southerly direction, to be commenced this fall, and which will doubtless become part of a line connecting Charlevoix with the southern part of the state.

Last Monday Mr. Lewis Reynolds showed us a box of apples, gathered during the leisure hours of the past few weeks. Some of them, when cut and polished, will make very handsome ornaments. He is quite successful in his search for them, and states that his interest in them grows, as he devotes time to studying their beauties.

The circulation of the Mancelona Herald increased from 840 to 1,480 in one week. If this is bona fide subscriptions, it is a success unparalleled in the history of Michigan country journalism. Its motto is "A live paper makes a live town." There is evidently a live man to manage the institution, which accounts for its success.

Mr. G. W. Barker, photographer, has left on our table a fine view of Round lake, looking northeast from a point near the foot of Mason street. It shows three vessels riding at anchor, Breezy Point cottage, the Chicago resort, and a small portion of the north side. The picture shows the proportions of our harbor to excellent advantage.

It is now reported that the iron company intend to erect another stack at Ironton in the near future. It has been rumored for some time that the G. R. & I. R. R. Co., have promised to build a branch of their road to Ironton as soon as another stack was erected. Putting the two reports together, it reads like a positive assurance of a railroad for our accomodation at a very early date.

"If a man built a pig pen, nailed a board on the alley fence, or hired an Indian to dig up the weeds in his front yard, the "improvement" has not escaped the argus eyes of the newspaper men."—Petoskey Record. Does the Record man propose to include all this in order to make a respectable showing? The JOURNAL's report was confined as near as possible to improvements of buildings only and not to contents of grounds.

"In a Nutshell," is the title of a book by Dr. Dio Lewis, which is not only a pleasure to read, but we believe contains more good solid sense to the page than any book we have read in years. It treats of health subjects from the stand-point of self-help, and very little or no medicine, and seeks to make people live right every day of their lives. Mr. D. J. Rogers expects to canvass this vicinity soon, and we can recommend the book to all, old and young.

We must thank our friends for the interest taken in the JOURNAL, and the efforts put forth to push it along. Present support and future prospects are as good as we could have reason to expect considering all the circumstances. Such appreciation and encouragement is an incentive to renewed activity, and we shall not rest until the JOURNAL takes a front rank in importance and influence among the industries of our village. We say to all, the JOURNAL is here to stay.

The Forbes Family orchestral and brass band concert company are advertised for one entertainment at the opera house, on Friday evening, Oct. 5th. This is a family of children, residents of Petoskey, where they have been in training under Prof. O. D. Balcom, and where they are well and favorably known. The Record has this to say of them: "The gifted little folks have been before the people here, as an orchestral band, on various public occasions, being always ready to assist in entertainments for the benefit of the schools and churches; and their many friends will confidently expect for them a great success in their public life. During the summer they have been playing brass instruments, and are said to have made wonderful progress." The regular program is arranged for two evenings, but as they give only one entertainment here, selections of the best of both will be made. We have no doubt it will be well worth the low price of admission. Some months ago they gave an entertainment in Paw Paw, of which the Herald spoke as follows: "The entertainment was pleasing and meritorious to a degree far in advance of some which have had better patronage. The little people all did splendidly. They are nice, pleasant looking children."

The Cedar Springs Clipper truthfully says: "A newspaper and a newspaper editor that people don't talk about and sometimes abuse, are rather poor concerns. The men and business that an editor sometimes feels it a duty to defend at a risk of making enemies of another class, are often the first to show their ingratitude. The editor who expects to receive much charity or gratitude will soon find out his mistake, but he should go on and say and do what he conscientiously thinks right without regard to frowns and smiles."

"In a few weeks we will publish the number of vessels loaded from this place and Bay Springs since the opening of navigation."—Statesman. "The Sentinel and JOURNAL have been giving Charlevoix a thorough overhauling, and last week presented statements showing the amount expended in building and improvements. The Sentinel figures out about $70,000 so spent, and the JOURNAL 64,000. Some of the building was for business purposes and really good residences. In a few weeks we shall show what Petoskey has done" Petoskey Record. For all of which please note that the JOURNAL was the first to begin the work.

Rev. Mr. Iddings makes something of a change in his method of work in the M. E. church here, which will doubtless add to the interest and attendance. At the opening of every Sunday morning service, he gives a five-minute discourse for children and young people, and limits his regular sermon to about twenty minutes. This closes the morning service at about 11:30, and begins the sabbath-school half an hour earlier than usual. The Thursday evening prayer meeting opens with a lecture and is to be made interesting in various ways. The subject for next Sunday morning service is "Christian ownership," evening, "Duty of pleasing." The evening service begins at 7 o'clock, instead of 7:30.

Rev C. F. Van Anken has almost completed, and before another issue of the JOURNAL will probably occupy his new residence on Clinton street. It is a two-story frame, 24x26 feet, with a one-story wing 14x16 feet, and contains nine rooms and a large cellar. Across the front, which faces the north is a handsome porch, so made that no post or appendage becomes an obstruction to the view from any window or door. Through the door we enter the sitting room, on the west of which is the parlor, and on the south the dining room. These rooms are connected by folding doors, which can be thrown open so as to make them a one large room. The kitchen is south of the dining room, and is supplied with wall-cupboards, flour-chests dummy to cellar, soft water, etc., and has a neat porch facing the east. Adjoining the kitchen is a small woodhouse. The stairway to the chamber is west of the dining room. The family bed-room is also west of the dining room, across the hall which leads to the chamber. Up stairs is a hall and three large rooms, the one in the north east corner having two large windows and a door opening onto the piazza being set apart for Mr. Van Anken's study. From this room one has an unobstructed view down the street to Round lake, and across to the Chicago resort. The wood work inside is ash, oiled. The plaster finish is white. Below every window in the house is a panel. The doors and win dows on each floor are uniform in height at the top. The eavestrough is made a part of the cornice. Geo. Cole was architect and superintendent, James Hemmings inside painter, Chas. Swallow outside painter, Barlow and Ranger built the foundation wall, and Mr. Myers did the plastering. Mr. Van Anken also has a well-made two-story barn on the south end of his lot. When all is finished as he intends, it will make as comfortable a home as one could wish.

The JOURNAL announced two weeks ago, that Mr. W. P. Brown had a night-blooming cereus about to bloom, and that friends would be notified when it would open. Last Monday evening, about 7 o'clock, it began to unfold its petals, and was watched with interest by those who soon after gathered to see it. When we departed about 9 o'clock it was about two-thirds open, and its fragrance filled the house. It was almost a pure white, and when fully opened, it measured about ten inches in diameter. At 11:30 while yet in its highth of beauty, Mr. Brown cut it from the leaf and pressed it. A noticable feature of the plant is the provision of nature to sustain the bud and blossom during its development. As the bud grew the parent leaf bent over until it rested against another leaf, and the bud rested on a leaf below; the united strength of the three being required to sustain the blossom when fully developed. The plant is five years old, and this is its second blossom.

UP THE FLUE.

"You must have some rare experiences to tell me, Mrs. Boswell," said persuasive Lizzie. Russel, while we waited for the second story. "You have been at this frontier post ever since Capt. Boswell was stationed here?"

"Yes, ever since I left school, I believe," she replied, with the rare smile that gleamed her face. "I have passed through many trying ordeals here, but I really think that I had an adventure in the fort, before I married the Captain, equal to anything that I have experienced."

"Will you relate it and oblige us?" urged Russel.

"Mrs. Boswell," said Dan, the irrepressible youngster of our party, "Jim," jerking his thumb toward the Lieutenant, "is out West here on purpose to spill ink for the New-York papers. You can become a heroine of romance if you will."

"I don't want any romance in my life," said the young lady, with a little frown of vexation.

"Now, Mrs. Boswell, said the interrupter, "you don't mean that you can't relate a little yarn, if you have

A house raising at J. K. Frick's this week.

The school inspectors met last week to settle school matters.

J. E. Chew returned to his home in Hayes this week.

This is the time of year that nature assumes her dress of many colors.

James Miller's nephew, Charles Dolph, arrived from Union City last week, with his family. He expects to make his residence in this township.

Those who do not believe that Springvale is a lively place would do well to stop in this locality a few months, and if they did not find it out it would be a caution.

The devil always gets his due, and some of our riotous citizens will surely get theirs.

J. E. Chew, who has been teaching in district No. 2, closed his school last Friday, Sept. 21. He has taught since Nov. 6, 1882, eleven months (217 days), with a vacation of only two weeks during that time. He expects to commence teaching again in a few weeks.

Milford Spencer shot a hawk that measured four feet across its wings, from tip to tip. On the same day, Clark Biddle killed a raccoon that weighed 24 pounds, the first "coon" of the season.

With this letter to the JOURNAL, we gather up the remaining paper, and making it into paper wads, throw them at the "scheer bug" drop our pen and will write no more items from this quarter, as we shall adjourn to another clime for a few months frolic.

Confucius.

A Chinese sage, born June 19, 551, B. C. His father died when he was only three years old, but he was very carefully brought up by his mother, and from his earliest years, displayed an extraordinary love of learning and veneration for the ancient laws of his country.

At the age of 17 he was inspector of the corn-marts and distinguished himself by his industry, and energy in repressing fraud, and introducing order and integrity into the whole business.

When only 19 he married, but divorced his wife four years after marriage, that he might have more time for study, and the performance of his public duties.

The death of his mother, in his 23d year, interrupted, for a time, his work, and gave occasion to the first solemn and important act of Confucius as a moral reformer. According to the ancient, but then almost forgotten, laws of China, children were obliged to resign all public employment on the death of either parent. Confucius, desirous of renewing the observance of all the practices of venerable antiquity, did not fail to conform to this long neglected law.

The solemnity and splendor of the burial ceremony, with which he honored the remains of his mother, (another old custom that had fallen into disuse), struck his fellow-citizens with astonishment, and they determined to bury their dead with the ancient honors, and this practice has continued to the present day.

Confucius now came to be looked upon as an authority in regard to the past, and ventured to speak as such.

He shut himself up in his chamber, pass in solitude the three years of mourning for his mother, the whole of the time he devoted to philosophical study.

He commenced instructing his countrymen in the precepts of morality, exhibiting in his own person all the virtues he inculcated on others. Gradually his disciples increased, as the practical character of his philosophy became apparent. His disciples were not the young and enthusiastic, but men of middle age, sober, grave, and occupying important public situations.

Confucius divided his scholars into four classes: to the first, he taught morals; to the second, rhetoric; to the third, politics; and to the fourth, the perfection of style in composition.

Confucianism is the basis of the social life and political system of the Chinese. It has been professed by all their greatest men, but it is less a religion than a philosophy, and does not pretend to treat of spiritual things; in fact, it contains no trace of a personal god. "I teach you nothing," he says, "but what you might learn yourselves, viz: the observance of the fundamental laws of relation between sovereign and subject, father and child, husband and wife; and the five capital virtues, universal charity, impartial justice, conformity to ceremonies and established usages, rectitude of heart and mind, and pure sincerity." This, in fact, contains the whole doctrine of Confucius.

His immortable works are laboriously studied by the higher literary class, and are considered the standard of religious orthodoxy. Confucius died 479 B. C., in the 70th year of his age. Fane-al temples are erected to Confucius, and though his image is not used as an idol, his tablet is worshipped, and sacrifices of oxen and sheep are offered before it, spring and fall.

Gleanings.

More than 320,000 bushels of grain were contracted for shipment from Chicago Monday and at high freights.

An iron furnace near Birmingham, Ala., was blown to atoms last Friday, causing a loss of $600,000. No one hurt, all the employees escaping almost miraculously.

At Union Springs, N. Y., last Friday, Courtney, on a wager of $1,000, beat the best three-mile record, rowing over a measured course in 19 minutes, 27 seconds. The best previous record was 20 minutes, 14 seconds.

It is reported that Turkey has notified Bismark that in case of war between Germany and France she will make it lively for the French in Tunis and Algeria. Thus gradually it seems that Germany is uniting all continental Europe in a league against France and Russia.

In the order of production, Michigan stands first among the states in the growth and manufacture of lumber, first in salt, first in copper, first in charcoal pig iron, certainly second if not first in its fresh-water fisheries, fourth in wheat, and fourth in wool. It has the largest copper mine in the world. Seven-tenths of all the wheat raised in the country is grown in nine states, and only three excel Michigan in the volume of this crop. In the last census year it produced more wheat to the acre than any state in the Union except Colorado, whose total yield was less than a million and a half of bushels. It is also one of the best fruit producing states in the Union. All its principal products are staple for which there must be constant growing demand.

Hugh J. Hastings, editor and proprietor of the New York Commercial Advertiser, the stalwart republican organ, who died recently at Monmouth Beach of paralysis of the heart, was one of the oldest journalists of the metropolis, of the school to which belonged Greeley, Raymond and the elder Bennett. Himself and his paper have long wielded a powerful influence in the politics of New York city and the state. Hastings was a prominent and highly influential Roman Catholic.

A story is told by a Toledo west end preacher on a brother minister, that will bear repeating. On Monday last vetirans was in the city, and the substantial curiosity was so unknowed that an outside view of the stretch of canvas would not suffice. The minister had compunctions of conscience against the gratification of sight, he fancied might be a questionable desire. However, his liberality of belief would permit of the children going, and of their seeing all there was to be seen, provided they had some good sized somesthine protective with them. But unfortunately for him he had no children, and was therefore—to use an unorthodox expression—"in a hole." Finally he hit upon a plan. He went to the preacher and tried to borrow his five-year-old boy, as a companion to the circus. But it wouldn't work, the preacher remarking, "I've walked a long time for my boy, to get the branch as pa is a circus, and now I wind to use him myself."

A little boy sat in front of his father and held the tabes which controlled a restive horse. Unknown to the boy, the reins passed around him, and were also in his father's hands. He was desirous to pull them. With artless simplicity the child looked toward, saying, "Father, I thought I was driving, but I am mad, am I?" Thus it is often with men, who think that they are shaping a destiny which a higher hand than theirs is really fashioning. The God their own will, but they also do the will of God. A stronger hand guides them, a mightier power holds the helm of their creed, and saves from rock and wreck. Happy are they who quietly yield to the guidance of an almighty hand.

Restored by Magic.

Has the lake or mad wind spoiled your complexion? Are you long for a preparation that will completely remove tan, sun and pimples, and leave the skin clear and soft? It is used in all the best families and gives unbounded satisfaction. Price 50 cents per bottle. Sold by G. H. Weed & Co.

The New York Sun says in regard to selling a stamp to a newspaper: "Do you wish that went to the dead letter office?" said a clerk at a stamp window in the postoffice yesterday, pleasantly, as he noticed a gentleman affixing a stamp to a newspaper. "I don't say that I do," was the reply. "Why? Because you are evidently unaware that a sealed package is not carried by the United States mail for one cent." "This is not a sealed package." "Excuse me, but it is. The stamp is put on the wrapper and pasted on the newspaper, and the postoffice department has very properly decided that that makes a sealed package. Packages of that kind may get through to their destination occasionally, but it is in violation of the rule. It is very convenient to fasten a newspaper in its wrapper in that way, but it should not be done."

The Keys.

The kidneys and liver are the keys to woman's health. If these organs are in healthy condition no fear need be entertained of sickness, for the system will cleanse itself of impure matter. If you have headache, dizziness, loss of appetite, lame back or side, failing strength, languor, excessive flow of urine, or encounter they are the advance guard, and give warning to more serious trouble such as dizziness, bright's disease, &c. Parmelee's Diuretic, Diaforetic, Kidney and Liver Cure has saved over for all these diseases. Price $1.00 large bottle. Sold by G. H. Weed & Co.

An excess of economy, strange as it may seem, sometimes defeats its object, and proves a blunderous bad end to all. The farmer who concentrates his energies on the important points, seeing that his ground is in a suitable condition, his crops put in and tended properly, harvested and marketed at favorable times, will find himself in possession of more money at the end of the year than he who dissipates his strength and squands his time keeping an undue vigilance over all the small concerns, miles short his place. Also that husbandman who refrains from indulging in agricultural papers (thinking he "cannot afford them") is one of those who "stay at the spigot" only to "loose at the bung," as with other periodicals. The shopkeeper who gives his ears thought to the quality and substance of his goods, the reasonableness of his prices, and the civility of his clerks, is the one who will win success, rather than he who is always on the qui vive lest he shall lose a halfpenny on this or that sale. Country Gentleman.

It is generally conceded that Wiggins has basically warped. That if he had commonsensibly up to the claim again and backed without shadow of burning that the conjunction of the planets Hecubus and Alcohol disorders to the earth, he would have scored several spondaic hits and put up his record ■ a sensible proposition the very top of the notch. He had fire, water, famine, earthquakes, volcanoes, lornadoes, cyclones, and cholera to aid him. There have been from six to twelve terrible calamities every month of the year, destroying a total of 25,000 lives, which the 3days earthquake will probably increase to 30,000, a few of the most prominent will be recalled in enumerating them. The Ground Hoods; the burning of the Newhall House in Milwaukee; the burning of a circus in Poland; loss of the steamer Vanderbilt; the burial alive of seventy-seven miners at Joliet, Illinois; fire and panic in a New York school house; Hull and Yarmouth (England) Jubilee riots; avalanches in the Italian Alps; the panic on the Brooklyn bridge; panic among school children at an entertainment in Sunderland England; burning of a theater in Italy; the capsizing of the Dephne, while being launched on the Clyde; the giving away of a pier near Baltimore; the collision on the Lessee & Wabash (New York) Railroad; the earthquake at Ischia; the volcanic eruptions and earthquakes of Java; the floods all the way from Illinois down to Minnesota; the railroad collapse at Shoffly, in Germany; the explosion of the Riverside's boiler; and scores on scores of less startling but quite as destructive calamities, which are actually too numerous to mention. Indeed, the extraordinary number of them, diminishes the horror of each one; and leaves only the Pinafore supplemented to appeal the imagination.—Detroit Free Press.

We used not hope to be mowers,
And to gather the ripe, gold ears.

A harvest of thorns or of flowers.

ALICE CAREY.

A Thousand Wives.

From Peck's Sun.

"Sit down on the ice box," said the boy to the grocery man. "What you used is real. You are overworked. Your alleged brain is equal to wilted lettuce, and it can devise ways and means to hide rotten peaches under good ones, so as to sell them to blind orphans, but when it comes to grasping great questions your small brain cannot comprehend them. Your brain may go up sidewise to a great question, and rub against it, but it cannot surround it and grasp it. That's where you are deforned. Now, it is different with me. I can raise brain to sell to you grocery men. Listen. This Solomon is credited with being the wisest man, and yet history says he had a thousand wives. Just think of it. You have got one wife, and pa has got one, and all the neighbors have one, if they have had any kind of luck. Does not one wife make you pay attention? Wouldn't two wives break you up? Wouldn't three cause you to see stars? How would ten strike you? Why, man alive, you do not grasp the magnitude of the statement that Solomon had a thousand wives. A thousand go and smashing side by side, would reach about four blocks. Marching by fours it would take them 20 minutes to pass a given point. The largest summer resort hotel only holds about 500 people, so Sol would have had to hire two hotels if he took his wives out for a day in the country. If you would stop and think once in a while you would know more."

The grocery man's eyes began to stick out as the bad boy continued, as though the statistics had never been brought to his attention before, but he was bound to stand by his old friend Solomon, and he said: "Well, Solomon's wives must have been different from our wives of the present day."

"Not much," said the boy, as he saw he was paralyzing the grocery man. "Women have been about the same ever since Eve. She got mashed on the old original Jude, and it stands to reason that Solomon's wives were no better than the mother of the human race. Statistics show that one woman out of every ten is redheaded. That would give Solomon an even hundred red-headed wives. Just that hundred red-headed wives would be enough to make an ordinary man think that there was a hand that was fairer than this. Then there would be, out of the other nine hundred, about three hundred blondes, and the other six hundred would be brunettes, and maybe he had a few albinos and bearded women and fat women and dwarfs. Now, those thousand women had appetites, desires for dress and style, the same as women have in one Solomon saying to them, "Girls, let's all go down to the ice cream saloon and have a dish of ice cream." Can you with your brain muddled with codfish and new potatoes, realize the scene that would follow? Suppose, after Solomon's broom brigade had got seated in the ice-creamery, one of the red-headed wives should catch Solomon winking at a strange girl at another table. You may think Solomon did not know enough to wink, or that he was not that kind of a girl, but he must have been or he could never have succeeded in marrying a thousand wives in a sparsley settled country. No, sir, it looks to me as though Solomon in all his glory was an old masher, and from what I have seen of men being bossed around with one wife, I don't envy Solomon his thousand. Why, just imagine that gang of wives going and ordering fall bonnets. Solomon would have to be a king, or a Vanderbilt, to stand it. Ma wears five dollar silk stockings, and pa kicks awfully when the bill comes in. Imagine Solomon putting up for a few thousand pairs of silk stockings. I am glad you will sit down and reason with me in a rational way about some of these Bible stories that have my breath away. The minister stands me off when I try to talk with him about such things, and tells me to study the parable of the Prodigal Son, and the deacons tell me to go and smashing side by side, would reach about four blocks. Marching by fours it would take them 20 minutes to pass a given point. The largest summer resort hotel only holds about 500 people, so Sol would have had to hire two hotels if he took his wives out for a day in the country. If you would stop and think once in a while you would know more."

Notes and News.

Burglars are numerous in the southern part of the state.

Three lives were lost in a railroad collision near Hudson last Saturday morning.

As we go to press the reports from Ohio indicate a small republican majority.

An alderman in Buffalo, N. Y., has been driven crazy by the abuse of disappointed office-seekers.

The pay roll of the Grand Trunk in Battle Creek is $1,000,000 a year. That alone is enough to build up a city.

Bricklayers are now receiving $2 per day for their work in Dallas, Texas, which is the highest wages ever paid in the state for any kind of mechanical labor.

Speaking of the modern crime of absenteeism, has it been forgotten that while Mr. Tilden was President he was absent from Washington four years?—Evening Journal.

Rice A. Beal, a prominent republican editor and politician, died at Iowa Falls, last week, of acute pneumonia. By his death the republican party loses an active and efficient manager.

Supervisors here and elsewhere are "kicking" at the great increase of the state tax this year. There was a legislature at Lansing last winter, and the net results are fast becoming apparent. They must have forgotten that there was another campaign to come.

A new evening paper in the interest of Stockbridge, Conant & Co., is the latest venture in Lansing. It is said that its press was bought cheap at Washington from a lot condemned by government printer Rounds. Its purpose is to boom Stockbridge for the U. S. senate, and Harry A. Conant for governor.

The occupation of the city policeman is not a bed of roses. At Detroit last Saturday, patrolman Geo. C. Kimball was shot and almost instantly killed by a rough whom he was trying to arrest, and at Lansing, Friday night, policeman Frank Ball was severely if not fatally wounded by a pistol ball, also received while in discharge of official duties.

Palace car 153, for the President's private use, upon the trip to Louisville and the Yellowstone, "was stocked with six cases of the best champagne, three cases of Rhine wine, four gallons of old Bourbon whiskey of 1880, fine Cognac brandy, Bordeaux and other wines, and four cases of Appollinaris water. A large stock of cigars was also provided. The pantry was well stocked and the menu during the journey was very elaborate. The stores for these two departments —wine vault and pantry—cost nearly $800." Carry the news to Mrs. Hayes. Leader.

The Kansas City Times says the way to cause produce to bring a good price is to foster manufacturing establishments and other industries, thereby giving employment to many millions of men, who thus become customers wholly. A purely agricultural people is wholly dependent upon the people of more favored countries, where there are diversified interests fostered, for a market for such products as they may have to sell. Why is a farmer located near a large manufacturing town worth more than one fifty or a hundred miles away? Simply because the large number of customers in these manufacturing establishments must be fed, and the farmer finds a ready market for all the products of his acres.

The high protective tariff laws of this country not only stifle and oppress legitimate commercial enterprise and increase the burdens of taxation, but they in numberless ways provide sink-holes of corruption and wastefulness. One of the thousand extravagances of our clumsy tariff system is noted in a late report of the supervising special agent of treasury. There are twenty-two ports of entry at which custom houses with collectors and clerks are maintained, and at which not a dollar of duties are collected last year. There are thirty-two others in which the collections of last year did not equal the expense of maintaining them. Years ago, when the shipping trade was not confined to a few great ports, these custom houses transacted considerable business, but now that the trade is monopolized by a few of the larger cities there is no earthly need of these minor establishments, and they should be abolished. The only use they serve at present is to furnish fat sinecures for hungry stalwart place-seekers. The next democratic congress should legislate these superfluous and costly offices out of existence.—Lansing Journal.

Just before the death of the Hon. Alexander H. Stephens a friend proposed to read a chapter in the Bible and pray with him. To this the expiring statesman replied: "I do object and most decidedly. I have no objection to prayer, for I believe in it; but I do object to death-bed repentance. I have made it a rule of my life to live each day as if it were going to be my last. In the heat of politics I have sometimes forgotten myself, but I am no better to day on my death bed than I have tried to be every day of my life, and I have no special preparations to make, and no special plea to offer." He evidently believed that God accepts integrity or purpose in lieu of great achievements, and is prepared to make larger allowances for the worst of us than we ever make for each other.

A serious, very serious, charge has been made against Gov. Begole. It is claimed that he eats pie with his knife. This is the greatest charge of all. The Governor's friends have cleared him of every other accusation, including a too free use of the pardoning power, and robbing his grandchild; but this pie-eating charge will be apt to wreck him politically. For our edible farmers all cut their pie with silver forks, and they will not vote for a man who eats a tough under crust with his knife. Gov. Begole's administration thus far has been most commendable, and until now the republicans have been unable to make any indictment against him hold. But this pie charge is too crushing, and we may as well prepare our minds for a fork-eating republican governor next election.—Independent.

The New York Herald upsets the specious argument of protectionists, who claim that high tariff benefits the workingman, in this manner: It was shown before the senate committee that the wages of an operator were in England relatively higher than they are in this country. One of the witnesses said that the pay of Wheatstone operators in England was from £1 10s. to £2 10s. a week; a man could live comfortably in any part of England for ten or twelve shillings a week—say $2.50. For this sum most four times a day could be had if desired. When I was traveling about the country, said the witness, "I lived sumptuously for twelve shillings a week, and this was living in hotels." On the whole, the lot of a telegraph operator in England was better than it was in America. In England an operator received from three weeks' to a month's vacation, with full pay. When sick—even though his illness extended over a period of years—he received half pay. When through old age he became unfit to work he received a pension which frequently equalled his salary. In the United States the company paid the same operator a salary of fifty dollars per month, but here the cost of living is much higher. Another operator said that it cost fifty dollars per month for meals and room; also that one operator in a hundred had something left over at the end of the year. No pensions can be expected. The Herald has said again and again that wages expressed in money gave no basis for making comparisons. Table after table of money wages are given out as conclusive evidence, but which could not begin to stand close examination. It is the purchasing power of wages that is the main point to be considered, and, judged on this standard, it is misleading and ridiculous to claim that wages in this country are fifty or seventy-five per cent higher than in Europe.

Every year, it becomes more and more apparent, to even casual observers, that the soil and climate of this northern region are well adapted to the growth of clover. On all soils not absolutely swampy, or so light as to be classed as the poorest quality of barren plains, it flourishes finely. Especially is this true of the average and prevailing sandy loams of this region. There are no better clover lands anywhere in the country. It is a fact also that those farmers who for several years have been growing clover have greatly improved the quality and increased the productiveness of their lands and, as a result of this, are "getting along" much better than those who have pursued a different course. We could name a town in an adjoining county where the farmers are trying to make a living almost entirely by raising grain. And they succeed in "making a living," and that is all they do make, except every year making their farms poorer and less productive. Their wheat crops are diminishing year by year, and this will continue until they are forced to sell out, unless they change their tactics. If they would clover and plaster their farms thoroughly their land would grow better from year to year and their grain crops would be greatly benefited. But they will not do it. They don't take the papers. We haven't a single subscriber in that town. The advice in this article will do them no good for they will never read it. There are others who will read it and perhaps be benefited by it. There are many farmers in this region who will find it greatly to their interest to raise more clover. Some of our readers may say you have told us all this before. That is true. And we expect to tell it again and often, for we know that the clover crop lies at the base of the agricultural prosperity of this country.—N. W. Farmer.

We are now receiving many postal notes. They are a yellowish, oily scrip issued by the party that stole our fractional currency and funded it into bonds for us to pay interest upon, so we not only lost the best fractional currency we ever had, but have to pay the bondholder millions of dollars annually for the inconvenience and wrong that was inflicted upon us. The national party has made a great rampus about this. They have plied the land with protests against the double outrage. At last the republican party has been forced to throw a crumb to the "noisy greenbakers." They issue this currency to use in condition that when we want a fraction of a dollar we we will pay three cents to get it, and lest others shall use the same scrip without paying three cents they punch dates limiting the time in which it can be used. This dirty little scheme to make three cents every time any one of 50,000,000 people needs a convenient fractional currency ought to be known as the three cent swindle. Besides making the people pay three cents, this red tape arrangement requires a vast amount of clerical work. Already the leading papers of the country say they are not a success because of the enormous burden they impose upon postmasters. The scrip not being lawful money of course banks are not required to take it, and as they do not want any competition in the issue of money they refuse it in many cases and will do their best to drive it out. Cut off the dates, issue this fractional currency in convenient denominations, make it lawful money, and stop hamboogging and annoying the people!—Iowa Tribune.

In the Commons Fifty-three Years.

The present "Father of the House of Commons," Mr. Christopher Rice Mansfield Talbot, has sat for the county of Glamorgan, without interruption, from 1830 down to this day. Like other "Fathers of the House" who preceded him, he has been distinguished for brilliant talents rather than distinctive longevity. His immediate predecessor, Mr. Cecil Forester, the present Lord Lorner, sat for Mount Westmorland from 1828 to 1874, and never broke silence during that time. His predecessor, Sir Charles Burrell, sat for Shoreham from 1806 until 1852, and during that period of nearly sixty years spoke but once, and that to introduce a bill for blacking binoculars to be compelled to clean windows from the outside.

The Wealth of Nations.

The true basis of national wealth is not gold, but wood. Forest destruction is the sin that has cost us our earthly paradise. War, pestilence, storms, fanaticism and intemperance, together with all other mistakes and misfortunes, have not caused half as much permanent damage as that fatal crime against the fertility of our mother earth. —Felix L. Oswald.

The Fall of a Wig.

In February, 1833, Summer being in England, wrote to a friend as follows: "Lord Brougham has given me his full-bottom Lord Chancellor wig, in which he made his great speech on the Reform bill. Such a wig cost 12 guineas, and then the associations of it! In America it will be like Habelais gown." The wig was sent home by Summer, to Judge Story, to whom he wrote from Germany in 1840, saying: "I am glad you have Brougham's wig. I always wished to go to the law school. Put it in a case and preserve it." This request was complied with, and the wig became one of the curiosities of the school. But the biennial migrations of students, the resignations of professors and the repeated changes in librarians soon removed those who knew the value of the relic, and the wig, in its pasteboard box, worked its way to the obscurity of the law-school garret.

Years passed; the death of Brougham in 1868 revived the faded memories of his eloquence, his varied learning and his wonderful career; a biographer of Sumner stumbled on a clue to the existence of the wig, and sought it at the Cambridge school. None of the then-present generation of students had ever heard of it. Inquiry proved that the law-school garret had been cleared of rubbish several summers previous, and that the wig in its dusty box had migrated to a store-room in Harvard Hall. To old Harvard, then, the searcher went, and encountered an aged employe of the college who presided over the buildings in the yard. Yes, he remembered a wig in a pasteboard box which he'd cleed about for some time and had then been turned over to one of his assistants. The assistant was summoned, and after long effort recalled to his memory the fact that he had given an old wig to his children to play with, and that they, having exhausted its attractiveness it had gone into the ash-heap, and one summer afternoon had been carted across Holmes field to the bonfire by the wibows, and dumped into the mass of earth and ashes which were then being graded to form the ground upon which now stands the north goal of the football field.

Further search was useless, and the wig was left to its fate; but the future students of the English law, as they finger the pages of Messon and Welsby, or Barnewall and Cresswell, and gaze northward from the windows of the new law building, may meditate on the mutability of music, and the fall of Lord Brougham's wig from the pinnacle of the woolsack to the ash-heaps of Holmes field Boston Advertiser.

An Odd Trade.

"Mixers" are employed in most wholesale liquor houses. They compound wines and liquors from decolorized alcohol, extract essence, and other ingredients. They command salaries from $2,000 a year down to $18 a week. Only a few get the larger sum. The reporter had no difficulty in finding a "mixer."

"It is easy enough to mix liquors," he said, "but the thing is to mix them well. The salesman brings in a sample of brandy and says, 'mix up two barrels like that.' The first thing to be done is to taste the sample and find out its strength. Then we take spirits of wine which is alcohol without much, and put in enough cognac to give it the proper flavor. The liquor is colored with caramel, which is simply burnt sugar. The manufactured brandy has not the color and flavor of the sample, and may lack its smoothness. This is remedied by pouring in a syrup made from white sugar and water. Then we've got two barrels of the best brandy."

"Is brandy the only liquor you compound?"

"Oh, no. We make up pretty much of everything—port and sherry wine, gin, rum, whisky and many others. One of the greatest things is to dilute spirituous liquors so that they can be sold for the regular article. The commonest order of testing their strength is by tasting, observing the size and appearance of the bubbles when shaken, and the sinking, or floating, of olive oil in them. These difficulties are not hard to get over, and I've often diluted whisky that would stand before all these tests. The greatest difficulty up to recent time ago was to get the proper bubbles when the liquor was shaken. Several years ago, however, what is called 'bead oil' was invented. How it is made I don't know. I believe the inventor has kept the process a secret. He made an independent fortune. A little of this oil poured into diluted liquor will give it as pretty a bead as if it were high proof. Of course the fraud can be discovered by distillation, but that is a troublesome process, and is rarely resorted to. To do so you what our 50, just taste this blackberry brandy."

The mixer handled the reporter's small glassful. It was pleasant and mild, and had every appearance of being the genuine article.

"How do you like it?" he asked.

"Very well, indeed."

"It is pretty good," said the mixer, as he took back the glass; "but it has a fault—it is innocent of blackberries."—New York Sun.

The Pine Lake Lumber Co. are grading for a new saw mill, to contain $3,000 worth of machinery, the power for which is to be located 150 feet distant, to avoid danger from fire.

Messrs. Barber of the South Haven Messenger, and E. M. Eaton, of Bloomingdale, made the JOURNAL a call last Friday. They expressed themselves well pleased with Charlevoix.

Greening & Gerken, the fish men, are each building a comfortable residence on the Mason addition, commenced since our report, and increasing the number of new houses to fifty-four.

The Cadillac Times furnishes more reading matter for the money than any other country paper we receive. Of 56 columns, 46 are reading matter, and the 10 columns advertising represent 40 business firms.

There will be a union temperance meeting at the opera house next Sunday evening at 7 o'clock, addressed by Rgy. J. T. Iddings. The subject is one which will never grow old, and the house should be packed.

The dance at the Hilton school house last Friday was well attended and on the whole a very pleasant affair. Among the "light weights" were Edwin Cook and O. D. Hilton. The latter hails from Eastport, furnished music.

I say, J. Y., don't apologize any more. People won't believe you pretty soon. Do the best you can, and then make your readers believe it is better than anyone else can do under similar circumstances. This plan works well here.

Our exchanges are full of reports of successful fairs. Another year something should be done here. It seems as if Charlevoix county could support such an institution, and this is the place to hold it. Let us see that something is done.

Mr. Geo. W. Jefferies has an enterprising hen. As a regular business she lays eggs larger than other hens, frequently giving them two yolks, but the other day, by a little extra exertion she produced one with three yolks. It measured 6¼x4 inches.

Mr. Edwin A. Lee, agent for the Detroit safe company was here Monday and opened the safe of the burned planing mill. He found everything unharmed, not even scorched or browned. A safe that will stand such a test is certainly a good one.

The regular Sunday morning service at the M. E. church consists of two sermons.—a five minute talk for children and young people, and a twenty minute discourse for older people. Next Sunday morning the subject will be "Life a testimony."

The Boyne Statesman last week gave an exhibit of the building operations of that live little burg, and made a good showing. For new buildings and additions in Boyne, the aggregate is $25,200; for improvements, including "cleaning lots," $6,375; total, $31,575. For Bay Springs, the Chapman hotel, barn, and improvements will foot up $30,000 when completed; new residences, stores, docks, etc., $15,500; improvements, including "cleaning lots," $2,500; total for Bay Springs, $47,800. Although Boyne's total is less than half that of Charlevoix, it is remarkably good for so small a village. That of Bay Springs is good, even without Chapman's mammoth hotel and improvements. We want to hear from East Jordan next.

Last Sunday afternoon we were shown a bunch of pea vines on which were matured peas, half grown peas, and blossoms, while the leaves were fresh and green as mid-summer. They were gathered from a patch of several rods extent, nearly all of which were as fresh and green as the sample shown.

Mr. E. B. Lapham of the Fountain City House will retire from the management of that hotel on the 20th inst. He expects to remove his family to Rockford. He announces an auction sale of personal property, as he has determined to retire permanently from the hotel business. He will be succeeded by Mr. Richard Cooper, the proprietor and former manager.

In the eastern cities a fierce newspaper war has waged for some weeks, which promises to gradually extend westward. In New York city daily papers which have heretofore sold at four and five cents suddenly dropped to two cents, retaining in many cases their double, triple, and quadruple sheets. Philadelphia new follows, and other cities are agitated. Verily, the era of cheap newspapers is at hand.

The planing mill is now secured. Last Friday evening the remainder of the stock was pledged, and on Monday evening a waiver of two weeks publication of notice required by statute was signed, and as much done as can be, until the officers are elected. Another meeting is to be held to-morrow (Friday) evening to elect directors, decide on a site, and get as near ready for active operations as possible.

The Forbes family gave an excellent entertainment last Friday evening at the opera house, considering the age of the children. The violin playing of Miss Edith has been the occasion of much favorable comment, and indeed it would be hard to believe that a mere child could play such music. Little Berta and George in "The best of all" created much merriment. The others did well, but we have not space to make special mention.

The Petoskey Record talks for a railroad connecting that town with the Michigan central railroad system, supplying the Bay City and Alma division at Indian River or Vanderbilt. It is argued that the competition thus afforded would modify the extremely high freight rate of the G. R. & I. during the winter, and the direct advantage would be a great increase in manufactures. The Record expresses the belief that the increase would be an hundred fold. There are lands in Emmet and Cheboygan counties now withheld from market under a grant providing for the building of such a road, and the best interests of the community demands that the road be built, and the lands opened for settlement. The Record urges pushing the matter at once. If such a line is built, we should like to see it continued around the shore to Charlevoix.

Expressing our own individual opinion, we should say that Mr. See's lot on the north side would be the better place to locate the new planing mill. It gives more land for the same cost, it does not jeopardize any other business interest already established, and we believe will not require a cash outlay in the beginning, thus making the first assessments lighter. As responsibility, there may be some question. That point depends entirely on the future building operations in the village. If the most of the building should be on the south side, the mill would be least accessible on the north side. On the contrary, if the most building should be done on the north side there could not be a more accessible location. This is a part of the question that cannot possibly be decided now. Of course each may have his individual opinion, but a majority now may be a minority next year. As to accessibility for unloading lumber or logs, we can see little difference, for there is deep water on either side. And for other indirect advantages to the village, we should like to see the mill located on the north side.

THE TRAIN-BOY.

"Mid the rattling of the train,
And the locomotive's wailing,
Like a jaunting car-driver,
Comes the train-boy's cadence
And solely musical squeaks and wriggles,
He doth lustrily rejoice.

He will make you with his silliness,
And he'll treat upon your pens,
With his big high-pressure lies-lots
Till of course you'd be shaving
And you may produce and sorrow
Thus you've had a daily fling.

With enormous he'll pass you,
Then his cough-drops educational,
And he'll no, relate your pressure
Why he coughed last night,
Till he's ready to shriver
The tracks published thereat.

He'll launch his water-lilies,
Yet to no garment in the system
Then a clean job lot of yellow
Covered treasures he'll utter,
And these aren'an yankeeism
In your back'd daily fling.

Magnolias he'll shower upon you,
Jokes, instead he will press,
With the travel-jokes-books printed,
Aren't seven years old enough?
And he'll come at his valised
Heaves knows how old before.

You may chop, reverse, or threaten,
You may curse and swear,
Yet will silent his persuasions,
Not a bit of behavior will go?
He, not a continental
Give a fig with unused train-boy.

PROVIDENTIAL PIGS.

"Oh, missis, missis! Somethin's 'ere lookin' 'ewsly!"

Blank horror and dismay were depicted upon the face of my small African, as she stood upon my threshold with upraised hands and eyeballs that seemed starting from their sockets. Her purse was one of preparation, for with the manic consideration of her race she sought to break the news gently to me, but the burden of it was too great for her, and with "'ere west breath she exclaimed:

"Dem pigs done chawed up Miss Lydia's wedding gown!"

"Glory," I exclaimed (she had been piously christened Hibernia), "Glory, how did it happen?"

"Hmmm" said Glory. "Fears to me jem pigs be got Satan in 'em. Times jey's 'ewsded from de cole lot what ran down a steep place into the sea. I'll go an fetch ye a piece."

She sped out and instantly returned with a tattered shred of India mull that had once been white, and still bore some resemblance to a gown. Poor Miss Lydy! This was all that remained of her dream of wedding splendors. She was too pitiful! I felt at once that the bonds of good neighborhood had been irretrievably broken, and that Maj. Hawthorne must be made aware of this sad and worst depredation of his unmerciful pigs.

But who would break the news to Miss Lydy?

"Glory," said I, "where is she?"

"Gone over to de burryin' place oh her mawnfuls," answered Glory.

Poor, faithful soul; even in these last days of her noisy school, with the vagrant terrors of matrimony and the still more appalling responsibility of unusual bonbons souls hanging over her, she did not forget the ancestors. Long lines of Lydikins lay buried in little sunken hillocks in the family burying-place which lay just in sight of her kitchen windows. She herself was the last her race, and until within three weeks it had seemed that the only fate which awaited her was to live out her little space under the ancestral roof-tree, and then lay down in the ancient ranks of those who had gone before. But a change had come. It came in the person of a returned missionary from the Micronesian Islands, who had turned the first and second parlormaid his pets and sorrows somewhere under the palm trees of those tropical lands and had come back to the scenes of his youth to recruit his health, serve his time, and look up partner No. 3. He met Miss Lydy at a woman's missionary meeting. He called the next afternoon and was invited to stay to tea. He accepted the invitation, and next morning Miss Lydy came into my room—for I, too, coincided under the Lindkins roof-tree, for a consideration—and, with much hesitation and many faint and delicate blushes, informed me that she had promised to share the future lot of the Rev. Nehemiah Appleblossom, to take care of his six children, and to support him in his arduous labors among the heathen of the Micronesian Islands.

I was struck dumb with amazement. "Miss Lydy," I said at length, "have you duly considered this project?"

Her thin figure quivered, and her white face, that had yet a delicate remembrance of youth in it, grew tender with feeling.

"Yes," she said; "I think I have. I have always had a presentiment that I should marry a minister or a missionary." Admirable and prophetic faith! "And Mr. Appleblossom says he knew the moment he set eyes upon me that I was ordained to be his wife; an you see it was not the surprise to either of us that it is likely to be to our friends."

I knew that her mind was fully made up. I demurred no longer, but lost myself at once in discussion of the wedding, which I plainly saw was what Miss Lydy desired of me.

"You will be married in church, I suppose?"

"Oh, no," said Miss Lydy, with gentle dismay. "I am the last of the Lodkinses. All the Lodkinses have been married at home. I will go out from under my own roof-tree. It is meet seem to forsake the ancestors," she paused to regulate a little choking in her throat, "I will at least not forsake their traditions. I shall leave a letter with the Parish Clerk, of course, that he may see that the graves of my dead are kept in proper order, as I always have loved to keep them; but I shall at least go as a Lodkins should.

It is my desire to be married in my grandmother's wedding gown."

Miss Lydy's voice trembled, and there was a humidity in her eyes, at which I did not wonder, for it was much like a funeral, after all.

"I thought, perhaps," went on Miss Lydy, "if I brought the consecrated relic to you, you would tell me if anything were necessary to be done to fit it to me. I don't care for the fashions, you know, and my grandmother, as I remember her, was about my height, but still, you know, something—some changes might be advisable."

"Certainly," I said. "Go bring it to me. I should so like to see it."

"It is appropriate India robe called it Inge," said. My grandfather, Capt. Simon Lodkins, brought it home from over the seas. I'll bring it."

Like some pale and gentle ghost she rose then and went to the linen drawer and unrolled from coils of linen that smell of lavender, the final relic of Mrs. Capt. Simon Lodkins' wedding state. It was fine embroidered muslin, the undoubted product of Indian looms.

"It's lovely," I said, "and so well kept that it will be just the thing for you. Will you try it on? We can tell then just what it needs."

Miss Lydy proceeded to disrobe herself and put on the spider-net gown. As she did so the changes in fashion's mandates became only too evident. It had no waist to speak of, and just a little lovelinessed puff for sleeves. Miss Lydy was extremely small-waisted. She had not thought of this. I knew well what the troubled look upon her face meant, and I pitied her maiden sensibilities. Could it be possible that her grandmother, Mrs. Capt. Simon Lodkins, had ever worn such a gown as this? She could not, I reflected, could indicate the depth of her mortification, but her face was a study for an artist.

"There must be sleeves," she murmured, after a few moments of silent and embarrassed contemplation.

"Yes," I replied, cheerfully as my constrained gravity would allow. "And you might have a ruffle and a flounce on the bottom."

She looked down. She had not before realized that the skirt of the venerated relic lacked a full quarter of a yard of reaching the floor.

"However could they?" she ejaculated in an undertone. But she quickly recovered herself, and looked up to me cheerfully over her spectacles.

"How ingenious people are," she said, with an air of sweet relief. "I knew you would help me out."

We went out together and bought the requisite mull that day, but when we came to put it beside the venerated relic" of Mrs. Captain Lodkins it was evident that time had so enriched the color of the latter that the two were most unfortunately unlike.

"We can lay it out on the grass," I said; "these June days are just the thing for it, and as it will be evening, nobody will see the difference."

Again Miss Lyddy smiled gratefully, and declared that my suggestion should be carried out.

The Rev. Nehemiah Appleblossom—"A lovely name, don't you think so?" said Miss Lydy, and she blushed and smiled like a schoolgirl in her fancies—had but a short furlough, and the marriage was to transpire next week, so the relic was put out to bleach forthwith. It had already been put upon the grass three days and nights, and had been religiously watered by Miss Lydy at morn and noon and dewy eve, and the next day it was to be taken up early and put into the dressmaker's hands for the necessary alterations, when the dreadful event occurred with which this narrative opens.

"Glory," I said, "do you keep watch for Miss Lydy when she returns. Say nothing about what has happened unless she misses the gown from the grass. In that case tell her that I thought it was bleached enough and took it up to dry, and you don't know where I have put it. I am going out now, but if she asks where, tell her you don't know."

Glory was faithful, and had beside the natural craft of her race, and I knew that she could be trusted. As for me, I swiftly donned my bonnet and set out to find Maj. Hawthorne. It was a bright June evening, and my walk through the meadow and the green lane skirted Hawthornedean would have been a more delightful one if I had borne a mind more at ease. The Major was a gentleman by birth, but he lived out his fifty bachelor years in a gay and careless way that had seemed to set the gentler part of his creation at defiance in the lifetime of his patronis. Hawthornedean had been a beautiful estate. It still retained many marks of wealthy and cultivated ownership, but it was sadly run down, as the home of a bachelor is apt to be. The grove, which had once been the pride of the place, was grown up with brush now, and the sere leaves of many summers' growth rustled under my feet as I walked through it. At one point, coming suddenly round a thick clump of undergrowth, I heard a chorus of tiny snorts and the scampering of innumerous hoofs, and I knew that I had invaded a haunt of the Major's last agricultural freak, the very brood of Berkshire pigs that were the source of all my borrowed woes. Away they scampered, their manes well raised in the air, and each with a curl in his tail that seemed too ornamental to be wholly the product of nature and to justify the village rumor that the Major's own sun had thus tails in curl-papers every night. They had the air of spoiled children, every one, and were evidently the Major's pets. But that didn't matter; they had ruined Miss Lydy's wedding gown, to say nothing of other aggravating exploits which do not belong to this story, and I was determined to have satisfaction out of their owner.

I found the Major sitting on his piazza, with an after-dinner look upon his handsome, good-humored face. He rose to greet me with an air of old-school politeness, dashed with a faint wonder that I, a woman, should have had the hardihood to approach a place so little frequented by women.

"Good evening, Miss Grace. I am happy to see you. In what can I have the honor to serve you?"

He had read my face, and knew that I had come on a mission.

"Maj. Hawthorne," I said, paying no attention to his offer of a chair, "I have come on a very painful errand."

"Sit down, madam," said the Major, politely. "I cannot possibly permit a lady to stand on my piazza. I ought, perhaps, to ask you to walk in, but I rather stuffy inside this evening."

"No," I said, "I will sit here, if you please." To tell the truth, indoors, as seen through the windows, had not the most inviting look, and I was glad to compromise.

"You have, no doubt, heard" plunging in medias res—"that Miss Lydia Lodkins is about to be married?"

"Married! Miss Lydia! No! Hadn't heard a word of it," said the Major, in genuine amazement. "Who is the fortunate man, pray?"

"The Rev. Nehemiah Appleblossom, a missionary, to the Micronesian Islands. He came home to recruit his health and find a wife."

"I know him," said the Major. "Saw him down at the station one day. Fine looking fellow. Could it be possible that her grandmother, Mrs. Capt. Simon Lodkins, had ever worn such a gown as this? She said on a word that could indicate the depth of her mortification, but her face was a study.

"There must be sleeves," she murmured, after a few moments of silent and embarrassed contemplation.

Glory was faithful, and had beside the natural craft of her race, and I knew that she could be trusted. As for me, I swiftly donned my bonnet and set out to find Maj. Hawthorne. It was a bright June evening, and my walk through the meadow and the green lane skirted Hawthorndean would have been a more delightful one if I had borne a mind more at ease. The Major was a gentleman by birth, but he lived out his fifty bachelor years in a gay and careless way that had seemed to set the gentler part of his creation at defiance in the lifetime of his patronis. Hawthorndean had been a beautiful estate. It still retained many marks of wealthy and cultivated ownership, but it was sadly run down, as the home of a bachelor is apt to be. They had the air of spoiled children, every one, and were evidently the Major's pets. But that didn't matter; they had ruined Miss Lydia's wedding gown, to say nothing of other aggravating exploits

I had not the instinct of Glory, and doubted; but what his errand was I was dying to learn.

But he disappeared into Miss Lydia's parlor, and I was left outside to temper my impatience as best I could. Presently Glory entered my house.

"Missus, missus," she whispered, "de do's swing open jes' de beas' crack, an de jes' speedin' fur big mirror; an' I ye come out here in the hall yo can see it all in the mirror as plain as day, an' it's been better'n a play."

It was a temptation, but believe me, dear reader, I resisted it. Only as Glory ran back to her peeping I followed to pull her away, and send her out of doors—that was simply my duty—and there he was, full on his knees before her, and also with that rapt, seraphic look upon his fine face which no woman ever wears except on the most vitally interesting occasions. But Glory disposed of, I went back to my sewing, and waited as best I could the conclusion of the momentous interview. The Major came out at length, as smiling as a May morning beneath the brown paper parcel behind him.

It was very still in Miss Lydia's room for a quarter-an-hour, and then she, too, emerged from her retreat. Spread over her hands was a piece of ornamented brunette, embellished with the boldest roses in full bloom, with lime-tinted leaves and little buds here and there among them. It had an ample skirt, a pointed waist, and a train a yard and a half long.

"My dear Grace," said she, "the Major has brought me his mother's wedding gown to be married in."

"Dear Lydia," said I, "but who is to be the bridegroom?"

She smiled as maids do, and looked coy at a second thought. She had put on in her cheek todepronte her reverence, as she whispered to me, "I guess the Major himself! Didn't he look grand in his knee breeches?"

"And Mr. Appleblossom?"

"Maj. Hawthorne will adjust that matter."

"That matter, indeed!" She spoke as though it were already as remote from her as the pyramids.

"I congratulate you, Miss Lydia," I said, growing formal, for she had behaved shamefully.

"Call me Lydia now" she murmured. "Maj. Hawthorne declares he has loved me since I was a child, but never thought himself worthy of me, the gay deceiver; and Mr. Appleblossom, you know, is only the acquaintance of a day."

I wanted to ask her how she had disposed of her prescriptions, but I did not dare.

Maj. Hawthorne subscribed $50 to the Micronesian mission, and sent Mr. Appleblossom elsewhere to look for a home, and the verdict of Hebania Gardners was that he had done the handsomest thing.

"Few goodness!" said Glory, "ef dare weren't a clar relation between dem pigs an' Providence, dis I don't know nothin'."

The fairies took the same pious view of the matter, and made the Major the most dainty and signified of wives.

A Terrible Sameness.

A young student of the law was desirous of obtaining a position and a fair, legently, poring over Blackstone, and the case of Sandals day's labor he would carefully insert a lee-knack at the page he had last finished. His fellow-students at regular intervals would remove the bookmarks, which lived at about the point where he had begun. It was only after the young student had completed his fourteenth reading of the same pages that some one ventured to inquire how he liked Blackstone. "I can't exactly say that I liked it," replied he; "there is such a terrible sameness to it."

"I'M going home to-day. At the latter impatient young man walked up to the door of one of the compartments and, knocking on the door, meekly inquired, "When in blazes are you going to put those bonnet boxes on?" There was a faint giggle and a shrill voice replied: "When I get married, I suppose." He had mistaken the door; that's all.

"Had you never the ladies' right?" asked the boy as he pulled himself loose and ran like a whipped cur, the question to bosom of the editor's daughter.

"Ha! Well, I should say so. Look at this—away sore on my hand."

"Do you mean the crack on the toe, when all the dust has settled?" prompted the lad, innocently.

"Now you mention the dust. That was a memento of a combat I had with Ferdinand Horsedam, a Sioux chief, who wouldn't pay me his subscription for the Scalper. We fought for three hours, and I worn my hook-knife down nearly to the handle by hacking him in different parts of his body. And as I gave the last stab that finished him he swore his tomahawk into my shoulder that five weeks afterwards left the leaves of a photograph album."

"I'm got well, though, didn't you?" "Oh, yes, you recovered easily enough," assented the exchange editor, with a wonderful sigh.

"No; I hear that the policeman who tossed you over the bend the night you was in liquor, and the doctor who was going to make you pay for the splinters in your head and the lawyer who got you out a head like a leather-covered block, and if he hadn't known you all my life, I guess he would have sent me to state of Putlaunig, lad have taken you a wooden-leg stopper.

"Whoop!" sang out the boy, as he ego-bounding into the room, with his sun-kissed golden locks disheveled and a sunburst of mud on his nose. "Did you see the Sioux Indians in the circus parade?"

"Circus parade!" sneered the exclusive editor. "Do you suppose that a man brave enough to allow himself to be led around the country on a Dodge metal land wagon for the sake of a few dollars and an occasional drink of whisky? Those fellows you saw weren't Indians."

"Well, I don't know," said the boy thoughtfully, the varying expressions of pain, diffidence and a desire to drop a keyrack down the exchange editor's back closing each other fitfully over his game features, "They were the other of a half-barrel brick, and they had legs outdoors sticking in their ears, and they said she was a cow-house. A PHYSICIAN'S DUTY.

Dr. E. HEATH, 22 North Street, Portland, Me., Nov. 11, 1885, writes:

"I have been troubled for a good many years with inflammation of the bladder, dating as far back as during the time I was in the army. I suffered much dull, heavy pains in the back and kidneys, so severe for me to describe, and tried several remedies that were recommended, was recommended by one of our best physicians, who prescribed Hop Bitters as the best and I was in the habit of using them for treatment but all much for me and the disease had seemed to fail. I was recommended to try Hop Bitters, as I had heard good accounts of them from friends in Portland and vicinity. I put about a bottle of Smith's drug store here and found after using the third bottle that it was doing me good, and after using several bottles I took about half a dozen more, and I was cured. I can recommend them to all who are suffering from kidney disease or disease of the bladder.

NO MATERIAL CHANGE.

This is to certify that I have used Hunt's Remedy for the kidneys and bladder, and derived much benefit from its use.

I have found it difficult about some days and received treatment from the local physicians, and used a number of other remedies, without any material benefit. I have been to my office, after using three bottles of Hunt's Remedy, and I feel much improved.

I do not hesitate to recommend it, and you are at liberty to use my name in recommending your medicine.

NEWTON, CONN., MAY, 1885. JOHN W. JOHNSON.

THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

Around the County.

South Arm.

Frosty nights and pleasant days are the order of things here now.

Newspaper correspondents and love-sick swains are supposed to be happy now—postage is reduced.

Several new babies in town, but we will not enumerate them.

Mr. Galloway, of Echo, has traded off his farm for a house and lot in Scotloch Maurice county.

A fruit-tree agent, Robinson by name, wandered this way recently.

Rev. and Mrs. H. C. Scofield started Thursday for a trip to southern Michigan. They expect to attend the Baptist state convention, soon to convene at Coldwater, and to visit relatives and friends there and elsewhere.

Mr. J. McInnes has gone to Canada on a business trip. He expects to bring his parents home with him.

It is rumored that Minnie Lagway of this township, but now visiting in Minnesota, was recently married to a gentleman of the latter place.

Mr. John Muirhead, of Norwood, was in town recently and took his two boys, aged eight and six years, home with him. They have been living with their grandmother, Mrs. Campbell, for three years, but John has taken unto himself a new wife and expects to keep them hereafter.

The age of Adelaide Higgins was thirteen years instead of seven, as stated in a recent number of the JOURNAL.

Mr. Charles McKay is building a new house. F. A. N.

The C. & W. M.

All Grand Traverse people are interested in the progress of the Chicago & west Michigan railroad, which, it is expected, will be completed through to Traverse City within two years, and, possibly next season. The Grand Rapids Eagle recently continued the following from the Free Press:

The Chicago & West Michigan railway company have about completed the negotiations with Brown, Howard & Co., the owners, for the purchase of the Toledo & Milwaukee railroad. The purchase of this new line would fit the Chicago & West Michigan to a leading position among the railroads of the state. Its main line now extends north and south from Coldwater to new Buffalo, 169 miles, with an extension via La Porte to La Crosse, Ind., thirty-eight miles; branch from Holland to Grand Rapids, twenty-five miles; Holland to Allegan, twenty-three miles, where it connects with the Toledo & Milwaukee railroad; Muskegon to Big Rapids, fifty-five miles; Grand Rapids to West Troy, sixty-three miles, and Mears to Hart, three miles. Total, 376 miles. The Toledo & Milwaukee is located is about 174 miles long from Toledo to Allegan, and if acquired by the Chicago & West Michigan would increase its mileage to 550 miles. The Chicago & West Michigan is principally a lumber road, return freights being light, but the new acquisition will place it in a situation to control a good share of the carrying trade of western Michigan as well as a limited portion of the central and southern tier of counties. The Chicago & West Michigan is controlled by Boston capitalists, chief among whom are the Adams family. Charles Francis Adams and his son John Quincy Adams. The same persons are the principal owners of the Detroit, Lansing & Northern railroad. The Toledo & Milwaukee is being built by the same parties that constructed the "Nickel Plate." Their business is to build railroads to sell. The Newaygo branch of the Chicago & West Michigan will soon be extended to Big Rapids, a point on the Flint & Pere Marquette. The company has now running twenty-six of the fifty new furniture cars, ordered at the Muskegon shops. The company is also building several elegant new passenger coaches, baggage, mail and express cars for passenger service on its road. George C. Kimball, the general manager, is known as one of the most thoroughly practical, energetic and economical railroad managers in Michigan. An Eagle reporter, in conversation with one of the general officers of the C. & W. M., this morning, learned that the announcement of the Free Press is not quite true in fact, as to the purchase of the Toledo & Milwaukee or the Michigan & Ohio railroad. That this action has been somewhat considered, is true, and that the purchase may yet be made, is also true, but thus far nothing definate has been proposed or done. The Michigan & Ohio is in close relation with the Ohio Central which proposes to be one of the great coal roads of the country, and the business of shipping coal to this section is certain to increase very largely and rapidly in the near future.

The distance from Baldwin to Traverse City is about 60 miles, and this is all that remains to be built to connect the C. & W. M. road with Grand Traverse bay, and open up at once a large passenger and freight traffic that would add very materially to the receipts of the road, which would pass through a magnificent farming country and tap a large amount of valuable pine timber, while at Traverse City it would take much of the carrying trade of the entire bay country, as this trade is very largely with Chicago. The sooner this road is completed to this point the better for the road and the country.—Grand Traverse Herald.

Ben Butler.

The national greenback state convention of Massachusetts nominated Gen. Butler for governor. The democratic convention of the next day also nominated Butler, but made separate nominations for the balance of the ticket.

Gov. Butler made a characteristic speech, reviewing and defending his official acts, and bitterly scathing the republican party.

The campaign in Massachusetts is now open, and will be the fiercest contest the old bay state has ever known. The war cry of the republicans is "anything to beat Butler," and they will spare no money nor efforts to accomplish their purpose. They are terribly exasperated by old Ben's exposure of the rottenness and corruption of republican management, and realize that one more such overhauling will ruin their chances forever. The republican candidate for governor notified the committee that he would put in a quarter of a million dollars himself, and with the other contributions and assessments the machine will have an enormous corruption fund, and the experience of the past shows that it will be expended without regard to honor or principle, but solely with a view to buying as many votes as possible.

On the other hand Butler has his wonderful pertinacity, his unequaled sagacity, the wisdom of experience, and the strongest hold upon the common people that any man has had since Lincoln was shot. He is the ablest politician in the United States, and will give the Beacon Hill aristocrats a hard racket.

The interest in the contest is not confined to Massachusetts, but is national in its extent; for the opinion is gaining ground that if Butler succeeds in this election he is a strong candidate for the presidential nomination next year.—Independent.

A Dry Eye for Southern.

To determine the value of building stone, a meditation among the tombs is a very good thing, and a capital article on the "life" of stone used for public or private structures could not fail to be written upon what might be observed in humble village graveyards or splendid city cemeteries. In far fewer years than most people imaging monuments erected to last to the resurrection are in ruins—before the grandsons of the poor inhabitants below" are dead. Nature will allow just as little waste material as she can help and has a very dry eye for sentiment. The subject is far from being exhausted.

Some Catch About It.

An insurance agent applied to a woman in Detroit to induce her to get her husband's life insured.

"Will I be sure to get the money if he does right off?"

"Certainly, madam."

"But will you give me an assurance that he will die right off?"

"No, madam, we cannot do that."

"Well, then, what good will it do me to get his life insured if he doesn't die? I knew there was some catch about this insurance business."

Pilfered Paragraphs.

An old criminal was once asked what was the first step that led to his ruin, when he answered: "The first step was cheating a printer out of two years' subscription—when I had done that the devil got such a grip on me that I couldn't shake him off."

Now is the time your horses and cattle need attention. To prevent disease and tone up the system you will find Parmelee's Cuticlifton Powders unequalled. Full pounds 25 cents. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co. 8-61

Each postmaster, customs officer and paragraphing newspaper in the country is calling aloud for President Arthur's renomination, just as Arthur was an old maid bee who became struck by lightning because what heals from such sources seem.

Always Useful.

If you have rheumatism, neuralgia or any sprains, stiffnesses, sore muscles, bruises, sore throat, &c., Parmelee's Universal Liniment will cure quickly and surely. If your horse has some sprain, swenny, spavin, strains, or lameness of any kind, Parmelee's Universal Liniment is the best possible remedy you can use. Large bottles 50 cents, ordinary size 25 cents. For sale by O. B. Weed & Co.

A youngmiss of 16 asks what is the proper thing for her to do when she is serenaded by a party of gentlemen at a late hour. We are glad to be able to answer this question. Shut softly down a lace and smile the dog.—Clinton (ohio) Shoemakers Union.

No Scrofula

Can be so deep-seated, so malignant and stubborn, but Parmelee's Blood Purifier will not be found helpful. It will effect a cure, if cure be possible. And if you are troubled with boils, salt rheum, pimples, rough skin, or any humor whatever, just give the Purifier a thorough trial and you cannot fail to receive benefit from it. Price $1 per bottle. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co.

Coldwater, according to the Sun, has had a man and woman who say they have been living together without marriage. Some time ago the woman felt as if she would like a change. She corresponded with another free lover, for partner being aware of it and offering no objection. And before she went to join the new partner, she made her old one comfortable by a marriage and then leave home to his bachelorhood. All this in Michigan.

Restored by Magic.

Has the lake air and wind spoiled your complexion? Do you long for a preparation that will completely remove moth, tan and freckles, and leave the skin clear and soft? If so, you have but to buy a bottle of Hamilton's Magnol Balm, which is simply magical in its effect and perfectly harmless. It is used in all the best families and gives unbounded satisfaction. Price 50 cents per bottle. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co.

Michigan has a motto upon her coat of arms—"si quæris peninsulam amœnam circumspice." If you wish to see a beautiful peninsula, look about you. That is no fanciful advertisement of exaggerated proportions, but is a simple introduction to those who enter our borders, the apparently complimentary language of which is found by every visitor to be a truthful statement. The old derisive songs that told of ague, marshes, rattlesnakes, and wolverines, as the natural products of Michigan are now sung no more, and none visit the peninsular state who do not go away with pleasant memoirs of her climate, soil, productions, and people.

The Keys.

The kidneys and liver are the keys to women's health. If these organs are in a healthy condition no fear need be entertained of sickness, for the system will cleanse itself of impure matter. If you have headache, dizziness, loss of appetite, lame back or side, falling strength, languor, excessive flow of urine, &c., remember they are the advance guard, and give warning to more serious troubles such as dropsy, bright's disease, &c. Parmelee's Diuretic Tablets, Kidney and Liver Cure is a sure cure for all these diseases. Price $1.00 large bottle. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co.

The question, "What do whitefish feed upon?" is often asked, because nobody ever finds a whitefish with anything in its stomach. We had information with some of our fishermen upon the subject not long ago, and last week Mr. David Smith, agent of McCormick & Columbo's fish house, brought down with him a gas full of wriggling creatures of the lowest quality, which were taken from the nets of the Hessler boys off the mouth of the bay. It is asserted that millions of these tiny creatures will be found upon the feeding grounds of the whitefish, and at times are brought up by the nets in such quantities as to cover the decks and embarrass the fishermen. Mr. Smith asserts that the half-digested forms of these creatures is the only food he has ever found in the stomach of a whitefish among the many thousands that have passed through his hands; and the Detroit brothers, who have had long experience and are reasonably intelligent men in their calling, say that whitefish, outside of the spawning season, are never caught upon ground where this beech is absent. It is about an inch in length, very slender in form, and with black and white stripes running alternately around it.—Ecorse.

Hall's Catarrh Cure has taken interally. It acts directly upon the blood and the mucous surfaces of the system. Price 75c. For sale by Dr. Crouter.

Echoes from the Election.

Even Iowa, though plucked like a brand from the burning, has been totally scorched. Last year the republican plurality was 37,871; this year it will not foot up more than 25,000, and may be under 20,000. The democrats figure it from 5,000 to 12,000. —Evening News.

A Columbus, Ohio, dispatch says it is conceded at republican headquarters that Hoadly's majority will reach 12,000 to 15,000 and that the democrats will have a majority of 26 on joint ballot in the legislature. The prohibitory amendment received over 300,000 votes, but lacked some 20,000 of the number necessary for adoption. The increased republican vote in the cities is accounted for by the trading of certain classes of democratic votes for anti-prohibition ballots, while tem permance republicans in the rural districts traded for prohibition votes, and on the whole the republicans got left.

The results of the Iowa election are encouraging in the extreme to the democracy. Every township in the state reports democratic gains. They have raised their legislative representation from 22 to 52 in the house and from 3 to 15 in the senate, and full returns may enlarge the figures. Prohibition is defeated. Whatever may be the composition of the legislature, and if the latest returns bear out the promise of the earlier, the plurality of Sherman (rep.) for governor will not exceed 5,000. The democrats have elected Cook for congressman in the sixth district by 1,600 majority over the railroad candidate Stiles. Anti-prohibition and anti tariff will sweep Iowa in future.

The Cincinnati Enquirer of last Thursday morning display headed its Ohio election returns as follows: "Buckeyeisl—The Grand Old Party in the Hour of Death Rattle its Bones Over the Stones, It's a Rotten Old Party Whom Nobody Owns—The Buckeye State Fires a Big Broadside for 1884—Judge George Hoadly Elected Governor by a Majority Estimated at Twelve Thousand—A big Democratic Majority in the Legislature, Securing the Election of a Democratic United States Senator—But the Prohibitory Amendment is Doubtless Lost—Thus there are Gains for all Our Losses, There are Smiles for all Our Tears, And the Bad Republican Bosses are Kicking Like Bob Tailed Steers."

Ohio is a democratic state. As indicated by two platforms in that state on which the canvass just closed has been fought, the two parties did not differ materially on any important point of general national policy. Judge Forraker is known everywhere as a very popular man, while Judge Hoadly not only lacks many of the necessary elements of popularity, was not the first choice of a majority of the Ohio democrats, has been sick during a greater part of the campaign, and by leading democrats in other sections in the state was not given the support to which his nomination entitled him. Under such circumstances a handsome majority for Hoadly means that the people, particularly in the country districts, have become deeply dissatisfied with the way in which republican office holders have managed the trusts placed in their hands and with republican extravagance, corruption, chicanery and monopoly fostering, and that for reformation they have made up their minds that they must look to those who have been their political opponents. The Ohio election means that the republican party must go.—Grand Rapids Democrat.

There isn't a grain of consolation for the republicans in the Ohio disaster not one. They can derive no satisfaction from the usual plea of an off year. True it is an off year, but it wasn't an off year vote. The whole army was in the field on both sides, reserves and all; it was perfectly understood that the election would have an important bearing on the presidential election; John Sherman promised the state an Ohio candidate for president if it went republican; there were directly involved in the contest, the governorship and all the state offices, the legislature and the United States senatorship. It was no side-show, but a circus of the biggest kind that can be exhibited in a single state, and the desperation with which the campaign was conducted on both sides showed how fully the importance of it was appreciated. It is the sheerest nonsense to belittle the result. It is a disaster to the national republican party. It assures the loss of New York this fall, and it makes republican defeat in the presidential campaign all but certain. It will send to the democratic party as to a safe harbor, all the rag, tag and bobtail of doubtful voters who are determined to be on the winning side, and throw half a dozen doubtful northern states into the democratic list.—Evening News.

The fate of prohibition in Ohio should satisfy the republicans of the folly of meddling with it. However determined the so called temperance element in the country may be to carry it, the majority of the people are determined to preserve their personal freedom with respect to the sale and consumption of liquor. Any party which commits itself to forcible interference with that freedom will be crushed in every state where the foreign element has any strength, and that means in nearly every state which is essential to success in a presidential election. The persistency of the republicans in obtruding the issue has permanently alienated the Germans of Ohio, and seriously shaken them in their allegiance in Michigan. And it is extremely doubtful if anything that can now be done, can win them back before the great contest of next year. It is true, that the republican ranks are so full of radical prohibitionists that it is nearly as dangerous to offend them by ignoring the question as to offend the Germans by bringing it to the front; but they should remember that the temperance people, at the very worst, will only set up a ticket of their own while the advocates of personal liberty, when offended, will go bodily over to the enemy. It is much safer therefore to throw the subject out of politics altogether and let the prohibitionists wear themselves out, if they insist, in a little party of their own. They will not go over to the democrats in any event, and after one or two vain efforts they would come back to the republican fold, their natural place to stay. Puritanism or moral fanaticism—that sort of zeal which impels its victim to devote all his energies to the reformation of his neighbor's vices, and forget all about his own—has always been the mainstay of the republican party. Without some moral issue to rouse this zeal into a crusading enthusiasm, the party falls into apathy. It was in their despair of finding such an issue that the leaders of the party have recently been reaching out toward prohibition, and they had indeed gone so far that the republican organs and stump orators all over the country had joined in a chorus of denunciation of the wickedness of liquor selling, and were announcing everywhere that the next great work of the republican party was the destruction of the cup that cheers and also inebriates. It was a foolish mistake. The world is a long way behind—or before—that sort of thing. The managers will have to look around for something else. There is nothing but disaster in meddling with the dietary habits of the people. —Evening News.

The republicans have controlled the national government continuously for more than twenty-two years. During that period there has been an enormous increase in the total munber of government officers and servants. It was just as apparent fifteen years ago as it is now that a system of examination and promotion for merit would improve the civil service. The republicans had the power to establish such a system at any time. Did they institute a reform or make any effort to bring it about? Not at all. They have been all these long years, carefully maintaining what they now admit to be a partisan civil service until they see that they must soon relinquish their hold on the national government. Then, under the administration of a president who was turned out of the office of collector for alleged unfitness, and who has been reviled and abused without stint by the pretentious reformers of his own party, a civil service reform bill is passed which was prepared by a prominent democratic senator and is best known by his name, and thereupon the republicans all over the country look complacently at one another and cry out, "We did it?" —*N. CHARLEVOIX, - MICHIGAN.

THAT American genius is busy is shown by the Patent Office reports. During the year ending June 30 last the number of caveats filed was 35,734, as against 30,062 in the previous year, and the receipts of the office for 1883 were $366,989 more than in 1881, and $165,020 more than in 1882.

QUININE is said to be decreasing in demand at the West, a prominent Chicago firm reporting that weekly sales are a fifth of those a few years ago, a circumstance due to the disappearance of malaria, as farms are drained and lands cultivated. In New England, on the other hand, the sales of quinine have greatly increased of late as malaria has succeeded typhoid as the current type of disease.

IT is claimed that birds and insects disappear when deadly epidemics are about to appear. Testimony of experienced Europeans seems to be in favor of the hypothesis. One writer says: "I venture to suggest that the investigation and collection of trustworthy meteorological data during the prevalence of epidemics, and of collateral information bearing thereupon, have not yet received as much attention as it deserves from the medical profession."

IN South America cattle have increased so rapidly the last few years that buffaloes have declined from $10 per head to a few cents over $6 per head. It is estimated that in two years from now the number of cattle in the Argentine Confederation will number 28,000,000, against 13,000,000 in 1877, 6,000,000 of which are in the State of Buenos Ayres. The Confederation also claims 50,000,000 sheep, 10,000 goats, 4,000,000 horses and 18,000 ostriches. The population is only about two to the square mile.

ACCORDING to figures furnished to the American Bar Association Convention, in 1836 there were 20,000 lawyers in this country; in 1870, 40,878; in 1880, 64,187. The number of lawyers in the States at the close of the Revolution was from 200 to 700. Only 126 attorneys had been admitted in New York by royal license prior to the Revolution, and many of these were dead when hostilities broke out. In 1880 there were seventy-five female and 64,062 male lawyers; sixty-four of the seventy-five female lawyers were under 60 years of age, eleven were 60 and upward. To-day there are 70,000 lawyers in the country, in another half-century there will probably be 300,000.

MR. BATTERSON, of Johnsonburg, Pa., started to move his family to where he had established a basket factory in the woods, and got lost in the darkness. Happening to strike a railroad track, they foolishly followed it with their horse and buggy. Just as they emerged from a deep, dark cut, after crossing a bridge, a train dashed past. They had driven for a mile and half over the most dangerous portion of the Johnsonburg extension of the Erie railway, and had crossed the great Kinzua viaduct, the highest railroad bridge in the world, which spans the Kinzua ravine at a height of 320 feet above the creek. Their escape from death was owing solely to the stopping of the northbound coal train a mile below the rock, on account of a hot journal.

DR. J. MITCHEL gives a more hopeful account of the progress of the colored people of the South than some others. He says that the freedmen have nearly 1,000,000 children at school; publish over eight newspapers; furnish nearly 16,000 teachers; about 15,000 in the high schools and colleges; about 2,000,000 members in the Methodist and Baptist churches alone; that in less than twenty years they own 180,000 acres of land in Georgia alone, and over 5,000,000 in the whole South; that the increase in the production of cotton since the emancipation has been 1,000,000 bales per year, or one-third more than when working under the lash; that colored men have engineers; and nearly completed a railroad in North Carolina, and finally, that they are assessed for over $91,000,000 of taxable property.

THE following characteristic incident of life in the far West is given in a recent telegram from Socorro, N. M.: Joel Fowler, who killed three "mullers" about a year ago, started from his ranch for a cow load. He had discovered that one of his men, known as "Pomp," was a brother of Forrest, whom he had killed, and he discharged him. Pomp came into Socorro, and, with "Butcher Knife Bill," returned to Fowler's ranch to kill him. Fowler was riding to Alma ranch with his men, and when within twenty yards of the stone house met Pomp and Bill. Both of them drew their revolvers. Bill fired at Fowler. The latter drew his shotgun and killed Bill at the first shot. Pomp then ran behind the house and fired five times at Fowler, who had dismounted and ran toward him. Pomp escaped into the house and stood off Fowler. At this time Melton, who occupied the house, rode up, and hearing of the trouble, told Pomp to come out of the house. He received no answer and thought that Pomp was dead, so he walked up to the door and kicked it open, and then put his head in to look around. Pomp shot him through the head, killing him once. Fowler then proposed to Pomp that he come and fight him alone with pistols or give himself up and be taken to Socorro. Pomp did not answer. The house was then fired to drive him out, but, rather than be taken, Pomp killed himself by sending a bullet through his head. The three bodies were buried in the same grave.

THE singular fact that venomous snakes still frequently permit children to play with them and handle them without molestation, recently had another illustration near Stroudsburg, Pa. Two little children, the one but 2 and the other 3 years of age, were playing together. The former was the child of Franklin Smith, the latter the child of John Heine. They were playing in Smith's yard. Mrs. Smith, having occasion to go to the door saw the two children sitting sitting side by side on the grass. Her child had a short stick in its hand with which it was giving frequent light taps on the ground in front of it. Mrs. Smith supposed they were playing with a small land-turtle which had been seen about the yard for some days, and after watching the children's mirth for some time she walked toward them to see what they were doing to the turtle. When she had approached to within a few feet of them she was horrified to see that the children were amusing themselves with a large rattlesnake. For a moment she was speechless and motionless. The snake lay at full length, apparently enjoying the caresses and attention of the children. At each touch of the stick the snake would sluggishly raise its head, open its mouth and dart its tongue in and out. It was this that made the children laugh. Recovering herself by years of age, clevos were 60 and upward. To-day there are 70,000 lawyers in the country. In another half-century there will probably be 300,000.

GOSSIP FOR THE LADIES.

Love's Power.

If I were blind, and then should feel once
Your cheek or lip to kiss,
I would know it
By the thrill of bliss.
Something subtly would reveal it,
As in a glory round the sunlight
That was of lightless up the chasm.
A day long; would merely say to me,
Thy mouth's sweetness dwelt in Paradise,
Thy cheek the crown to God.
If I were blind

If I were deaf, and then under spoken
Ever the presence I had known,
I should know it,
I should know it,
Something would well round it,
Something would say, I would say,
First upon that time of rapture,
Shouldst thou speak or sing,
Shouldst thou, as at one, conscious flashes
Of lower light through Death's cold sphere
Wont give back the souls it is not,
Shouldst thou

Astronomy.

"Are you to take astronomy next term, Eliza?" inquired a classmate of young friend.

"Hardly. But Augustus is giving me splendid astronomical lessons during the moonlight."

"Isn't that nice? Has he text books and an atlas?"

"Oh, I assume, my dear. He says I'm all the world to him, and when I lean my head on his shoulder he is my Atlas."—Hartford Post.

How He Felt.

"I heard you kissed the prettiest girl in the room at the party, last night, observed an Atlanta youth in lilac-tinted goggles to his companion.

"Well I did, for a fact.

"Well, what of it?

"Oh, nothing, but I'd just like to know how you felt during the sweet inoculation?"

"Felt like a bee-stung.

"Like a beefsteak?

"Yes, smothered in onions."—Texas Siftings.

Flowers.

The love of flowers is very dear to the female heart.* In the squalid tenement houses of New York a reporter found that most of the women who were not personally degraded, had pots of flowers in their windows, evidently got at great sacrifice of scanty earnings. These flowers were carefully cherished, as though from them came intensely comfort or solution for the wretchedness, misery, and foulness of their surroundings. There is something good left in the woman who loves flowers.

The Women Who Adopt Puppies.

As for "those women who prefer nursing puppies rather than their own babies," they are moved by the universal law of nature, which struggles for the survival of the fittest and subordinates the inferior to the superior animal. In these cases the affection between the puppy and the baby is that the puppy never will become a street girl, display a voluptuous form to every man, she needs, and so accustom him to the extent of her power, a year old never sniper behind her fan and turn up her eyes, like a duck in a thunderstorm, to catch an eligible young man. Puppy will never be a duke, or a detective, a fast or a bank man, and the probabilities are that the baby of such a mother would be one or several of these things. Then every woman should know her place, in animated nature, and if one feel that her place is unchaste to that of a dog, why should she not step into it?—Mrs. Sarlsbehn.

Another Instance.

Who Listens to Hi. wife

HIS, of course, made by law part of a wife's duty as such to listen patiently, and if possible intelligently, to the evening complaints of her husband, whether directed against her chief or the neighbors, or the society at large. It is probably also her duty, if her husband happens to be an "economical" or a "closet thinker," to listen without interruption or cross-examination to any scheme for the improvement or regeneration of the world that he may take to occupy his mind when the day is over and the family assembled for the evening meal. It is also her duty in the performance of which wives play a selfless and self-sacrificing part in life, and we are no doubt that one reason why the social revolution has been so long postponed is that so many of those who would otherwise have joined in it have, by venting their wrath against society upon their wives, or at least by pouring their wrongs into their wives' ears, been so calmed and quieted, that they have not ever and ever again all desire for a "new deal." No one who has thought much about marriage can fail to be struck by the fact that it is one of its most beneficent and social effects. But then marriage only supplies a domestic audience, and a restricted one at that. An audience of husbands and fathers, who generally feel sympathy cannot make up for lack of publicity—the crying need of anybody with a grievance. Besides, bachelors—a growing, if not an influential class—have not even this meager resource, which cases are not infrequent where wives fail to do their duty, and while keeping themselves within the law, make it very unpleasant for husbands who undertake to entertain them with a tea-table account of their wrongs, or of the crimes which they would take to put down "monopoly." Wives have even been known to fight fatigue and yawn on such occasions, and in the slang of the day suggested that they are entitled to "a rest," instead of listening with respectful sympathy, as they ought.—New York Evening Post.

The Melancholy Third Sex.

The parathecuria of a pretty woman's toilet-table, and her many visits to her mirror, are subjects of ridicule among the strong-minded of her sex. Men laugh at them as sensible signs of a not unbecoming vanity. Those who look a little deeper into the life of that butterfly of our civilization, the woman with charms, will perceive that these things are a mere matter of business to her. Every morning when she rises she looks to see if she wakes as fresh as ever; she she dresses she observes herself with anxiety as to whether there is any giving way in her appearance. If there is any, without doubt or hesitation it must be repaired. And, if nature is not strong enough to mend the breach, then art must come to the rescue; and with good reason, for the pretty woman knows better than any one else the intrinsic value of her appearance. Without it she would go under; at the mere thought of losing it she feels like a drowning person. And why? Because, as everyone knows, consciously or unconsciously, society consists of men, women and a third class—those ordinary people who have no claim to any part either in distinction, and who do not seem to have much use in this world. This last variety of the human species is generally composed of females. A man is a man, however grizzled and world-worn he may be; he is almost always capable of rising to an occasion; he will find industry in the sphere of a pretty woman though he be a grandpapa; and if he be a man, and has pats on her pretty manners for him. But a woman, unless she has some attraction, some claim to appreciation, some thing at her own, is partly a woman. She may be a new person, belonging to a set of new people; she may be distinguished by rank or talent, or gifts of conversation, but she is of the third sex. Men do not stent for her or make books of the—unless for her. Nobody, but they eyes are helplessly attracted to her, or that their foot walk toward her of their own accord. She must be feminine, marriageable, and endowed with all the modest and winning attributes of her sex; but, if she has no appearance and no charm, she is out of the running. There is something engrossing, voluptuous, beautiful in the mere word "woman" when it is used to describe one who is of the cream of her kind. It needs no adjective. The favorite words of the day—"charming," "pretty"—are inadequate. When a woman throws his life, his fortune, his reputation away, and it is whispered that it was "all for a woman," no adjective is needed. She may have been no one—a mere nobody; yet she must have possessed that power which makes a Queen out of a nobody, and converts every chair she may choose to seat herself upon into a throne. She must have had attraction.

We can wonder, realizing the difference in life to a woman with appearance and a woman without it, that she will use every trick at her command to keep those charms which God has given her? Having known the brilliant life, the battlefly, to become a mere working bee in the garden would be to her insupportable. Instead of taking life in both hands and enjoying it to the full, it would all slip past her.—London World.

The Prices of Trotters.

Each blue-grass breeder of prominence has his regularly printed catalogue of stock, revised yearly, generally with a woodcut of his best stallion on the cover. Some, as Gen. Withers, insert the selling prices, from which "no deviation is sanctioned. In looking over such a catalogue, from $50 up to $2,000 is found to be demanded for the younger animals, with proportionately more for older ones that could be at once made useful. But when a horse has really entered the ranks of the great "flyers," there is hardly any limit to his value. One with a record of 2:30 may be considered in a general way worth $1,000. From 2:30 down to 2:25, $1,000 may be added for each successive second. When we come into the twenties and near the head of the record, jugging with gold and diamonds is a common occupation in comparison. Mr. Bonner is said to have paid $25,000 for Dexter, and $56,000 for Maud S., but this last was before she had made her great time; now that she has made it, you are told confidentially that a person stands ready to draw his check will only for $75,000 whenever he can get a horse that will lead her, as it gives him the distinction of having the fastest trotter in the world. This, he does it pays? Well, it pays first in the notoriety it gives, it pays next in the opportunity to take pinsons and shake affected by the great system of racing epidemic, and should even these gains fail, men who withdraw from racing, and dabble in breeding in private life, find it pays in a pleasure and amusement which this kind of recreation, extra-urant as it is, which their might not be able to procure so well from the expensive world of sport in any other direction.—W. H. Bishop, in Harper's Magazine.

GREAT BRITAIN is the only country in Europe which has no forestry schools. On the continent there are numerous excellent and well-endowed schools of that character, where everything that is known about it is taught by accomplished teachers.

Heavy Life Insurance.

Not very long ago the British life insurance companies were called upon within the short space of time to pay the enormous sum of $6,250,000 on policies on the lives of three heavily-insured noblemen—viz.: the Duke of Newcastle, the Marquis of Anglesey, and the Earl of Fife; and shortly afterward the same companies paid $1,250,000 insurance on the lives of two noblemen—making an aggregate sum of $7,500,000 insurance paid on five lives. About fifteen years ago the heirs of Sir Robert Clifton received from the insurance companies dues of great Britain $1,250,000, the being the amount of insurance which he carried. Don Pedro II, the Emperor of Brazil, carries a large life insurance in foreign companies. Napoleon III had no insurance at $680,000 on his life, and this was the chief reliance of the Empress Eugenie after his death. One English Earl has his life insured for $1,000,000, partly in American companies.

The largest life insurance written for any American Prince is that of W. K. Anderson, "the oil Prince," of Titusville, Pa., who is insured for for $400,000. The late James Park, Jr., of Pittsburgh, had his life insured for $350,000. Among Americans insured for $300,000 or more are Hamilton Disston, of Philadelphia; John Rowe, of St. Louis; W. H. Laugher, of Gallipolis, Ohio, and J. R. Shelton, of Philadelphia. Other large insurers are Pierre Lorillard, of New York, $250,000; P. W. Dixon, New York, $250,000; Cyrus W. Field, New York, $240,000; Frank Jordan, Portsmouth, Ill., $200,000; Amos Whitely, Springfield, Ohio, $200,000; E. F. Shattuck, Boston, $200,000; E. R. Roberts, New York, $200,000; E. F. Ally, Milwaukee, $170,000; John Gibb, New York, $170,000; Cherbis Pratt, New York, $165,000; H. B. Hyde, New York, $165,000; J. H. Mason, New York, $151,000; E. D. G. McKay, New York, $143,000, and W. P. Clyde, New York, $143,000; J. H. Cornell, W. H. Belknap and John Sinclair, of New York, $125,000; Jay Gould, $125,000 each; De Witt C. Wheeler insured for $300,000; James Hatch, $75,000; William Fullerton, $75,000; H. B. Claflin, $75,000.—New York Sun.

Bombarding a Scarecrow.

They were two tramps, and they were crossing a snrinfield in Flatbush in search of watercresses. The farmer's scarecrow had fallen up against the fence.

They armed themselves with dessicated tomatoes and began pelting the figure. Then they began to make bets of $1,000,000 as to who could plant it in the back or knock the hat off.

As the sport grew exciting they approached nearer and nearer, and were soon firing sponge pumpkins at the nondescript.

"See where that last tomato fetched him in the head?" said one. "Bet you can't come within a mile of that shot?"

"Bet you $1,000."

"I'll do better than that. Bet I hit the big stick of candy in the window."

"Done."

And then to get the bulge on each other they both started on a dead run towards the object. To make assurance double sure, they ran to within a couple of feet of it and then halted to take aim.

And then as one went over the fence and the other landed in a near by ditch, the scarecrow picked up a lion and, as it started in on another row, it recited the following paragraph:

"I've been layin' 'cross fences for some time. I used to sumin' an' leaned over the fence ter give you a chance at that watermelon patch. Ther' next time you come around this lot, drop in an' take a bite—we the ball-drop is."

And the tramps made believe they were dead, and didn't even think to laugh at the farmer's luck, which looked as if he had been with a tomato field.—New York World.

Appropriate Inscription.

A Massachusetts book agent, who was wearing a small circus piece of court plaster on his face, removed it while shaving one morning under the toilet was complete. Contrary to his usual experience as he went about his business during the rest of the day, he was everywhere received with smiles, which grew broader and broader, until at last somebody laughed in his face. Led by this to look in the glass, he was somewhat taken back to discover that, instead of the court plaster, he had affixed to his face a little round printed label, which had fallen from the back of a new mantle clock purchased the day before, and which bore the appropriate inscription, "Warranted solid brass."

A Knowing Child.

A girl of 4 years, when she said she didn't remember much about her birth, said that she was born in heaven, with the "man of sorrows" in the golden streets, and didn't walk very well because she was so little, and only shows the best memory on record, but evidence of her heavenly origin in her elucidation of the subject of forgiveness. She had been punished by her mother, and confided her troubles to her father when he came home, who told her that God is not pleased with naughty little girls. "But," she argued, "he likes little girls who will forgive, don't he? And I am truly to forgive mamma."—Editor's Drawer, in Harper's.

EXPERIMENTS have been made near Cuxhaven with a view of making ravens take the place of carrier pigeons. The ravens have the advantage over the pigeons of being less liable to attacks of birds of prey. Some ravens covered a distance of forty miles, but the London Field thinks it very improbable that they could ever be trained to carry messengers.

A PITTSBURGH jury gave a verdict against a railroad company for the amount of money stolen from a passenger in a sleeping car. "Since Lord Mansfield "the Judge charged, "sold a shaved for $2, in addition to the regular rates of passage, offering the facilities of sleepers as an inducement to pay the extra money, it based itself the contract by prince while they were asleep, and for the time being helpless."

A JACKSONVILLE merchant has just shipped North 200 boxes of lemons grown in Florida. They are said to be as fine lemons as can be grown anywhere, their color being perfect, while they are thoroughly flavored, and as juicy as the fine Messinas. Mr. Bean, the shipper of the lot, says the fruit grown in Orange and Lake counties in Florida are equal to any imported. It is very much larger. In one custom the foreigners constitute 34, and in another 37½ per cent. of the entire population. A slight increase in the foreign immigration, and the native emigration will place the foreign residents in the majority, a fact that probably would have no parallel in any other country, and might lead at times to serious difficulties. The Germans contribute the largest proportion of immigrants. They number 95,262. There are 54,200 Frenchmen and Italians, and 42,780 Austrians.

THERE are few towns in which beasts or grasshoppers do not make their appearance in the southern part of Russia. One first observes in the horizon a black cloud agitated by a peculiar internal movement. Then it appears directly above you, and the ruin of the large and heavy insects is so violent that the best thing you can do is to run to your hosts. The peasants believe that those pest are sent by God as the messengers of his wrath, and they are, therefore, too much inclined to consider the destruction of the crops they believe to be the justice of God unavoiv. In some districts they simply unite in prayer, and the images of saints are placed in the paths of the insects, just as was done recently in St. Petersburg, when the holy statues were placed in front of the great conflagration. But this year the affliction is so terrible that the peasantry have taken reasonable measures to check it. Men, women and children are busy killing the pests. The insects are crushed, burned, trodden upon systematically by trained horses, and great ditches are dug in which the enemy is hemmed in.

An Old Inventor.

Capt. John Ericsson, who, by building the monitor, revolutionized naval architecture, has passed his 80th year, yet he is young, physically and mentally. He gives twelve hours a day to hard work, and that, too, of the most wearing kind, invention. His vigor and health prove that the hardest sort of mental labor is not injurious, provided the worker lives temperately and takes sufficient physical exercise.

Capt. Ericsson—he was formerly an officer in the Swedish army, hence his title—rises at 4 o'clock, winter and summer, takes a cold bath, and then performs gymnastic exercises for two hours. At 9 he eats a hearty breakfast of poached eggs and coarse, brown bread. After breakfast he works until half-past 4 o'clock, when he eats a substantial dinner of vegetables.

He goes from the dinner table to the drawing-board, where he works till 10 o'clock, when he retires, smokes and goes to bed at midnight. The moment his head touches the pillow he falls into a sound sleep. He does not eat between the two meals, drinks nothing but weak tea, milk, and ice-water, and neither smokes nor chews tobacco.

Capt. Ericsson, though an octogenarian, is now engaged in perfecting his solar engine, which is an attempt to use the sun's rays as a direct and cheap motor. If he succeeds, he will give a great boon to the tropics.—Youths' Companion.

The furniture of the sitting-room consists chiefly of a bed and a barrel of home-made syrup.

THE WATERS OF TRUTH ARE RISING.

Further Confirmation of the Truth of Dorsey's Disclosures.

(From the New York Sun.)

Mr. E. N. Hill, a well-known attorney-at-law, of Washington, now in New York, who is and has been a warm friend of Senator Dorsey, was known to be in possession of many of the inside facts respecting the remarkable carouse of 1880, and also respecting Garfield's relations with Dorsey. Mr. Hill was also a warm friend of Garfield's, and in the winter of 1881 visited Mentor by invitation, spending a number of hours with Gen. Garfield. Until recently Mr. Hill has been no more disposed to speak of what he knew than have others who knew much, but he has now consented to say some things which are of interest.

"You have read the recent revelations of Dorsey, Mr. Hill; what is your opinion of their accuracy?" asked the writer.

"So far as they have gone they are accurate, but he has not yet told one-quarter of what he knows."

"In that he speaks of having been offered a Cabinet place; does that statement come within your own knowledge?"

"Yes, sir; during my conversation with Gen. Garfield I said to him: 'I suppose Senator Dorsey will be mentioned for a Cabinet?' To my surprise, he said, 'No: I have offered him a place, and he says he will not accept it.'"

"Did Gen. Garfield indicate what it was?"

"Oh, yes. He said he had offered Dorsey the Secretaryship of the Interior."

"Did Gen. Garfield mention any reason why Dorsey declined?"

"Yes. He said he was extremely sorry that Dorsey would not accept, but that Dorsey had said that his private business required his attention, and he could not therefore accept."

"Do you know of anyone else to whom Garfield said that he had offered Dorsey a place?"

"Yes. Two or three other gentlemen have told me that Garfield had told them he had asked Dorsey to go into the Cabinet. One of these gentlemen is a very prominent public man."

"Did Garfield ever repeat to you that he had made this offer?"

"Oh, yes; in Washington, at his house. I remember very distinctly that I called with some friends, and just as I was leaving he drew me aside and said: 'I want you to come back at 4 p. m.' I went back, and in the course of conversation about other matters he again repeated that he had offered Dorsey the Interior portfolio, and that Dorsey persisted in declining."

"Did you ever see any written evidence to prove the truth of what Garfield said to you?"

"Yes; I have seen a letter and read it, in which Dorsey formally offered him a place in the Cabinet."

"Was it a long letter?"

"No; it covered about a page of Garfield's scattering handwriting."

"Do you remember the terms of that letter?"

"No, not the precise phraseology. I could reproduce it substantially if I were not to do so, as I have no doubt the letter still some day see the light. The offer was formally made."

"Did you see Dorsey's reply to it?"

"No. I saw the substance of the reply. Dorsey did not have a copy of his declination with him, but repeated the substance of it from memory, which was then written out."

"Do you think that declination must be in the hands of Garfield's literary executors?"

"Yes, of course."

"Have you seen the statement that Garfield offered Dorsey this place to please him, expecting that Dorsey would decline it?"

"Yes, I have seen that."

"What do you think about that?"

"I think it very good proof that Amasias and Sapphira left descendants either in flesh or spirit. I believe Garfield offered Dorsey and been made to Mr. Dorsey he would have resented it by a blow."

"Do you know whether Garfield repeated his request to Dorsey to go into the Cabinet?"

"Not of my knowledge. Mr. Dorsey told me that after he had declined Garfield urged him to go home and reconsider the matter, because he wanted him in the Cabinet."

"Did you ever hear that Garfield personally offered Dorsey a Cabinet place?"

"Yes. That was the time he was first offered it. That was at Mentor, soon after the election. There is an amusing story to tell, if I have understood, Dorsey and Dorsey were at Mentor. About 9 o'clock one evening, Garfield wanted to have a chat with Dorsey, so he, to get rid of Jewell, offered to take him to the cars. After Jewell retired, Garfield and Dorsey went out under an apple tree, and, with a lump of good cheer to eat and drink, sat there till 2 o'clock in the morning. At that time Garfield told Dorsey that he was going to make him a formal offer to enter the Cabinet, and that he would take any place except the Treasury or the State Department, and, of course, he was delivered from the Department of Justice, as he (Dorsey) was no lawyer. Dorsey at that time told Garfield that if he looked all his places into one he wouldn't take it."

"Did you speak of believing that Garfield's letter offering Dorsey a Cabinet place would sooner or later see the light. Why do you think so?"

"Because I have good reasons. The letter has not been printed. It is in the custody of some of Dorsey's strongest friends, who have thought that the time has not yet come for making it public."

"Mr. Hill, you know that Dorsey has been called a liar for saying that he was offered a Cabinet place?"

"He is no liar," replied Mr. Hill indignantly. "I am willing to make afficdavit that I saw the letter, and," he suddenly added, "I'll do so now, if you wish."

City and County of New York, ss:

E. N. Hill, of Washington, D. C., being duly sworn, deposes and says that the foregoing interview is a true account of a portion of his Cabinet by President Garfield to Stephen W. Dorsey, to substantially true, and the statement that I saw a letter offering the place is absolutely true. E. N. HILL.

The Real Platform.

From time to time the leaders of the Republican party hold conventions at which they formulate certain moral axioms and platitudes which they call the platform of the party.

The real platform of the party, however, is expressed in private and personal letters exchanged between these leaders after the nomination of the convention is over. When that platform is appears more clearly from the abstract we publish elsewhere of the private correspondence of the party in 1880. This, the real platform, may be written in one line: We want money.

That is the real Republican platform. On this point the harmony and unity are universal.

Blaine writes to Dorsey that in failing to send money to Maine he is "imperiling the whole campaign."

Allison writes to Jewell: "Money must be had and must be sent to Indiana."

Stewart Woodford writes to Jewell from West Virginia: "With $25,000 Stangle and Atkinson can make an effective campaign.

John F. Lewis, Mahone's lieutenant, writes: "The expenditure of $50,000 will insure the electoral vote of Virginia for Garfield and Arthur. 'Help us, Cassius, or we sink.'"

Mr. Henderson, of Iowa, write to Dorsey: "Put money in the purse."

Richard Smith, of the Cincinnati Gazette, who has been called the Good Angel of the Republican party, and whom Richard Smith, was alive to the need of money. He writes: "There should be $20,000 judiciously placed in each of these States, Ohio and Indiana, within the next three days."

Thurlow Weed, sometimes known as Calico Charlie, says that he has given all the question some thought and plans: "we ought to have $40,000—$40,000 of it for Cleveland."

The Massachusetts reformers, through John M. Forbes, sent money to West Virginia and Indiana.

John C. New called about for money and gave thanks when it came. Everybody wanted money.

What did they want it for?

The Republican party claims to have saved the nation, to have paid off the gold, settled the finances and pensioned the soldiers. It has held power for twenty old years. It has taken credit to itself for the prosperity of the country; has laid all the burdens of taxation of protected interests, of the army of pensioners and of all privileged classes.

Yet when a national election came around, when a great national battle was to be fought, the grand old party could but only one battlecry. Danger of defeat changed all its boasting into abject terror, and its platform shrunk to a single line:

Resolved, That we must have money.

—New York World.

Political Notes.

"OLD JOE MEDILL, on the Chicago gossiping delight in calling the editor of the Chicago Tribune, was at the New York Republican State Convention last week. He pronounced it "the tamest convention he ever saw." Whenever you see a "tame" convention in New York of either party it means defeat. Mark it.

IT is true that the Times is not in favor of "high duties on foreign manufactures" as a means of "protection to American industry." A pretty careful study of the question has led it to the conclusion that these high duties are unnecessary and injurious. This will be the view of the Republican party before many years.—New York Times.

Ex-Postmaster and Custom House officer in the land begins to protestant that his section of the country is calling aloud for the nomination of President Arthur. But President Arthur has been there and knows how it is himself. He need to "shoup it for the boys" in just that style and knows just what it is worth. This is the advantage of having been "used" before going into the White House. The Postmasters and Collectors are always caught not to be mistaken for the voice of the people "in my section."—Detroit Free Press.

HENRY L. PURNEY declined to accept the Republican nomination for Governor of Massachusetts. On him the party had cast its eyes after Governor Butler. He would have been defeated in all probability in any event, but it is natural to be a very respectable, clever gentleman, representing Boston blue blood and the traditional swallow-tailed element. He would have staggered under the Tewksbury load. It is a bad name and weighs a good many thousand pounds. Even puritan results at its direction and Plymouth Rock grows restless. Old Ben has been a terror to the hypocrites of Massachusetts. Republicanism and its leaven of Democracy is helping him in this good work. There is progress even for Massachusetts.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

AGONIES OF CRUCIFIXION.

What Caused the Death of Those Nailed to the Cross.

All civilized communities demand that a life to be sacrificed shall be sacrificed swiftly and without needless pain. True, various nations have different opinions as to how this may best be accomplished, but the American and English Governments have decided that hanging is the most merciful. As compared with the Spanish instrument of death—the garrote—it is questionable whether or not hanging is the most merciful. A hanging executioner may, in either case, cause unnecessary fortures. With these subjects, however, this paper has nothing to do. The writer simply desires to set forth the various modes of crucifixion as adopted by the ancients, and to show what terrible sufferings the wretched malefactor had to endure before death came to his relief. Hours and days of unmitigated torture; a thing which was unpardonable; a prolonged suffocation; a horrible gasping for breath, intermitted only for a moment's respite; the bites of the vultures of the air and the stings and harrassings of insects; the burning of the ray of the noonday sun, and the cold chamms dews at midnight—tell in a sad language, of that dies ire, from a repetition of which the present city is happily delivered. In comparison, our present capital punishments are most merciful, and the vindication of justice most humane.

The most primitive form seems to have been an upright tree, to which the victim was either bound or nailed. In Ezra vi, 11, it is ordered that "whosoever shall alter his word, let timber be pulled down from his house, and, being set up, let him hang thereon, and let his house be made a dunghill for this." Titus had a tame to make a lengthened beam when crucifying 500 Jews a day for months. He simply drove a pole into the ground, to which the victim nailed, and he was left to die.

Slaves were generally punished by having a "furca" (fork) slipped over their necks, to which their arms were tied, and this was hoisted to the top of a pole, and secured there by a rope fitting into a groove. This device evidently suggested the more recent cross, to save time, and as being more artistic.

It was usual to nail the hands, but to bind the feet. It is erroneous to suppose that a single spike secured both feet to the cross, one foot in front of the other. A spike was driven through each foot, one upon the other, and fixed on the cross just beneath the plantar surface of the foot. Additional security was sometimes practiced by the victim being seated on a spike or "horn" (Justin Martyr), though at times a piece of wood was so placed that he might rest on it.

The nails, aided by intense heat, soon produced gangrene. Although the culprit writhed in agony for some time, it is doubtful whether any long-continued activity of the body could be maintained. The weight of the limbs, gravitating downward, produced intense congestion. The circulation was impeded, the viscera pressing on the veins. The lungs could not be emptied. Insects got into the nostrils, ears and wounds. At nightfall the bones of the legs of those still living were broken, ostensibly to hasten death, but really, to gratify the spectators, who were betting upon it.

Death generally resulted from gangrene of wounds, displacement of viscera, congestion of blood through the valves of the heart, pericarditis and paralysis of heart and lungs. In many cases death was accelerated by hunger and thirst, the vicissitudes of heat and cold, or the attacks of ravenous birds and beasts, and in others designedly accelerated by burning, stoning, suffocation, breaking the bones or piercing the vital organs. (Adam Clarke, "Commentary on Matthew," chap. xxvii, v. 35).

According to Origen, Timotheus and Maura, a married pair who suffered about the year 286, under Diocletian, remained for nine days and nights on the cross, exhorting each other, and cheered on the tenth day. By order of the Emperor Maximian, in the year 297, seven Christians at Samosata were subjected to long and various tortures, three of them were taken down from the cross while yet alive, and the Emperor, hearing of this, ordered huge nails to be driven into their heads.

When the End of Polygamy Comes.

In the "Revelation on Celestial Marriage, given to Joseph Smith, Nauvoo, July 12, 1843," it is written: "And again, verily, verily, I say unto you, if any man have a wife who holds the key of this power, and he looks unto her the law of my priesthood, then shall she believe and administer unto him, or she shall be destroyed, saith the Lord your God, for I will destroy her." This constantly-repeated sentence is the iron out of which many marriage rings are made in Utah; they bind the Mormon, but she does not pretend to love her fetter. In the breast of every woman in that Territory there is an enemy or a potential traitor to the system of polygamy, and when, as must sometime be the case, the struggle with polygamy "comes a recognized war for the delicate ence of woman, the end of the Desert dispensation will be swiftly—it is to be feared violently—reached. As Goethe wrote: "Ever the womanly leads us onward."—Mme. D. Conway, in San Francisco Chronicle.

THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN.

The October Election.

THE JOURNAL's announcement last week that Ohio had probably gone republican by a small majority, has not been sustained by later returns. Instead of the usual republican majority of forty to sixty thousand, it is democratic by twelve to fifteen thousand, a democratic gain of over fifty thousand. The total vote was but a few thousand less than the vote cast in the presidential election in 1880, and was about eighty thousand more than was ever before cast in an Ohio state election. The fact makes Hoadly's handsome majority significant in its relations to the presidential vote next year.

Iowa is still republican, but its plurality of nearly forty thousand is reduced to less than twenty. In the legislature the democrats have gained thirty representatives and twelve senators. Cook, dem., is elected to congress in the sixth district by one thousand majority.

Every inch of battle ground was contested, and whatever may have been the chief cause of the result, we cannot ignore the fact that the people are awake and appear to have decreed that "the republican party must go."

Notes and News.

The average cost of construction of the P. H. & N. W. (narrow gauge) railroad, as reported to the commissioner of railroads, is a little over $11,400 per mile, and of equipment is $1,700 per mile. Construction of G. R. & I., $36,000 per mile; equipment, $3,600 per mile. Earnings per train mile: P. H. & N. W., $1.00; G. R. & I., $1.40; expenses per train mile: P. H. & N. W., 49 cts.; G. R. & I., $1.00.

At Southbridge, Mass., last Friday, Gen. Butler declared himself favorable to the abolition of all federal internal taxation. He said the government needed to raise $400,000,000 every year for its support, and the custom house must collect that sum. Speaking as a manufacturer, he did not want any more protection than this afforded, and believed the Pennsylvania idea unconstitutional and undesirable. Whiskey was now taxed at the expense of its quality. He believed tobacco was a necessity. He was not in favor of competitive examinations for the civil service because he wanted soldiers' orphans and widows appointed to places when possible. He desired to appoint capable and honest friends.

The elections of November, now very near at hand, will be, like those of Ohio and Iowa, chiefly interesting as indices of the result in the great contest for next year. Connecticut, Mississippi, Nebraska, New York, Pennsylvania and Virginia choose a portion of their state officers and legislatures; Maryland, Massachusetts and New Jersey choose governors, the incumbents in all three being democratic. The chief interest lies in New York, whose verdict this fall will be accepted as a promise of her course in the great contest of 1884, in which her action will be decisive, and in Massachusetts, where the peculiar politics of Butler lead a bizarre appearance to the campaign. Unless the republicans carry New York they can derive little consolation from the November contest. To defeat Butler in Massachusetts and to carry Pennsylvania, Connecticut, Nebraska, or even New Jersey and Virginia, would be but meager compensation for the loss of New York and Ohio.—Evening News.

Republican commentators upon the Ohio election appear to be unanimously certain that their defeat was the best thing that could happen, and that it makes Ohio sure for the republican candidate next year. For, you see, says John Sherman, they have carried the legislature, and will have the responsibility of dealing with the liquor question, "and if they fail to meet the advancing state of public opinion in Ohio on that question, they will be defeated as we have been." It was the general impression that the republican defeat was due, very largely, to the attempt of that party to meet "the advancing state of public opinion" on the liquor question. That, at least, is what Halstead thinks, and was what Sherman said just full after the defeat of that year. If the democrats are only to be finally and hopelessly ruined by letting those win elections in this fashion, it may be necessary to let them carry the country next year in order to crush them once for all. We have no doubt they would be quite stupid enough to fall into this trap.—Evening News.

A Pair of Invalids.

YONKERS, N. Y., Oct. 11—I congratulate you on your brilliant triumph.
(Signed) S. J. TILDEN.

What thoughts must have crowded themselves upon the governor-elect of Ohio, as he tore open the familiar yellow envelope of the Western Union and read this message! No doubt between the lines of this brief telegram he read the history of a presidential canvass, but was his own name or the one signed above more prominent in that history? No doubt this telegram will be regarded as "significant," but every politician will place his own construction upon it, and no two of them will be alike. It is well known that Mr. Tilden has taken great interest in Judge Hoadly's canvass, and some go so far as to say that he will be the "guide, philosopher and friend" of the Ohio man on his way to the white house. This statement is somewhat confusing to people who have heard, on excellent authority, that Tilden will announce himself a candidate at the proper time, and the report, from an equally reliable source, that he will seek to secure the nomination and election of Gov. Cleveland. Amid the confusion of political predictions Mr. Tilden keeps his own counsel with great vigor. It is pretty evident that the country will know very little about what he is going to do until he does it. This much we may be certain of, however, that if he and the other sick man have formed an alliance they will make interesting music in the great political festival of '84, and if Mr. Tilden has absolutely and finally determined not to be a candidate, he will at least be around when the nomination is made.

The costly experiments in fancy horticulture, and the paying for the same, go on like clockwork while the doctor is away.

Doing His a Favor.

The occupant of an office on Larned street desired to drop 5,000 circulars to as many residents of Detroit regarding a new household patent, and he had just completed the weary work of directing the envelopes, when in came a telegram calling him out of the city for a day or two. He ran into a law office and left his key and explained that he was sorry he didn't have time to mail his circulars before going. When he had departed the lawyer said to his office boy:

"My son, what is life worth without the good opinion of our fellow-men?"

"Nothing, sir."

"Of course not. This afternoon you go over and stamp all his circulars and get them into the postoffice. It will be a favor and a surprise to him."

At 3 o'clock in the afternoon the boy said he had used up all the stamps, and he was directed to mail the circulars and wait for his reward. It came in a manner to astonish him. When the circular man returned he rushed into the law office white with rage, drove the boy into a corner, and shrieked out at the top of his voice:

"You infernal idiot! You licked 3 cents on each circular.—Detroit Free Press.

The promises of the projectors of the new Detroit Evening Journal to make a paper abreast of the times are fulfilled, for each number is an improvement on its predecessor.

A book and ladder outfit and some leather buckets would be a good investment. A small building torn down, and a few pails of water in the right place at the right time will often save very much property.

According to resolution passed at the recent session of the board of supervisors, cattle cannot now run at large in any part of this county, unless the citizens vote at an annual township meeting to permit them to so run, or have already done so at some previous township meeting.

The subject for the morning service at the M. E. church next Sunday will be "Wonderful Motives." The evening service will be directed more particularly to young men, and the subject announced, "Shadowladder," is doubtless an indication that the instruction will lead young men to rise in the world step by step, as by climbing a ladder.

The following prospective changes in mail service are announced. Route 24,414, Boyne Falls to Charlevoix. From November 1, 1883, increase service to 12 trips per week between Boyne Falls and Boyne, 6 miles, and to 6 trips per week between Boyne and Charlevoix, 16 miles. Route 24,415, Boyne to Unidue. From November 1, 1883, increase service to two trips per week.

That competition increases merit was never more fully illustrated than in the case of the Detroit Evening News. Since the Evening Journal was established the News has cut down its display heads, reduced the size of other heads, and made everything as compact as possible, typographically, thus adding to its quantity of reading matter, and without increasing its price. As its muse indicates, it is in all respects a newspaper.

Mr. Iddings' lecture at the opera house Sunday evening was well attended. He discussed the necessity of live public sentiment to sustain any law enacted, without which laws are of no use; reviewed the history of legislation pertaining to the liquor question; and called attention to the necessity of distinguishing between the moral and legal rights of liquor sellers, and educating the people to let the stuff alone.

The historical society met at the parlors of Mrs. John Nicholls on Tuesday evening and enjoyed another of these meetings for which this society is famous. The executive committee have not yet announced a line of historical study but served up a program consisting of readings, recitations, and music. Major Green not for variety, nor spice, but for instruction, read from the statutes of Michigan the chapter relating to the organization of historical societies. Miss Potter recited in a fine manner "Whistling Jim." Mr. Kane read a piece describing the death of Beaudel Arnold, and Mr. Parmelee closed the program with an illustrated lecture on Columbus and his great discovery which brought down the house. The Misses Bennett and Potter rendered two vocal duets in fine style and Mr. Washburn favored the meeting with a song and guitar accompaniment. The subject of incorporating the society was discussed but action was deferred for two weeks. The interest and attendance was good. The society meets next Tuesday evening with Mrs. O. D. Wood.

Another Fire.

About two o'clock last Thursday afternoon fire was discovered in the barn of Geo. Nowland, on Dixon street. An alarm was given, and the department arrived in time to save the adjoining property. There is no doubt but they could have saved the entire lower story and a portion of the baled hay if there had been sufficient good hose to reach. Dr. Lewis' new barn across the alley, was saved without being blistered. Mr. Lewis lost about 40 tons of baled hay which was stored in the barn that burned. The fire is supposed to have been caused by the careless play of two small boys who ventured in the barn when the fire was discovered.

This fire demonstrates beyond a doubt that it is necessary to have some more good hose seats, or the engine will be practically useless. The boys worked the brakes well, but a large portion of the water was lost by leakage before it reached the fire.

In this connection it has been suggested that the engine was a bad investment, as Charlevoix never had a fire until she invested in fire apparatus.

POLLY.

BY M. C. FARLEY.

Polly was my bosom friend. Together we stood behind the long counters of Saffron, Cheeton & Co., and measured off dry goods to the various customers who patronized that celebrated firm. Together we spent our annual two-weeks' vacation fishing and hunting in the wilds of Wisconsin; and, being almost "one and inseparable," we would both have made love to the same girl had for the same cause we almost unpremeditated and uncomparable hatred for the other sex, being, to this isolated exception, the exact opposite to Polly, who doted on girls, and was noted for his gallantry. Indeed, it was his extreme susceptibility to the wiles of the fair sex that had enabled him with his solemnity, for Polly, mind you, wasn't his real name at all, no more than it was mine. He had been duly christened Paul, after the apostle; and his paternal grandfather added two or three surnames to mine, but, nevertheless, when he took up his place behind the counter in the store, and then and there began to lavish his smiles with reckless profusion upon the young ladies, we soon shortened his name down to "Polly"—and so Polly he was called.

It's of no use to say how he soon monopolized all the trade from baby customers. There he was, always attentive, always polite, his cheeks as pink as a girl's, and his hands as white as the whitest. It seemed as if a perennial smile hovered round his lips, which were parted just enough to show his pretty teeth, and you could even smell the faint-sweet perfume of heliotrope, that he carried his handkerchief with, as he walked along behind the counter.

But there was no end to his flirtations. He had more strings to his bow than I could "take a stick at" in a week, as the saying is.

I gave him some good, fatherly advice several times, but he only shook back his curly brown locks, and said he "guessed he could stand it a while yet."

But I was older than Polly, and I knew that the first thing he would do some time would be to get entangled in a foolish engagement of some sort—and, sure enough, his time actually came, and sooner than I had expected.

But just then I was suddenly called home by the serious illness of a sister, and, in watching at her bedside, and occupied for some weeks after her death in settling up her business affairs, all lesser matters were passed over, until one morning I was surprised at getting a telegram from Polly announcing his marriage.

A letter came a day or so after, in which Polly explained the reason of his rather hasty action.

"You see, Old Pap," writes he—Polly always called me Pap, though my name is really Peter, "I was obliged to marry, Annie, just when I did, or else another fellow would. So I rushed in ahead, and came off with the quick. The fact is, that old Brown—he's of years old if a day, and he can count 1,000 for every year of his age—had laid his heart, hand and pocket-book, and more especially the pocket-book, at Annie's feet. And Annie—as I mentioned Brown's offer, you see. So I fixed matters at all with the old folks, and the very dence was to pay all around.

"There was only one thing we could do under the circumstances, for Annie wasn't of age—so we did it. She met me one evening in the corner of the street, and I took her to a longy out of the city a piece, and we went down to Hickory Grove—my old dad's place, you know. The clergyman knew me, and he married us in double time, though he did look Annie sort of queerly, and he asked her now and one was. She told him she 'was going on 1,' which was true, you know, for she had the number in her shoes. So if he wasn't going on 1," what was she going on? Anything to beat the old Gobble. But you should see Brown—he's tearing mad, and Annie's pa actually made a face at me when I met him to day.

We are staying at Hickory Grove now. It's a fine old place if it does be one by my father, and I want you to pack your trunk and come right away. We have a lot time going around. The woods are full of eggs. So don't stop to write, but come down.

Yours in haste,

PAP.

I was tired and sick, being worn down with watching and care, and, as I was on the point of returning to the city anyway, I determined to run down first to Hickory Grove and make my friend a short visit. As visions of long strawn woods rose up before my mental vision, I half-packed the big Saratoga that usually accompanied my wanderings. But, reflecting that the newly-married pair was in the first flush of their honeymoon, I settled down to a modest grip, that at best would hold only a change of linen. When the train rushed into the little station at R——, who should I see but Polly, looking as fresh as a daisy, the same old smile parting his cherry lips, and the same white hands waving welcome at me through the car-window.

"And so you're weird and gone and—

"Yes; to be sure," broke in Polly, squeezing my hand affectionately, "Awfully glad to see you; where's your baggage?"

"Oh" said I, feeling a little ashamed now of the diminutive grip-sack that held my belongings, "I didn't fetch anything much. I did not want to make a certain young married pair feel that while 'two is a company, three makes a crowd.'"

"Well, I'll be jumped up!" says Polly shortly, biting off the end of a cigar.

"I'll be jumped up" is a favorite expression of his, when he feels put out of humor the least bit.

"Come along to the house, Old Pap, and I'll let Annie scold you," said he presently, in his usual cheerful manner.

Well, we strolled along the wide, graveled walk, up to the big, old-fashioned house, where Mr. Polly stood on the veranda to welcome us. She was very pretty. I had to admit that at once, and her manners were everything that could be desired.

"We will be everything we can to make you happy, Mr. Peter," said she. "I'm sure we can find something to amuse you with, so that you won't miss that dirty old city you seem so fond of."

From that very instant my friend's wife began to rise in my esteem as being far above the generality of her bretheral sex. I quickly discovered that Polly and his wife, with the exception of the cook, were the only persons about the place, his parents having gone East on a visit, and I settled down in an easy-sweeper cigar with the firm conviction that in the morning I would telegraph for my trunk. The short October afternoon was drawing to a close, and, engaged in conversation, the early twilight was settling over the landscape, when Mrs. Polly suddenly started up and exclaimed:

"Oh, Polly, you are forgetting your engagement this evening. You promised your father to attend to his affairs as well as if he were here himself, you know. And those cows—"

I glanced at my friend. A strange, uncomfortable look was on his pink and white face.

"Oh, yes, Annie," says he, presently, "don't mind about them; I'll see they are fetched home all right, pretty soon."

"You see," said he, turning to me with a nervous smile, "before father went away, he purchased a couple of Jerseys and they are to be brought here this evening."

"I have already named one of them," said Annie, "after the Jersey Lilly, and we call her Langtry."

"I suppose, Old Pap, says Polly to me, carefully avoiding my gaze, "that you will excuse me a little while; I'll not be long away, and Annie as a rule is tal hand to entertain company." And off she went. Time passed. Polly did not return so soon as expected, and the early moon was shining brightly when his wife, who was beginning to manifest some anxiety over his prolonged absence, expired two dusky objects plunging and careening down the moonlit road.

Now, ever since Polly had departed on his mission, I had been puzzling my brain over what seemed a mystery for the years before, when my friend was a small boy. He had been tossed by an angry bull, and nearly killed. Since then, he had an unconquerable fear of anything from a bull down to a calf. I had known him shy around corners, cut across lots, and even hide behind stone walls in his terror of meeting one of the bovine species. And, now, his seemingly cheerful alacrity, in actually going to drive home two of them, was something I could not solve. Perhaps, and, I blushed with laughter at the thought occurred to me, perhaps, my friend, who was sensitive over his weakness, did not like to have his wife know that he was such a coward. Ashamed to acknowledge to her his childish fear of cows, he had assumed a readiness in going to fetch home the Jerseys that he was far from feeling.

Annie looked inquiringly at me as I laughed. "You must think some amusing thoughts," she said.

The dark objects that were galloping toward us proved to be my friend and his purchase, and, as they went tearing wildly past us, it was hard for a disinterested person to tell which was the most badly frightened—my friend or the cow.

"Open that big gate in the corner," yelled Polly, as they flew along. Before I could prevent her, Annie dropped the hook she had been reading from and with a blood-curdling scream made a dash for the gate.

"Pap the Jersey Lilly" paid no attention to the gate, or Annie, either, but sailed over the top of the fence in the style, head up and tail flying. Then and there was enacted the wildest race the pale moon ever looked upon.

Annie went over the fence like a streak of calico lightning. And Polly recovered sufficiently to march as his wife picked herself up and wiped the dust from her mouth.

As the terrified cow fled past Polly, he caught at a rope that was attached to her horns and twisting it tightly about his wrists, howled out:

"Now, you high-falutin old limsy, I've got you at last. I'll teach you to come to my time—I will."

Nobody knew whose "time" Polly and his cow did their racing in—it certainly was not his. His legs flew this way, and that way, his cow looked like inverted saucers, and his coat streamed in the summer winds like banners of distress on a forsaken ship. Matters soon assumed a crisis. Too badly frightened to know what she was doing, the poor beast attempted to scale a picketed inclosure sacred to the fashioned lilacs. This was too much. Polly made a desperate resistance and the consequence was that Polly and the cow and the picketed inclosure all came down in a heap together.

Then there was some swearing done, and it was the very tallest kind of swearing at that. Annie, as a disinterested spectator of the whole affair, I can affirm that it was the cow that did it. A good deal shocked, Annie retired into the house, and, shutting the door, settled out to Polly through the key-hole, to come in and let the beast go away if she wanted him.

A groan was the only reply.

Somewhat alarmed, his wife peered anxiously out from the field of carnage. The cow had disappeared in the friendly shadow of a wooded field. Polly was limping slowly toward the house—a muddier and a viser man—and the cow was virtually at my feet.

My unfortunate friend presented a shocking appearance. His tight pantaloons were ripped in every seam; his century coat was split up the middle of the back, and in the tally hat, upon which he particularly prided himself, was lost entirely. Instead of his usual mortification stemmed down his begrimed features.

Unable to restrain myself, I screamed with laughter.

Poor Polly forgot his manners again and he muttered something that sounded like "Helen Blazes," as he caressed his bruised legs and estimated the damages.

"Madam," said he, wearifully, to his wife, "if this was the sort of amusement you meant when you promised this man Jerse—" angrily jerking his thumb in my direction—"to do all you could to make him enjoy himself, why, all I have got to say is that the performance has been a pronounced success. To guard against anything of the sort in the future I shall return to the city to-morrow. No more Jersey Lilly's for my medium." And poor, outrraged Polly kicked over a poultice pot that his wife was laying herself with.

As for me, I quietly picked up my grip-sack, thankful now that it was not the trunk I had intended sending, and made my way back to the station. At the dark of the evening, my visit to the country being thus unexpectedly terminated.

We meet often since they came back to town; we meet often, I say, but we never speak. Polly cannot find it in his heart to forgive me for being an innocent witness to his memorable defeat in fetching home a cow.—Chicago Ledger.

Cutaneous Perspiration.

The office of cutaneous perspiration is twofold—it regulates the temperature of the body by evaporation from the surface; the cooling effect of fanning is well known; the evaporation of the moisture of the skin. The aura violent efforts of the skin to reduce temperature are seen naturally in warm weather or artificially in the Russian or Turkish hebrew bath; when, as the body becomes more heated, the glands secrete more profusely. All know that if one sweating profusely gets a draught of air great cooling will result. It can be readily understood how, with this vast secreting surface exposed to the changes of the atmosphere, we can easily catch cold from this chilling the surface in a draught, or from exposure too thinly clad, and by a check of perspiration cause congestion of the internal organs. When animals are coughing they are covered with an impermeable coating, as by vanishing the surface, death always takes place, and the story is curious among physiologists that a child who was covered with gold leaf, in order to represent an angel in the ceremonies attending the coronation of Pope Leo X., died a few hours after the coating had been applied. The importance, therefore, of the proper care of the skin can hardly be overestimated, that these many pores through which this vast amount of fluid passes out of the system may not be clogged. Proper bathing and friction are all essential elements of a healthy skin, and a perfectly-active skin means a great deal toward a perfectly-active general system.—Manufacturer and Builder.

"Providin'."

A man at the Central Market was in need of a boy to assist him at his peanut stand, and in some way it became known to a colored man on Colleton street. One morning he put in an appearance, accompanied by his boy, a lad of 12, and applied for the place.

"Can your boy read and write? asked the man.

"His kin, sah."

"He be willing and industrious?"

"He am, dat."

"Can you guarantee his integrity?"

"I—I—dis is a little mixed, boss. Does you refer to his gittin' up airly?"

"I refer to his honesty. If I should leave him in charge here for several hours, would he abuse my confidence?"

"Well, sah," said the man as he walked around the stand to see how it closed up, "if you shuts down de lidd an' turn de key, an' leave dat boy on de cha' heah wid plenty of apples to eat, he will be de honestest nigger in de peanutest man in Detroit.—Free Press.

It was so natural for Dr. Watts to speak in rhyme, that even at the very time he wished to avoid it he could not. His father was disposed to the propensity, and threatened to whip him if he did not leave off making verses. "Pray father, do some pity take,
And I will no more verses make."

After marriage he discovered that most of the property was willed to the baby, so he had himself appointed guardian that he might handle the money. When he went to settle his guardianship account he hired a claim of $77 against the child's estate for a wet nurse. HE WAS NO SLOUCH,

But the Machinery Didn't Work When He Tried to Demonstrate the Fact.

(From the Pioneer Traveler.)

Bill Higgenson, a well-known character of the White Springs neighborhood, came to the city in company with several young ladies, to one of whom he was engaged to be married. Bill has always thirsted for notoriety. He wants to be known by the leading men in town, and to show the people of his community that, although born in obscurity and reared on the farm, he can address prominent men in a familiar way. While the young ladies were at the hotel Bill went into a wholesale store, and, approaching a man who sat in the office, said:

"Cap'n, you can be me a big favor if you will. I've got a lot of gals in town with me, and I want to show 'em that I am no slouch. I want 'em to go home an' say that Bill—that's me—come to town an' was known to the big bugs. Now, I want to make this agreement with you. I'll go away, an' putty soon I'll come around with the gals an' come in here, slap you on the shoulder an' say, 'old chap, how do you hold out?' Then you slap me, an' say, 'Why, Bill, I'm glad to see you.' Then I'll tell 'em I'll be blowed all over my country, an' will be setin' money and character to home bill you."

The gentleman said that he did not care to indulge in any such foolishness, and that the aspiring William might come in and slap him, when he would be enough with his part of the programme.

Bill, highly delighted with the arrangement, went to the hotel and told the gals that he wanted them to take a walk with him. As they walked along he informed Bill said:

"You promised to call me 'Jim,' an' that you ain't going to marry me slouch. I'll show you that your own Bill is a big feller in his town, an' he ain't no jerkin' with the best of 'em."

The girl laughed self-consciously, and believed that it was more to marry a man that "wasn't a stranger an' a slouch."

When they reached the store, Bill opened the door with the effect, whose man sat looking over accounts. He saw not the man with whom the arrangement had been made, but he did not recognize the difference. Advancing to the man, he said, in a pretty loud tone, and exclaimed:

"Hello, old chap, how are you holdin' out?"

The gentleman sprang to his feet and glared at William, but William, with embarrassment, punched him among the ribs and said:

"Hello, old chap, how are you?"

"Look out, here! What do you mean?"

"No fooling, old boy. Don't you remember the agreement?" he added in a confidential tone. "Its me; don't you recognize me? Don't you know me? Yes? and then, as he fancied he saw a look of recognition in the face of the gentleman among the trainerate rifle and exclaimed, "How are you holdin' out?"

The gentleman was now on his feet, his battle and knocked Bill down. The gentleman then walked away, and Bill, as soon as he was able to regain his feet, walked away. When he reached the hotel with the girls all bruised with ink, his betrothed ran to him, looked into the scale and said:

"Hello, old chap, how are you holdin' out?"

Collodion Mouse.

Three miles from Montgomery we came upon the low, ridge Moor of Collodion, and was fought the last battle connected with the war. It was one of the Confederacy against the forces of the Union, and, as I remember the history of which is too well known to need repetition. The battle took place on Bad Land, and the story is very interesting. Bad Land is a tract of land in the Black Belt of Alabama, and the Highland people were drawn up to the west of the present line of great cotton fields, to the west toward Collodion House, a large house in Prosper is dark and dreary—like a place that no human being inhabits. The castle of Dalreas comes as square mass above the rock northward to the east; the pine-clad cone of Dun Davnet closes the vista on the southward. A little to the north of the main road is a depression called the "Salad Hollow." Here, it is said, two small thatched houses called the "Salad Hollow." Western Cumberland's staff had placed several mounds where the dead lie are covered mounds where the dead lie are pumps, and are usually very poor. Local tradition asserts that before Waterloo, when passing near this, have suddenly found themselves in the smoke and hurly-burly of a battle, called the Hollow by the Celtic clans engaged; indeed, the place is called "Bad" because it was the limpet the scene of a great battle. Nor about what noise can tell, save that the sound is always a Laird of Colloden, consequence on a white horse, and a military cumbatants.—Anon.

A Congressman speaking one day, said, "Mr. Speaker, I have been in the wide far west, I have seen Indians, I have seen Mormons, I have seen all classes of physicians between the prairie and the Pacific, and I believe that it was once to marry a man that "wasn't a stranger an' a slouch."

ARMY OF THE POTOMAC.

Cured by The Chickahominy.

Under date of May 8, 1869, Gen. R. P. Tomlin, of Dover, N. H., writes of the following: "While on duty in the army of the Potomac in the swamps of the Chickahominy I contracted a complication of diseases that embittered my original trouble, paralysis on one side, and severe disease of the kidneys and bladder, and great animal weakness. For a long time I was under the treatment of the best physicians, and tried many of the accredited remedies, but received no permanent benefit. When I was in the Army hospitals in Boston I heard favorable accounts of the efficacy of Brown's Remedy for disease of the Kidneys and urinary organs, and, having decided to give it a trial, I procured some at Wingate's drug store, Dover, N. H., and have received great relief from one pint. The severe pains in my back are removed, and I am able to perform my ordinary duties. I can sit eight—which for so long a time I could not do—and the workings in the urinary organs has been relieved, and I create regret that I did not find the great medicine Brown's Remedy when I was first taken sick, as I am confident it would have saved me from several years of suffering, and my health strength component of the other bearing of the most remarkable cures effected by Brown's Remedy is a case of Dropsy. Disease lies in our number in every, after the patient had been pronounced incurable by celebrated physicians."

My urine was very bad; it was I actually passed blood. This was I believe, by general prostration. My best was growing, now as he is on my best and of the most tender care nerves. I was advised to use Hunt's Remedy, and I do so, and I can say I am cured. I know my truly cured. It has benefited me more than all the medicine I ever took. I am now free from all bad symptoms, and my kidney and liver troubles, and cheerfully recommend it to all."

CHARLEVOIX.

Its Business, Advantages, Resorts, and Surroundings.

Charlevoix, the county seat of Charlevoix county is a flourishing village of about 1,500 inhabitants is situated on the high bluffs overlooking Lake Michigan, between Round lake and Lake Michigan, and on both banks of Pine river, which forms the connecting link between Lake Michigan and the inland lakes, and is the key to the whole Pine lake region with nearly eighty miles of shore line. The citizens are justly proud of their town, and manifest a commendable spirit of enterprise and liberality. A writer, speaking from eight years acquaintance with the place, has said that the intellectual and moral standard of Charlevoix people is superior to any place of its size he has ever known. There are about ninety business firms here, representing nearly all branches. A few more, we lacking, which could be added, and probably will in no distant day. Some branches are represented by a single firm, and others would make closer competition, more activity, and better satisfaction. And this competition is sure to come as the village grows.

During the season of 1881, all branches of business have been good, but more particularly that of building and improving residences. From the opening of the season to Sept. 30, sixty-five thousand dollars were expended, and fifty-four new residences so far completed that they are to be occupied before the coming winter. Large as this may seem, we confess we predict a much larger business next year.

In ship-building, Charlevoix has just made a beginning. In 1882, there was but one ship-yard. Now there are three, and the business of 1882 has been more than doubled.

Not having at hand the figures for the shipments during the season of 1882, it is impossible to make comparisons, but the following exhibit will show what has been done so far this year. The figures include only cargoes reported at the custom house up to Sept. 30, and not packages of fish, etc., carried by steamers in local or coast trade:

Manufactured lumber, feet	2,400,000
Pine lumber, feet	1,000,000
Lath	425,000
Square timber, feet	20,130
Railroad ties	87,000
Cedar posts	60,000
Pickets, sharpened, No.	5,000
Wood, cords	11,341
Bark, cords	3,594
Cig. pine, feet	6,000
Cobble stone, cords	14

The channel between Lake Michigan and round lake is 150 feet wide, and has a depth of 16 feet for its full length. This gives us a perfectly land-locked harbor where vessels may ride in safety during the severest storms. Between round and Pine lakes the capacity of the channel is slightly less, but still sufficient for multitudes of boats.

The fishing business is an important item, and there is a ready market for all that can be caught.

On Sept. 26, Charlevoix experienced her first disastrous fire, by which the planing mill of L. M. Sec, Mason & Co., was totally destroyed, together with a large amount of lumber and finished work. Having no insurance and no other means, the company could not rebuild. Realizing the necessity and value of such an institution the citizens took hold of the matter, and in two days $8000 in stock was subscribed, and steps taken to rebuild at once.

Other industries are being quietly worked up, among these a gristmill, and a fruit, vegetable, and fish-canning business. It is expected that these two will be in operation before the close of another season.

The following industries are not represented here, and we should like to see a part or all of them started:

A dairyman could find immediate sale for the milk of several cows, if delivered at the door regularly and promptly.

A cracker baker would get all the trade, for the best crackers we get here are stale when compared with fresh.

All in want of handsomes or any kind of marble cutting are obliged to send outside.

Among the industries requiring hardwood timber which are have in abundance near at hand, that might be started in the near future: Manufacture of chairs, agricultural implements, and farm wagons.

All kinds of all kinds, and wooden bowls could be made here as economically as anywhere.

THE RESORTS.

Between Round lake and Pine lake and south to the main channel which connects them, is located the Charlevoix summer resort. The ground of the resort comprise about 75 acres, and rise by those natural and well-defined terraces from 12 to 15 feet. The two lower terraces are sufficiently wide for cottage lots, with a broad walk in front, while the upper terrace stretches far away in a level opinion, from which glimpses of Lake Michigan are obtained. More than half the resort is cleared land, other parts being thinly wooded, and the portion farthest from the water being covered with heavy timber, while in the rear of the whole the dense woods extend to some distance. A handsome hotel, the Belvedere house, has been erected on an eligible site, from which a charming view of the lake waters reaching far to the southwest is obtained. A number of beautiful cottages also stand upon terraces overlooking the lake. A music hall 30x60 feet and a bowling alley 80 feet long, have been built and numerous improvements made. The company owning this resort was organized on the 21st day of May, 1878, under the laws of Michigan.

Directly opposite the Charlevoix resort is the Chicago resort, founded by a stock company of wealthy Chicago gentlemen for a private summer retreat for their families and their friends. An elegant club house, a large boat house, and several fine cottages have already been built, and extensive improvements have been begun.

As a resort Charlevoix has the superb advantage of lake breezes from both ways and with the winds which commonly prevail in a Michigan summer has the advantage of them all. Its landscape surroundings are those of an inland lake, one of the prettiest shores in the west, and in this respect it could scarcely be improved. Nature has provided every facility for healthful recreation and amusement, including unexcelled boating and fishing, and the manners of the resorts make the most of their delightful location.

The Charlevoix resort has the inside and outside lakes. It fronts one way on the harbor, a beautiful sparkling ground for small boats, and the other, by pine lake, extending away 12 miles in an ever changing landscape of hill and valley and woods and clearing. The boating privileges could not be surpassed. There are two long lines of boat houses, many of them having elegant boats.

The place is perhaps not so conveniently accessible as some, but will have railroad connections of its own not long hence. It is reached by four ways now, and one of them, the long trip from Traverse City will always be a favorite, however much more direct a railroad line may be.

With these advantages understood, it is still a matter of wonder that so large a business should have been built up in the short period since the resort of Indianapolis was first examined. The railroad company have pursued a liberal policy in helping the associations to get on their feet. It has come to be as generous lines for the passenger department of the line. It is already the most valuable specialty of the Grand Rapids & Indiana road, although the business is still in its infancy.

PINE LAKE.

One of the loveliest of all the many beautiful lakes that adorn this fair northern country is Pine lake. It stretches east and south some 20 miles. About five miles east it divides into branches, extending on its inlose limpbs, south to the distance of some 10 miles. Into the finger end of south arm flows the Jordan river, the famous trout stream. Prof. Winchell years ago made the following graphic picture of Pine lake: "Far away to the southeast for fifteen miles, stretches the placid, smiling surface of the water, its white and pebbly shore rimming the contour of the hills in all its meandering sinuosities. The verdant ridges rise as every side from the shining shore line, and hold the lake in their encircling embrace, while rounded hill-tops bubble up in rapid succession across the undulating landscape, till hill, valley, and sky, green, purple and blue, dissolve together in the blended hues of the distant horizon."

AROUND THE COUNTY.

The surface of the county is every where rolling, and in some sections decidedly hilly. It is well watered and is generally covered with inexhaustible spring brooks of the coldest water. There is some available water power, particularly on the Jordan and Boyne rivers. The soil varies from a light sandy to a heavy clay, filled with calcareous matter. The subsoil is of a varied character, and of the surface. Sugar maple, elm, beech, basswood, ash, hemlock, and cedar timber is found in great quantities throughout the county. The principal crops are winter wheat, oats, corn, hay, clover, potatoes and root crops. The summer resorts at Charlevoix furnish an excellent market for all sorts of garden vegetables. Fruit, including all varieties of grapes and peaches. The hardier kinds of apples are especially successful. Charlevoix county is at the northern extremity of the celebrated Michigan fruit belt. The soil during averages $20 per acre, although the wood produced, generally pays for the clearing. There are no government lands in the market. There are 21 acres of state swamp, 1,265 acres of primary school, 5,725 acres of agricultural college, and 12,265 acres of Grand Rapids and Indiana railroad in it, subject to entry May 1, 1883. Unimproved lands are held at from $7 to $10 per acre, while improved farms average from $15 to $50, in the interior and from $25 to $100 near Charlevoix. The timber business is an important enterprise in this country. Wood, ties, fence-posts, hemlock bark, and logs are cut during the winter, and are shipped during the summer to Chicago, Milwaukee, Racine, and other lake ports. There are several saw mills in the county, and an iron furnace at Ironton. The summer season is delightful, and the county as a good resort for invalids affected with asthmatic difficulties. The schools are very creditable for a new county.

A glimpse Into the Family Circle of Ohio's Next Governor.

Gov. Hoadly's home, in East Walnut Hills, Cincinnati, is quite an ideal one—not too splendid for comfort, but luxurious enough to suit a fastidious taste. It is a fine old stone mansion on the Madisonville pike, set several hundred feet back from the highway, in the midst of a splendid stretch of velvet turf, broken by a few fine trees along the circular drive and a few brilliant flower beds about the entrance. A Virginia creeper hangs a triumphal garland over the broad porch, but its vines that used to be the pride of the place and were raised from slips brought from fair Melrose Abbey have succumbed to the winter frosts.

The Hoadlys are pre-eminently a cultured family, and the house within gives ample evidence of this. The tessellated hall opens on the right to the library—a charming room, with a wood fire upon the hearth and its three sides lined with book cases. One great plate-glass window commands a delightful view of the lawn and Gen. Butler's handsome place in the distance. From this room opens the dining-room, a noble room, looking southward over a finer stretch of velvet turf than that which gives dignity to the entrance. The dado is of mahogany panels, breast high, and the farther end of the room is nearly filled by an arched bay window. Here hang two fine marines by De Haas, and the portraits of Gov. Hoadly's mother (nee Woolsey), and his father—one painted by Eaton, the other by Andrews. There is also a portrait of Hoadly's father, painted in his youth by old Morse, the inventor of the telegraphic alphabet.

The drawing room is rich with wood-carved mantels and mirrors, and encircled with pictorial tiles that illustrate the famous scenes in Sir Walter Scott's novels. On the walls are some veritable artistic gems—a Corot, a Turner, a Rosa Bonheur, and a superb figure piece by Merle, not to name pictures by such lesser lights as Ziegler and Fassmann. Everywhere an dainty things picked up by the master of the house and his charming wife during their frequent visits to Europe.

The Hoadly household consists of the Governor himself, Mrs. Hoadly, Mr. George Hoadly, jr., Miss Hoadly (who is at Farmington at school) and Edward Mills Hoadley, still a schoolboy. Your correspondent met Gov. Hoadly yesterday just as his pair of pretty grays waited at his door on Third st.

"If I had anything in the world to say", he observed, "I certainly should say it to the World. I am still very far from well, and hope to be able to take an outing after a few weeks rest. This I feel is all I need to set me up completely. If anything is an antidote for malaria it should be the congratulations that pour in upon me by telegraph and post every hour in the day and well into the night.—New York World.

There is a good deal of kicking among prominent Massachusetts democrats against Gov. Butler's re-election. They say that he was an advocate of the right of secession up to the breaking out of the war; that he voted for the secession candidate at the Charleston convention in 1860; that he supported Breckinridge as against Douglas throughout the presidential campaign; that he then turned republican and became one of the bitterest opponents of the democratic party until the tide began to turn, when he again turned his coat and sought honors at the hands of the party he had deserted and vilified. This is generally speaking, quite true. But the Massachusetts democracy, with these facts before them, have fawned and cringed for years been so conducting the war against republican tyranny in that state as to demonstrate that if the republicans in that state are to be routed different methods and different men must be put to the front, and the rank and file of the Bay state democrats seem to have discovered—at least they believe they have—in old Ben the fit instrument with which to bring about a complete republican overthrow. Butler's election as governor last year is strong evidence that the rank and file are right in their estimate of him as an instrument for the overthrow of the Massachusetts republican oligarchy; and, if the work which the Massachusetts democracy has been signally unable to accomplish under the leadership of those gentlemen who are now kicking so vigorously, can be done through the instrumentality of Gov. Butler—as at this distance it appears that it can be—it would seem to be the part wisdom not to inquire too closely into the antecedents of the man who has been selected by the great majority of the Massachusetts democracy as the head of their ticket in the coming battle for position and prestige, preparatory to the greater battle of 1884. Whatever he may have been in the past, Gov. Butler stands to-day in Massachusetts as the representative of popular rights, and as the exponent of reform in state administration. He has infused some blood at not now life into the Massachusetts democracy, and seems, indeed, to be an instrument raised up to lead them to victory. Let the protesting democrats then recognize the fact and accept the goods give them.—Grand Rapids Democrat.

Significance of the Ohio Election.

It must be remembered, too, that an unfortunate division, caused by purely jealousy among some of the issuers, divided the democratic party in Ohio against itself. The "family fight" within the party waxed bitter, and we confess at one time it looked as if nothing could avert a democratic disaster of heroic proportions. Imbued with this idea, the republicans kindly pointed out the blunders of the democratic leaders, taking this method of infusing vitality into the breasts of their rank and file. But, notwithstanding democratic differences and democratic "bolters," Judge Hoadly and the rest of the Ohio democratic state ticket were triumphantly elected by a majority that threw consternation into the ranks of our political foes.

The significance of Tuesday's election is, then, that the people are determined to oust the republican party from power. The victory of last November was but the beginning of a revolution of political sentiment in this country, and the outlining of the fixed determination of the majority to have our public affairs administered economically and in a democratic spirit. That this may be accomplished the people are turning to the democratic party, as the sweeping victory in Ohio and largely increased majorities in Iowa clearly prove. The Ohio election is the first gun of the national campaign, and the first of a series of democratic victories which will result in the election of a democratic president.—Bay City Call.

One of the singular features of the election is the different ways in which the prohibition vote affected the republicans. The rural counties, where they pushed the defeated prohibition amendment strongly, responded with big majorities for the amendment, but with hardly the average republican vote. In the cities' where the republicans were afraid to push the amendment, they made their chief gains from the democrats. Yet the honest republicans are at a loss to explain their defeat even to their own satisfaction. Deacon Richard Smith thinks the wool-growers did it. Field Marshal Halstead thinks the wine-growers did it. John Sherman believes Foster did it; and Foster probably hasn't recovered from his dazed condition sufficiently to do anything about it. At any rate, it is done, brethren, and well done. We imagine that you will find that you have all contributed to it unawares. The people have simply registered their decree that the republican party must go. That is the meaning of a democratic governor and a democratic legislature in Ohio.—New York Sun.

The Civil Rights Bill.

The recent decision of the United States supreme court declaring unconstitutional the laws passed by a republican congress for the ostensible purpose of protecting the colored race in the enjoyment of their civil rights, emphasizes the conviction that has forced itself upon the minds of so many patriotic citizens that the republican party must go. Its pass, record shows that it is wholly incapable of dealing fairly and intelligently with the great questions which affect both the material and political interests of the country. It has subordinated everything to the shameless greed for spoils. Corrupt and unjust legislation for purely partisan ends has chiefly distinguished its course.

When the famous civil rights bill was before congress the republicans took especial delight in denouncing the democrats as enemies to liberty and the free enjoyment of the rights guaranteed by the constitution because they opposed this pet stalwart measure. The best lawyers in congress contended that the bill was plainly in violation of all law and all considerations of a wise public policy. Why should the negro be invested with greater opportunities for protection against wrongs perpetrated by individuals than those enjoyed by his white brother? The civil rights bill was a flagrant piece of class legislation that clothed a portion of our citizens with privileges and immunities not accorded to all. But for the sake of corralling the colored vote, and making it the pliant tool of its base designs, the unscrupulous republican majority passed the bill in spite of the earnest and unanswerable constitutional objections raised against it. It was a triumph of might over right.

The decision of the republican supreme court is a splendid vindication, however, of the wisdom and patriotic foresight of the democrats in opposing the law. It gives the lie to the old republican charges of democratic unfaithfulness to the principles of American liberty. It is also a welcome assurance that the country is returning to the simple ways and constitutional methods of the fathers of the republic. But above all, it will be hailed as a grand exemplification of the pregnant lines of the poet:

"And the truth shall ever come uppermost,
And justice shall be done."

Returns have been gathered from each of the eighty-eight counties in Ohio on the prohibition amendment, showing that it received about 320,000 votes and that the measure is defeated by over 20,000 votes, the total vote being between 710,000 and 720,000. Taking out the votes of Cincinnati, Cleveland, Dayton, Toledo and Columbus, the measure was lost by about 14,000 votes.

EX-SENATOR JEROME B. CHAFFEE says that twenty-three years ago, when he entered Denver, he invited his tired fellow-passengers of the stage coach to take a drink, and laid down a $20 gold piece, concerning which the bar keeper said, "All right." That transaction made him a temperance man.

MR. JAY GOULD might reduce the speed of his yacht and increase that of his railway trains with advantage both to himself and all others concerned. By the recent running down of a tug in the North river, it is shown that his yacht is entirely too fast; but no one has ever made an accusation of that sort against his trains.

OCEAN steamers from New York to Europe have taken more than 31,000 passengers since May 1. If these, on an average, spent $2,000, a low estimate, the total is $62,551,000, or a twelfth of our exports during the last fiscal year, and one-half larger than the so-called "balance of trade" during the past seven months of the present fiscal year.

A REMARKABLE case has just been decided in South Carolina. Two years ago W. S. Hook was murdered by a nigger, and the lady placed on a railway track. Three trains ran over it before it was discovered. The heirs brought suit against the company for mutilating the body, and have recovered $10,000. If dead men are worth that amount down South, what must be the value of a real live Carolina person?

MARK TWAIN and W. D. Howells are to unite in writing a book on "American Humor." The New York Tribune thinks that this is the harnessing of the dromedary and the mettled courser. Mark is certainly a humorist, and we now know that Mr. Whitelaw Reid thinks the dromedary the most comic of animals—but in natural history that was not generally appreciated before.

JOHN BULL, a heroic engineer, died recently from injuries received in a railway collision at Talmadge, Ohio. Perceiving a disaster to be inevitable, he reversed his engine and applied his air-brakes, which slowed the train greatly. Then, putting on full steam, he broke the couplings which attached his engine to the train and dashed into the obstruction, receiving fatal injuries, but rendering the impact of his train with the wreck comparatively harmless. No passenger was hurt. He lived at Galion, Ohio, and was the oldest engineer on the new Pennsylvania and Ohio railroad.

HENRY A. WISE, in the Zachary Taylor campaign, declared that Taylor was so ignorant he could not write his own name; that all his dispatches, letters, and even his letter of acceptance, were written by his Chief of Staff, Maj Bliss. The late Beverly D. Hughes, from reply, "Mr. Wise," said he, "tells us that Gen. Taylor is so ignorant that he can't write his own name, and that Maj. Bliss has to write it for him. Well, fellow citizens, if this is true—which I deny and shall presently show to be untrue—it is only another illustration that WILLIAM SHARP was arrested for owing $1 board money in Bell Pock, Ark. The Judge having imposed $10 fine, the prisoner had no to pay it. Thence he was taken out by Alfred Werner, who had a contract to work the county prisoners on a farm. Werner whipped him to death in six days. A Coroner's jury made a verdict of willful murder, and Judge Merritt of Dallas county refused Werner's bond to bail in $1,000, and permitted him to go out of the county to get two irresponsible bondsmen. Werner is at large, and the best people of Dallas have in mass meeting expressed their sense of Judge Merritt's maladministration of the law.

THE suicidal mania in England is even more unique in its methods than that of this country. Instead of the old-fashioned ways of simple exit the Britisher is not content to go out save by means that spring from inventive genius. An officer of engineers contrived a dynamite belt, strapped it about him, and was blown to atoms. A little boy a doctor ate a slice of bread on which he had spread phosphorus for butter, and washed it down with a glass of carbolic acid. Of course he had no need for a more substantial meal afterward. Instances of eccentric quietus are frequent, and finally suicide may be reduced to a science, as it seems to have ceased to be a horror.

THAT white settlers look with covetous eyes upon lands belonging to the Indians, some naughty practical jokers of Miles City, M. T., demonstrated to their satisfaction the other day. These bad young men pretended to have dispatches to the effect that the Government had thrown open the eastern part of the Fort Keogh reservation to settlers. They whispered this information cautiously to special friends with the strictest injunctions to secrecy. Before night there was a stampede, the supposed public land claims were staked off, shanties put up, tents pitched, and the jokers declare that a town was laid out and several lots sold in inaugural. The real-estate boom was under full headway by 9 o'clock in the evening, but before 10, the joke was out and the deceived settlers had already met the place.

LAND TYE, a lumberman at Oil City, Pa., is going back to Ohio to be probably to confide these only distresses which the wise woman will not confide, except to a fellow housekeeper, at sunset. Yes, I equally foolish, attempted to reason, and finally dissuaded. I as an unplied "I told you so." Quick rose in anger at the first sign of a seriously temper which the poor lady had further added to her husband in all the years of their married life.

Why Widows Wed.

Are widows really so fascinating? The popular impression seems to be that single women are placed at an extreme disadvantage when brought into competition in the matrimonial race with those of take-not-a-second-look-at-worn the orange blossoms and who have been compelled by cruel fate to assume the habiliments of grief. Strange to say, widows themselves do not share in this almost universal opinion. There is not one of them who does not believe that she is barely "tolerable," so to say, in the contest, and who would not gladly exchange places, if she could, with her single sisters. The attractive widow, nevertheless, carries off the bachelor sweepstakes very often, leaving her spinster rivals pale with envy and wild with rage. Her conquests, however, are very much exaggerated. Widows do not run after men. They are too wary for that. They know the ropes, and they know that the bachelor who has married a widow is the laughing stock of his friends. Widows are not good-looking women as a rule. They are practically-minded women of the world, who have a clerkship in one of the Government departments, is "Fay," of the Louisville Courier-Journal. "They are Kentuckians by birth, but have become Washingtonians by adoption, having lived here for many years. Both are indefatigable in their pursuit of social intelligence, and both are fond of society for its own allurements as well. They go everywhere and find out pretty much everything. In winter they are tireless devotees of society, and never weary, apparently, of the endless rounds of balls, germans, receptions and calls. In summer they make a tour of the principal watering places, writing letters from Long Branch, Saratoga, Greenbrier White Sulphur Springs, and other resorts. In school, as society ladies are grayer than their mothers and daughter, who live by criticizing and commenting upon the foibles of that society which they themselves so much enjoy. "Miss Grundy" says: "I believe there are no two happier people on the world than my mother and myself," and I have no reason to doubt her word. Mrs. and Miss Snead appear more like sisters than mother and daughter, and I have seen heard the latter spoken of jocularly as "the youngest other one." The daughter is quite outspoken, but she does not prevent her seeing more than is visible to many stronger eyes. When she puts on her eye-glasses you may rest assured that nothing escapes her vigilant glances, from the fashionable dress to the minutest details of her party acquaintance. Washington Letter.

The Way Left.

Pope, who has an idea that he is carrying on my education ever since I left school, in a kind of a broad, general way, pounces upon me occasionally with a set of shamelessness which he calls practical questions.

"Fabian," he said, suddenly, the other morning, as he laid down the newspaper, "what would you do if you were left penniless and alone in the world?"

"I should earn my own living," I returned promptly, and feeling quite convinced that my answer was a proper.

"My dear child," he said, benignantly, "you remind me irresistibly of Marie Antoinette. Of course you would earn it, but how?"

I must confess I did not know which way to turn. I can make a bed, I can take care of a baby, and I once learned to make an omelette, but every one can do these things. Besides, I do not choose to be either a nurse or a chambermaid, or a cook, and I know that Pope meant to say, "In what lucrative manner would you win a livelihood?" There is field enough for women everywhere; it is the ladies that are looking about for something to do in which they will not lose caste.

GOSSIP FOR THE LADIES.

An Architect's Assistant.

Dennis met Moll at Nacodoch,
While out for a bit of a lark,
And, after a day half of folly,
Accompanied her home after dark.

Now the sun rears by this time left folly,
So, in order to hide the disgrace,
He publishes abroad his deed thus:
"That he was an "architect's clerk."

At Molly, a short period after,
Knocked up from a cross-grained pa,
Who, with a heel of wet mortar,
Drew up a half bushel, much sweet.

At first she hurr little fond laughter,
"Now I'll ask the Prince Albert a lark,"
Said Molly, her darling, that night,
"Darling, I'm ready to elope with you."
Jackson Democrat of Dennison.

What Are Never Had.

"Anyhow," said a young lady, who had just returned from a week's visit, "I can say mothers have been frightened at a snake in the Garden of Eden, but she never had a nasty hairy caterpillar crawl down the neck of her dress. And we don't suppose she ever had." Norristown Herald.

A Woman Almost Roasted.

Once there was a delicate little lady who did not keep home for several years to her regret. Being at length allowed, under protest, to remain herself as a gracious figure upon the home of becoming of all backgrounds, a pretty scene, she quite forgot the inevitable moment came. Disorganization in the servants' department threw the little lady for once out of her usual ease. She turned to her husband finally to confide these only distresses which the wise woman will not confide, except to a fellow housekeeper, at sunset. Yes, I equally foolish, attempted to reason, and finally dissuaded. I as an unplied "I told you so." Quick rose in anger at the first sign of a seriously temper which the poor lady had further added to her husband in all the years of their married life.

There is field enough for women everywhere; it is the ladies that are looking about for something to do in which they will not lose caste.

Of course I have read all the impressible sayings and poems of those ladies who write books for school people, for one an omniverous reader. The funny thing about them is that they never help any one on. They are lectures to the lady ones.

I saw something the other day about women studying architecture, and I thought that would be rather a good idea to spring upon papa. But I suddenly thought of Helen in Howells' new story of "Woman's Reason." I had left her last month, very sore of heart over the rejection of her devoted jurist. That scheme had failed; but I knew Howells to be a man of wonderful resources, and I felt quite sure he would put her up in some nice, aristocratic business in the Autumn number. It came in that very afternoon, and I looked Helen up immediately. She was dead broke and had tonsilized her principal. I had always been led to believe that this is a very terrible thing to do. What she would have done if she had not had any principal, the novelist does not say. He leaves her engaged. Her lover is wrecked on a desert island, but I feel quite sure the money will hold out long enough to pay her expenses and buy her trousseau when he comes home. All the same when he did not help me to my answer. So when papa repeated his question at dinner time more plainly there was nothing left for me to answer but the truth.

"Papa," I said, "there is but one thing the world allows a lady to do to earn her own living without losing caste."

"And what is that, Fabian?"

"To marry a man."

Undeserved Reproof.

The venom of the old adage was choked with malice as he went on speaking.

"Miserable creature, six times have you appeared before me at this bar. Drink has drowned in you all sense of shame—made you insensible not only to degrade, but to any feeling of humanity. Your children are branded with the stigma of a drunkard's name, and starved by a drunkard's cupidity. You shows itself in your trembling limbs and in your blurred and watery eyes; it has made a wreck of your nose a warning beacon."

THE CROCODILE.

Terrors of a Mysterious Reptile. A Chapter in Natural History.

Half the crocodile's terrors lie in its mystery. To see one floating in a stream, all its length disclosed, would, no doubt, be dreadful enough, but there is a refinement of horror in the tentative glide of the reptile, for all that it seems to do, is to draw the water into its nostrils, and, some distance from them, and by the space which separates the eyes from the nostrils, you judge the total length of the submerged crocodile. Again, when ruffled upon its prey, it would, doubtless, be a paralyzing sight if the creature amphibious came along the surface, with all its armament of teeth displayed, gnashing its jaws and lashing its tail. But conceive the horror of the victim when it rises upon the surface only the ripple of the advancing monster manifest. Its fate is just as certain as if the thing came like Andromeda's enemy, in full view, but there is the awful horror added of an invisible approach. There is a wastefulness on the water—nothing more; but it is the sign that a crocodile is advancing to its prey. And it was this mystery that attracted the gaze of the Phœnicians to the brute. Like evil, it always came from darkness; like the hand of fate, it was unseen but inevitable. So, in Thebes and Upper Egypt, the hideous, half-human creature of this kind was held in reverence as typifying the powers of darkness and irrevocable catastrophe; and the priests, taking the largest of the kind they could find, by certain charms and incantations made them with jewels, piercing their ears and nostrils so as to hold rings, and putting bracelets upon their feet, and, thus legalized, brought them up from their lairs in the Nile and worshiped the sacred river and sacrificed them to the people as the emblem of fate, terrible, pitiless and irresponsible.

In the natural history of the crocodile there are some points of singular interest, which it would not be misdemeanoring to have illustrated in the zoo. Thus, for instance, a crocodile's egg would be a surprise to all who saw it, for the first time, inasmuch as the reptile which grows to thirty feet in length and is armed in maturity with such ponderous scales, begins life in a soft-shelled egg rather smaller than that of a goose. Again, a young crocodile preserved in a bottle of spirits, eye five inches long, would be a memorable illustration of the origin of the leviathan than, later on, "lamps at its shining of a spear." Indeed, if the crocodile's troubles are crowded together at the commencement of its pilgrimage through life, it has no enemies that it need fear, and is a conservative monarch of the Euchos. But at first there is nothing that comes in its path, flesh, or fowl, of which the tiny crocodile is not afraid. As if conscious of the future power of the sanguinary island, everything that can catch it eats it. The eggs are sucked whenever found by creatures of the wasted kind, and the young, as soon as the little reptile emerges from the shell, is hatched, fish swallow it, birds peck at it, the mongoose worries it. Yet, in spite of such a universal conspiracy against it, the species always manages to maintain a sufficient number alive to make itself the overrunning terror of the waters in Africa and Ceylon, and to assume itself by ruthless and unmitigated slaughter upon each and all of the orders of creation that had vainly and greedily combined for its extinction in infancy. Together lashing on the banks, birds floating upon the surface of the water, fish swimming, animals drinking at the river, or waiting to it; all pay tribute to it; and just as its birth the crocodile sets to work, and nothing that had breath, so near nothing that has life, is safe from the crocodile, an egg and a baby alligator would, therefore, be strange commentaries upon the after-life of the Egyptian Pharaohs, and might in themselves teach at a glance a whole page of natural history. —London Telegraph.

Didn't Go Out the Gate.

A little girl's mother told her if she went out out of the gate she would have to whip her, and in an hour the young one was picked up in the gutter in the midst of mud-pie making.

"I thought I told you if you went out that gate I'd whip you," said the mother, angrily.

"But I didn't do out de gate, mamma," replied the kid, in a whisper.

"Yes, you did, and you've been out here in the street for an hour, and look like a pig."

"But, mamma, I didn't do out de date."

"Yes, you did, too, and I'm going to whip you."

"I didn't do out de date; I think over de fence, an' 'cose nuffin' help me is time, mamma." —Merchant Traveler.

A Woman's Experiment.

A lady entered a ticket office in Toledo and bought a ticket for Cleveland. She told the ticket-seller that she had never traveled alone, and that her husband had always told her that she could not without trouble. She desired to observe if breaking this trip alone. Accordingly she asked for and got all the information as to the departure of her train, the change of cars in Chicago, checking baggage, etc., and went from the ticket office sailing at the manner in which she would surprise her husband. A few minutes later the ticket-seller found on the counter the ticket he had sold her, with the change.—New York Sun.

A CERTAIN case was postponed in a New York court, an attorney stating that his little dog had eaten up necessary papers and affidavits.

A LETTER received from Gen. Sherman mentioned that Jackie Grace had ridden over 200 miles on horseback on consecutive days without fatigue. As the Judge weighs about 275 pounds it would be interesting to know how the horse got along.

ONE of the New York papers says that young Vassar is taking a great deal of interest in religious matters of late, and is a constant attendant upon prayer meetings as well as Sabbath services at by Newman's church.

THE late Nathaniel Thayer, of Boston, left an estate in stocks, bonds, land, etc., valued at more than $16,000,000, but all his household furniture, horses, carriages, plate, etc., at both his city and country homes, were only worth $2,000.

ENGLAND supplies the 250,000,000 people of India with salt and charges them 25 cents a pound, equal to a tax of 6,000 per cent. A poor native must work one day and a half in Bombay to earn enough money to purchase a pound of salt.

GERMAN fathers do things differently. Recently a daughter eloped and married a man whom her father did not favor. A telegram followed the runaway to the place of her refuge, and to have them married, but to have them come back and enjoy a regular old-fashioned wedding feast, which they did.

THERE will be 325 members in the next house of Representatives, instead of the 293 of the last House. The Eastern States have the ninety-five they had in the last House, the Western States have 105 instead of ninety-two; the Southern States 121 instead of 106. The Democrats will have a majority of sixty-four, or twice the number of new members. The East sends forty-two, the West fifty-one, and the South ten.

THANKS are for interrupting you, sir, but there is a dollar bill on the floor which you have dropped." These words addressed to Mr. Munn, of Brooklyn, at the First National Bank. He thanked the stranger who had spoken, dropped down, picked up the bill and went on with his business as usual. When he came to deposit the $1,000 which lay in the pocket-book on the desk before him, he found it was gone. White he stopped the stranger escaped.

THE merchants of Lancaster, Texas, are going down on the nickel. A writer from states the case: "It is all very well as small change, but when a man gives you a dollar three donkeys hooked with a pair of mules, and a dozen niggers lose their unalienated siesta and assume a day in counting the stuff, for the pockets of Mexicans—who do not usually value time—wants in the operation."

THE Rev. Frederick Freeman, known as the Historian of Cape Cod, who died death at his home in Sandwich, Mass., at the age of 81 years, was the thirteenth child of twenty children of the late Rev. Gen. Nathaniel Freeman, and was himself the father of twelve children by three wives. He was the author of two large volumes of "The History of Cape Cod, or the Annals of Barnstable County," which came out in successive numbers between 1858 and 1862. He is also the author of other works.

AS a well-filled stage was being swept over the Jim Crow trail toward Jeannette, Pa., the other day, it had one of the shiftlessness to the doubtful to lodge, letting the former fall upon the bottom of the horses. The frightened animal sprang forward, and in a second the whole outfit was off the grade on its way to the river, some sixty feet below. There were in the stage at the time seven persons, beside the driver—four grown people and three children. The stage rolled over several times, utterly demolishing the top and smashing one wheel. Strangely enough, no one was seriously injured.

A BOSTON correspondent with the villard party wrote from Livingston, Montana: "Livingston is less than a year old, but it is at the gateway of the Yellowstone valley, at the junction of two railroads, and intends to be a great city. It has lots of saloons, dance-houses and gambling places that keep open all night long, and it has already two banks and three newspapers. The regular frontiersman wants three things—a bank where he can keep his earnings, a gambling place and saloon and dance-house combined where he can spend them and a newspaper in which he can read the names of those who were slaughtered the night before. Livingston, however, is toning down and becoming respectable. Capital is a good police force, for it demands protection; and if the law does not give it the law-abiding mob will."

NEWCOMERS in the city of Mexico are surprised on finding so many of the conveniences common to large cities at home, such as the telephone, the electric light, a police force, and an excellent street-car service. The electric lights are on the tops of iron rods running up from the gas lamp posts. The police are far more soldierly than the regular army of the country. They wear a blue flannel suit, the coat buttoned up, and their cap has a covering of white, which, with the standing linen collar, is always immaculate. In their belts, on one side they carry a club and on the other a large revolver. If one wishes to see a policeman he has only to go to the nearest corner, and he will surely find him standing there, for he has no beat to walk over. The speed at which streetcars go is astonishing. They fool along as fast as mules can pull them, and as they approach a corner the driver gives a loud toot on a horn for the purpose of warning people at the crossing to get out of the way.

THE party conventions, which usually give a great many things "with alarm," says the Chicago Herald, have not as yet taken up the question of English idolatrism in America. There is room here for a political party to make a point in its own favor. Leading public land in the United States going for a song, many English noblemen have make extensive purchases. Among these gentlemen are men, not or more nerve, and a score of others have holdings running all the way from 20,000 to 80,000 acres. These enormous tracts of land, it is fair to presume, have been permanently withdrawn from the market so far as the present generation is concerned. Their wealth and aristocratic owners are keen enough to appreciate the manifest destiny of the American republic. At some future time, certainly not remote, the available public lands will all have been disposed of. The invest. ments of the British landlords have doubtless been made in anticipation of that day. Whether it will be their policy to dispose of their property to small farmers, or to hold and lease, remains to be seen. The danger of a land monopoly is, of course, not immediate, but, in view of the operations of the Scottish and the fact that the mania for the purchase of wide tracts ships by British capitalists seems to be on the increase, the matter assumes a. American Republicans may well be drawn to this newest phase of the land question. English landlordism has not been such as manifestly to bless any land that its extension in our own country can be viewed with much pleasure. The people here, however, have the remedy in their own hands, and if they do not apply it, it will be their own fault.

The Old Rush Light.

Young, and even middle-aged, people, accustomed to the convenience of the modern lucifer-match, can hardly imagine the time when the tinderbox, with its clumsy flint and steel and broad brimstone matches, was the only means of procuring a light. Some people were more skillful than others in striking a light and blowing the spark and nursing it into a flame, but often on a wintry morning it was weary work with the account who had to kindle the fire. Even the tinder happened to be damp, or worn out, or the flint and steel "in a huff," and then the unhappy housekeeper rushed light was in some bedroom or other always burnt, so that in case of sudden emergency any disaster there might as light ready. The rushlight, having, as its name implies, a rush wick, was about fifteen long, and was burnt in a large perforated stalk; it was the "farthing rushlight," which very poor people were said to use for other purposes than a night-light. The pipe-clay—four grown people and three children. The stage rolled over several times, utterly demolishing the top and smashing one wheel. Strangely enough, no one was seriously injured.

A BOSTON correspondent with the villard party wrote from Livingston, Montana: "Livingston is less than a year old, but it is at the gateway of the Yellowstone valley, at the junction of two railroads, and intends to be a great city. It has lots of saloons, dance-houses and gambling places that keep open all night long, and it has already two banks and three newspapers. The regular frontiersman wants three things—a bank where he can keep his earnings, a gambling place and saloon and dance-house combined where he can spend them and a newspaper in which he can read the names of those who were slaughtered the night before. Livingston, however, is toning down and becoming respectable. Capital is a good police force, for it demands protection; and if the law does not give it the law-abiding mob will."

NEWCOMERS in the city of Mexico are surprised on finding so many of the conveniences common to large cities at home, such as the telephone, the electric light, a police force, and an excellent street-car service. The electric lights are on the tops of iron rods running up from the gas lamp posts. The police are far more soldierly than the regular army of the country. They wear a blue flannel suit, the coat buttoned up, and their cap has a covering of white, which, with the standing linen collar, is always immaculate. In their belts, on one side they carry a club and on the other a large revolver. If one wishes to see a policeman he has only to go to the nearest corner, and he will surely find him standing there, for he has no beat to walk over. The speed at which streetcars go is astonishing. They fool along as fast as mules can pull them, and as they approach a corner the driver gives a loud toot on a horn for the purpose of warning people at the crossing to get out of the way.

THE party conventions, which usually give a great many things "with alarm," says the Chicago Herald, have not as yet taken up the question of English idolatrism in America. There is room here for a political party to make a point in its own favor. Leading public land in the United States going for a song, many English noblemen have make extensive purchases. Among these gentlemen are men, not or more nerve, and a score of others have holdings running all the way from 20,000 to 80,000 acres. These enormous tracts of land, it is fair to presume, have been permanently withdrawn from the market so far as the present generation is concerned. Their wealth and aristocratic owners are keen enough to appreciate the manifest destiny of the American republic. At some future time, certainly not remote, the available public lands will all have been disposed of. The invest. ments of the British landlords have doubtless been made in anticipation of that day. Whether it will be their policy to dispose of their property to small farmers, or to hold and lease, remains to be seen. The danger of a land monopoly is, of course, not immediate, but, in view of the operations of the Scottish and the fact that the mania for the purchase of wide tracts ships by British capitalists seems to be on the increase, the matter assumes a. American Republicans may well be drawn to this newest phase of the land question. English landlordism has not been such as manifestly to bless any land that its extension in our own country can be viewed with much pleasure. The people here, however, have the remedy in their own hands, and if they do not apply it, it will be their own fault.

THE NEXT HOUSE.

The Influence of the West and South.

(Washington Cor. Detroit Free Press)

The influence of the West and the South in the next House of Representatives will undoubtedly attract a great deal of attention and excite very general comment. The following table shows the effects of the last apportionment of Representatives by giving the number of Congressmen from the various sections in the Forty-seventh and Forty-eighth Congresses:

	Forty-seventh.	Forty-eighth.
Eastern States	95	95
New en States	32	32
Western States	105	105
Totals	232	232

So far as the sectional divisions are concerned, the thirty-two additional Representatives created by the new apportionment are divided between the West and the South, the former receiving seventeen and the latter fifteen.

The political divisions of the Representatives of the three sections in the Forty-seventh Congress were as follows:

	Democrats.	Republicans.
Eastern States	71	24
Western States	41	64
Southern States	97	24
Totals	209	112

This analysis gives the Democrats the two Greenbackers from Maine and the Republicans all the other Greenbackers and the Independent, and unknowns and of the Republicans seated in place of contested elections during the Forty-seventh Congress.

The political divisions of the Representatives in the Forty-eighth Congress are as follows:

	Democrats.	Republicans.
Eastern States	71	24
Western States	37	68
Southern States	97	24
Totals	205	116

This table gives to the Republicans all the Readjusters, Independents and Greenbackers.

By comparing the two tables it appears that the Democrats gain fourteen representatives in the Eastern States, thirty-two in the Western States, and eighteen in the Southern States—a total of sixty-four. The Republicans lose fourteen in the Eastern States, fifteen in the Western States and three in the Southern States—a total of thirty-two.

The Republican loss represents just one-half of the Democratic gain, thus showing that practically the Democracy in the Forty-eighth Congress have the benefit of the entire increase in the representation resulting from the new apportionment. The number, thirty-two, is the increase of Representatives in the Forty-eighth Congress; it represents the Republican loss at the Congressional election, and it represents the Democratic gain by the apportionment.

With a full Democratic caucus, ninety-eight votes will be necessary to nominate a candidate for Speaker. The majority of these ninety-eight votes must come from the West and South, inasmuch as the total of the Democratic votes from the Eastern States is only forty-two. From what is known regarding the sentiment of the South, it is safe to say that in order to obtain the nomination for Speaker Mr. Randall must receive support in the Forty-eighth from the West and South. That he cannot receive many is the confident belief of his opponents.

The Measure of Patriotism.

The Republican party has adopted a convenient test for the patriotism of the citizens of the Southern States.

If a white Southerner is a Democrat he is an unreconstructed rebel, still adhering to the lost cause and watching eagerly for the opportunity of saving the Confederate debt, pensioning Confederate soldiers and repealing the Fourteenth and Fifteenth.

If he is a Republican he is a patriot. Wade Hampton fought in the war. So did John T. Morgan and Matt W. Ransom and M. C. Butler and a number of others now in political life as Democrats. They are unrepentant rebels, every man of them.

Mahone, Longstreet, Chalmers, Mosby, Riddleberger, Wise and other Southern supporters of the national administration also fought in the war, but they are patriots. They have become converts to Republicanism and Federal appointments.

There is evidently only one road open for the rehabilitation in the South of a patriotic regard for the Union, as it is. That road leads into the Republican organization. Let all the ex-Confederates, from Jeff Davis down, declare in favor of retaining the Republicans in power and give that party the vote of the solid South, and they will at once become Union patriots. If they need help in carrying the success over with them the Government will supply them with any amount of Federal bayonets and carpet-bag missionaries necessary to convince the colored voters in what direction their interests lie.

Longstreet, Jefferds, Chalmers and the other ex-Confederates, who have attached themselves to the tail of Mahone's kite in Washington are in a comparatively small way of business. They simply want some Southern postoffices, custom-houses and Marshalships in return for the pledge of the Southern delegations to Arthur in the next Republican Presidential Convention. But they are patriots, truly repentant of their Confederate sins, and are accepted with gracious condescension into the "loyal" ranks of the Republican party. —New York Herald.

Just What It Means.

The cry the Republican party must go on says concisely what thinking men feel.

It means more than at first appears. At the outset, observe. Not Republicans, but the Republican party, must go.

Not intolerance of men, but of methods; not hatred of principles, but of power abused; not prejudice against a party for what it has been, but contempt for what it is, is the meaning.

Is it not vindictive; it is not narrow-minded. It expresses a truth.

Long continuance in power is fatal to any party. We do not attempt to trace the decay. We do not seek that the decay of a mere party shall by no means corrupt the body politic. We do not care. We seek health.

There is no hope for the Republican party in itself. Hamlet. The salt has lost its savor. Is there a Sumner, or a Greeley, or a Phillips, or a Lincoln, or a Garrison, or a Seward to-day giving the life of his great spirit to party counsels? The "grand old party" has outlived its vigor. Old, but no longer grand, it must go. Dorsey and Bradley, Pelham and Patterson, Howgate and Shepherds, Kellogg and Mahone, Bolssons and Chandlers are the men of the party in power, rule.

For what does it exist?

The great mass of its own honest adherents have lost faith in it. Those who know it best are most willing to engineering this particular lift, and yet're going through the top of the car."

With which exclaim Mr. Spoopendyke planted his hat firmly on his head and tapped at the window until his face looked like the danger side of a switch target.

"Never mind, my dear," pleasted Mrs. Spoopendyke. "It isn't as warm as it was, and I don't care about having it up."

"It ain't, eh?" growled Mr. Spoopendyke, turning suddenly on her. "Somebody's been here and screwed it fast to the roof! P'raps he's up there yet, holding on to it, lest if he is, he'll think a steam jack machine is working underneath him! Look out up there, she's coming. Brace yourself for your flight to the spheres, for Spoopendyke has got a grip on now that! Just till something gives way!" and the worthy gentleman took hold once more and tugged, while his wife dodged suspectant lintions and lack-strap buckles.

"I think I saw it move," she remarked, encouragingly.

"Did, did ye?" hooted Mr. Spoopendyke, whose hands were numbed by his exertions. "Did ye notice which way it went? What'd ye do to the thing when ye tried it? a new idea occurring to him. "Don't ye know ye broke it when ye were fooling around here? Come up, will ye? Oh, finger nut, but come, oh, come, come up, come up with me!" and throwing himself into his job with a desperating energy, Mr. Spoopendyke missed his hold, fell over backward into his seat, where he sat, glaring at his distressed wife the picture of baffled energy.

"That what ye wanted?" he hissed between his teeth. "Have ye accomplished your design? Got any more chores ye want done before they begin to measure me for a shroud?"

"Don't bother about it, dear," purred Mrs. Spoopendyke, patting his head tenderly. "I'd rather have it stay that open, for it isn't half as warm as I supposed it was."

"Then what'd ye want to make such a fuss about?" howled Mr. Spoopendyke, still writhing under the sting of defeat. "If you're cool enough what's to hinder me? Ain't I a fool to do for that then Mr. Conkling will not get the nomination for the next Presidency, he's the man for President and I'm for various Republican gangs and cliques which control the nomination.

THE Little Rock (Ark.) Gazette is of the opinion that if a Southern man were sought for the Democratic ticket, Senator Garland, of that state, would prove the strongest in the list, but it doubts if a man who in so short a period has won so high and durable a reputation as a statesman and occupies so exalted a sphere of usefulness would desire a transfer to the Vice President-ship obscurity.

MR. PATRICE, who was first selected by the Massachusetts Republicans to run against Butler as the best man in their party, was in Congress when Tilden was swindled out of his election. He opposed his party action, and said: "I am aware, Mr. Speaker, that in the election of Mr. Tilden I cannot almost among my political associates here; but I should be recreant to my convictions of duty if I failed to place on the probable records of the House my disapproval of the vote which it is proposed to establish."

THE organs are one and all insinuating that old Ben Butler represents the base elements of Massachusetts politics and society. Old Wendell Phillips carries a level head on his shoulders. Let us have his opinion of the men opposing Butler. We have published it before. Here it is: "I distrust and despise the Republicans as type-critics distrust and despise a compositor who sowlless carries manspreading in the case of three of their honored professors. They have no right to seek their candidate among high-minded and honorable men. Let them choose a fellow leader from among the Tewksbury murderers—the pollsters of poor men's beaves" "Those peddlers of poor men's beaves" Wendell, you hit them hard that time.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

MR. AND MRS. SPOOPENDYKE.

He Works at a Car Window and Tells His Wife What She Lacks to Become a Summer Resort.

"My dear," said Mrs. Spoopendyke, fanning herself vigorously and looking anxiously around the car. "My dear, don't you think it is awfully warm here?"

"Open the window, then," suggested Mr. Spoopendyke. "Press your thumb on the catch and then raise the sash. Give it a hard jerk, that'll loosen it."

Mrs. Spoopendyke followed instructions, split her glove, knocked the skin off her knuckle, and then sat down in a high state of perturbation.

"That the best you can do?" demanded Mr. Spoopendyke. He gave the window a wrench, but it firmly resisted.

"Won't, eh?" he growled. "Got some kind of a notion that this is the Fourth of July and the right season of the year for manifest independence, haven't you? Come up!" and his finger slipped off the lock, leaving a piece of hard bee-hind. "Oh, hot!" he roared. "Bite, do yer! P'raps you think some woman with a wee hands working this lock! It ain't, I tell ye, nor it ain't any infant! This is Spoopendyke who is engineering this particular lift, and ye're going through the top of the car."

The New York Democracy.

Upon invitation of the democratic state central committee, representative democrats and editors of the democratic press of the state, numbering 250 persons, met the candidates for state offices last Friday. The object of the meeting was for the consultation as to the best means of organization. The result in Ohio, it was claimed, gave assurance of a democratic victory in New York. A majority of 50,000 was predicted. The chairman of the county committees explained the prospects in their counties and thought that victory depended to some degree upon the local nominations. The editors gave their experiences. It was agreed that the present sciheme of organization are satisfactory.

In the evening a democratic plalaux serenaded the governor, candidates, and members of the conference. Gov. Cleveland, in a speech, said: "We celebrate to night a victory in a most important field, and a victory which gives us earnest of one much greater yet to come. We look with pride and joy to the achievement of our brethren in our sister state, and yield to them all the praise and admiration which their gallantry and courage claims. The first battle in the great campaign of 1884 has been fought and won. Ohio in the van calls on us to follow."

Notes and News.

The next session of the grand lodge I. O. G. T. will be held at Lansing.

On one train of the Grand Rapids & Indiana Railroad going north Wednesday were 123 hunters from Ohio.

The circulation of the Kalamazoo daily and weekly Telegraph is larger than any other paper in the state outside of Detroit, being over 4,200.

The prospective City of St. Joseph, formerly running between St. Joseph and Chicago, carrying passengers, is now running from Muskegon as the lumber trade.

David Preston of Detroit, has purchased a village site about five miles east of the Rifle river, and is platting and laying it out into lots, so as to secure a bounus when the Detroit & Alpena engine passes through.

The October crop report of the state shows the average yield of wheat, as far as threshed, to be 14.74 bushels for the southern counties and 11.10 for the northern counties. The aggregate yield will be about 23,000 bushels.

The late Judge Black is said to have received the largest fee ever paid to a lawyer. He argued and won a cause in the U. S. Supreme Court for the New Almaden Quick-silver Company, and was paid a fee of $250,000.

A stock company with a paid up capital of $2,500, has been formed at Roscommon, for the purpose of developing indications of oil and to ascertain whether or not it is in paying quantities. The probabilities are that Roscommon will have a "boom."

Reports from the wheat crop of the Shiawassee district show a bad state of affairs, the crop having been frozen in the milk and rendered valueless. It is doubtful whether the country north of the Unadilla line can be depended on for permanent crops.

Three hundred Russian Jews have been imported to work in the Baltic mills at Norwich, Conn. Their condition is most deplorable and deaths are exceedingly numerous among them. This is but one of many examples of "protection to home industry,"—in theory.

At Mattoville, Mich., Sunday morning, four persons were buried beneath the ruins of a brick wall and burned to death. Their names were S. B. Smith, owner of the burned property, Silas Gee, Charles Bundy, and Thomas Welsh, the latter a lad aged 14.

About the first document which came to light when the burglar chest of the county safe was opened by Collums was a bill made by E. Z. Hartwell against W. E. Parker for "drinks," "billiards," "poker," etc., amounting to over $18.—Petoskey Record.

Charley Foster, after Ohio and been declared lost by the republican state committee, telegraphed to several parties that Forster was elected by a small majority. If Apollo should visit this planet again and manifest any disposition to strike a lyre, Foster would probably be the first man to dodge.

C. S. Hampton of the Independent, has gone to Massachusetts to "stump" for Butler. In his last paper before starting eastward he said: If Ben Butler falls of re-election the public will understand that it is because we talked too many of his supporters to death during the campaign. And if we fail to return within a reasonable time after election our friends will please search for our bones on some Massachusetts fence, the republicans of the Old Bay State having a cheerful custom of skinning paupers and taunting their pelts."

"There is only one way to build up a town, and that is to have faith in it, and work for its prosperity, present and prospective. To those ends every citizen ought to lend a helping hand. If it is not what it ought to be, make it as near right as you can, but stand up, for it, its business enterprises and its people with an unfaltering zeal. This is simply the citizen's duty, and if he fails in that, he does not deserve public indorsement. All that is only when a reasonable level pride demands of every citizen. And if the citizen has that local pride he will not hesitate to make present sacrifice in the faith that it will make his town better in the future. Let all remember this."

The Evening Telegram published by Samuel F. Cook & Co., made its appearance at Lansing, Saturday. It is printed from the old Kalamazoo Commercial material, and it is to be republican in politics. It claims to be called a model of typographic excellence, and must display a good deal more energy in its local department than was exhibited in the first number if it expects to lead the Tri-Weekly Republican of that city. Its general telegraph news are apparently "set up" in Chicago, and shipped by express, while its "specials" are all dated the day before, and were evidently confiscated from the Detroit morning papers.

The following officers of the Grand Lodge of Michigan, I. O. of G. T., for the ensuing year, have been installed by P. G. W. C. T., Charles P. Russell, G. W. C. T., D. P. Sagendorph, of Charlotte; G. W. Conn, R. W. T., Onkerk, of Montagnee; G. S. J. T., Miss J. A. Gunson, of Detroit; G. W. M., G. R. Malone, of Big Rapids; G. W. D. M., Miss F. E. Newell, of Saginaw City; G. W. I. G., Mrs. F. E. Braginsky, of Northville; G. W. O. G., A. J. Metbrandt, of Cass City; G. W. V. T., Mrs. T. B. Knapp, of Howell; G. W. S., John Evans of Jackson; G. W. T., Thos. P. Bottomley, of Capac; G. W., Miss F. J. Bauer, of Schoolcraft; P. G. W. C. T., Cubet S. Pilkin, of Detroit.

Hayes.

Cool days, laying to snow.

Farmers and other persons should prepare for old Boreas. He is now giving us a hint that winter is near at hand.

John A. Bacot is on the sick list.

Somebody start a debating society. We will come one.

Where are your sparksmen? Foxes are plenty in some localities, in this township.

Lorin Hamlin broke the concave in his threshing machine, but purchased a new one, and is finishing his fall threshing.

Several Hayesites have been down near Elk Rapids the past week, looking for something new, but they say Hayes suits them best. So say we.

Sunday school still continues at Fair Groves.

Geo. O. Scott arrived home last week, from the south part of the state, with a fine lot of sheep.

J. E. Clow will teach school at Lake View the coming winter, commencing Dec 3.

Several marriages the past week in this locality—names too numerous to mention.

S. W. Soulier, one of the lively "pull-massers" who lives on the state road, is doing a creditable job of grading the road in the neighborhood of Burgess post office.

Why mind boys disfigure sign boards, and lay obstructions in the highway? The application of a No. 10 bargoa would be a good remedy to make them look out. JACQUES.

South Arm.

Our rain last Saturday night changed to snow. So occurred our first snow storm, but Sunday's sun took it all away. Weather has been cool but pleasant since, so deer-hunters will be obliged to wait a little longer.

Potatoes are nearly a failure, among some of the farmers in Echo. Some that have heretofore raised three or four hundred bushels, have scarcely enough for their own use.

Threshing machines are again located in our midst, and it cometh to pass that what the farmer doth save from the insects, birds, and frost, is used to feed the threshers and their teams. "Such is life."

Mrs. Norman Beal and Mrs. Edgar Wilson have gone to Capac, St. Clair county, to perform the sad duty of burying their mother, Mrs. Stokes.

Miss Ella Helsden, of Capac, is visiting friends in Echo.

Isaac Vance commenced teaching the Sisson school last Monday morning.

Mabel Schofield had an attack of remittent fever which lasted several days. She is recovering.

Babies are plentiful. Boys at Byron Holmes', George Murray's, John Daily's and John Lightfoot's; girls at George McKay's and Hiram Beadle's. Next!

J. R. Vance took the job of building Mr. Shaw's house and he has commenced erecting it, with Peter Murray, of Echo, doing the carpenter work.

James Evans leaves of emptoring a live cosn. It is an ugly sounding animal but James thinks of making a pet of it.

Mrs. Marshall and son, who have been living in New York state, have come back to live on the old farm in Echo. F. A. N.

Chandler.

Farmers are still digging potatoes. The crop is not as good as hoped for.

Mr. Embury and wife were brought by warrant before Justice Hodgie, on Saturday for disturbing the public school in district No. 2, Springvale, but the matter was settled.

A. J. Bush has rented his farm and is moving to Battle Creek.

Some of the "boys" are on their ear because of the action of the board of supervisors relative to stock running at large.

Mr McKinley, of Petoskey, is preparing to get out square timber, in the southwest part of town.

Encourage every enterprise, no matter how small, to settle here. Anything that will give a single person employment is a benefit to the village, and should be encouraged.

Last Thursday afternoon a most disgraceful row occurred on the dock in rear of the dock saloon, between the crews of two vessels. Some blood was spilled, and much vile language used.

D. U. Leach, who planted five acres of cranberries on his marsh near Walloon last spring, has ordered vines with which to plant five acres more. His plants have done as well as he expected during the first season.

Mr. John Cramer of Banks has removed his shoe shop to Charlevoix, and may be found in the building recently occupied by G. W. Barber, photographer, where he will be pleased to meet all his old customers.

Mr. Richard Cooper has resumed management of the Fountain City house, and his many old friends will be sure to find him when in town. Having a large acquaintance in this region, he will be able to maintain the popularity of the house.

A business men's association has been organized in Petoskey, and among the work outlined for themselves is the improving of vacant roads leading to the town, so that farmers may draw larger loads of produce to market. A sensible thing to do.

Mrs. W. J. Bradley has recently purchased the ladies furnishing business of Fisher & Inwood and will be pleased to retain all the old customers, and make many new ones as possible. She will keep ladies' and children's furnishing goods, fancy goods, etc., and may add other lines in the future.

The business men of Mason & Spaulding, millinery and dress-maker, will be found in to-day's JOURNAL. All in want of ladies furnishing and fancy goods should give her a call. She has engaged the services of Mrs. M. DePue as milliner, and is thus enabled to produce the ladies with the latest styles in that line of work.

The East Jordan Enterprise is now published by Falmer & Jackson. Mr. T. F. Nesbitt lawyer takes an interest in the concern. Improvements are to follow, among them being an enlargement, to accommodate inferiors.

Detroit is a good market, the only direct basis for northern Michigan people being the freights. Freights are cheaper from Chicago. Build the Oval road and Detroit will have a great share of northern Michigan trade. Because that the road reaches Elk Rapids Vide Rapids Progress, and then continues northward to Charlevoix.

E. R. Lapham's auction sale was fairly attended, and most of the articles brought reasonable prices. A few however, went very cheap. In fact however, went very cheap. In this there is just one advantage he will not take so much of our money out of town. If he was selling to outsiders and investing the property here, we are just selfish enough to wish he could double his prices.

During the season just closed Judge Ramsdell has sold 1,100 bushels of potatoes. He has also disposed of his entire apple crop according to talent fifteen years of it being taken by tapper peninsula dealers. He has also found a ready market in the orchard for pears and all objects of his fruits. The peaches netted $2 per bushel at depot or dock. Grand Traverse Herald

The subject for the morning service at the M. E. church next Sunday will be "The Hidden Life." In the Sunday school some new features will be introduced, among them the lesson illustrated on a blackboard. The evening service will be a lecture on "Intemperance not alcoholic." The pastor reports a gratifying increase in attendance and interest in the Sunday school.

One day last week Peter Boier, of Boyne, sustained an injury to his eyes, by being penetrated by a very small piece of iron or steel. It was examined by Dr. Carleton, who determined that it was necessary to remove the eye as soon as possible, to prevent inflamation and a possible loss of both. The was done and the patient is now doing well, expecting to resume work in a few days.

J. Milo Eaton has begun the erection of a brush handle factory on the Mackinaw plaza, just above the Charlevoix summer resort. The building will be 24x36 to begin with, but enlargements will follow as necessity demands. Mr. G. L. Leonard, a practical turner, will have charge of the institution. All kinds of small brush handles will be manufactured. This is but one of the many branches of industry which Charlevoix can maintain, if we can get them located here. All are welcome.

A report is current that Boyne will have a railroad before the first of next July. We hope this is true. It will place Charlevoix so much nearer to a road, and "boom" the traffic of the Pine lake steamers. We understand that a gentleman by the name of Bembsley has said that if the citizens would take hold of the matter in earnest they could have the road where they want it; if they did not, he would build one to accommodate himself. It is not stated whether it is to go further east than the G. R. & I. road.

Nash & Gryles are building a general supply store, and a saw mill for hardwood timber on Jos. Le Clair's place, one mile east of Atwood, and quite a village will doubtless be built there soon. Their mill is now ready to run, as soon as water is secured, and the store is about ready for the goods. Everything will be moving briskly in a few days, and continue all winter. There is plenty of first-class timber near at hand, which will keep the mill running for some years. It is proposed to call the village Nashville. A number of residences are already under way, and more will follow soon.

Some weeks ago we mentioned that it was thought that oil could be reached on the farm of Eugene Spaulding, of Norwood. On Tuesday S. S. Spaulding the former's brother living at this place, informed us that from all appearances he was positive that oil could be found there in paying quantities. The farm of Mr. Spaulding is situated on Grand Traverse Bay, and in the particular spot where the evidences that oil exists are found is a ledge of black slate extending from the bay as far as Boyne City, a distance of twelve miles. The water in the bay at this point is of a reddish color, which Mr. Spaulding believes to be an evidence that there is iron there too. In several places shallow wells have been sunk, and the oil and water rapidly fills the well. Mr. Spaulding says that if a stick is placed in the water and four withdrawn the oil that is taken out will burn brightly, and steadily. Some of the oil has been brought here, which when bottled burned with a bright flame. Nineteen years ago Prof. Winchell, of the university, said that there were evidences of oil in this particular locality, and a gentleman from Norwood now, who claims to have lived in the Pennsylvania oil regions, says that the appearances of the country are nearly the same as in the above state. As oil has been struck in Roscommon county, it promises now for some one to develop this oil clean in northern Michigan.—Elk Rapids Progress.

The boiler room will be 24 feet square, built of brick, and the engine room 16x28 feet, also separate from the main building.

Reported for the Journal by Duncan Bros., real estate dealers.

Jas. L. Allen and wife to C. D. Smith, lots 5 and 6, block 7, Mason's add to Charlevoix, $125.

For some weeks past Mr. F. S. Blanchard has been engaged in engraving on wood a bird-eye view of Charlevoix, showing the harbor, summer resorts, Round and Pine lakes, and surroundings, and the JOURNAL was fortunate enough to secure the same, and his had electrotypes made, to be used in advertising our village, its resources and advantages to the outside world. It can be used on envelopes,—on front or back,—and on letter and note paper, with but slight additional cost, and will prove one of the best investment ever made by our people for an advertisement. Those acquainted with our village will readily recognize its reliability, allowing, of course, that it is almost impossible in so small a view to show every house, and every tree in its exact place.

On the left can be seen the residence of Amos Fox, the Fountain City hotel, Mr. Nicholl's saw mill, the Chicago resort club house and cottages. In the center, the principal business portion of Charlevoix, and Round Lake in the center, the principal business portion of Charlevoix, and Round Lake, which constitutes our principal harbor, beyond which can be seen the island, "Breezy Point" cottage, the Belvedere house, a number of the cottages of the Charlevoix resort, and Pine lake in the distance. On the right, the Mason and Upright additions, on the tormer, are to be seen, and numerous residences will be overgrown, among them A. R. Upright's and L. E. Allen's.

In making this view, Mr. B. has shown natural ability as an engraver, giving it a finer finish than much of the work turned out of city establishments by professionals.

In determining the size, it was thought that this could be used more advantageously than a larger or a smaller view. It can be used on the face of an envelope, leaving space below for a small business card and superscription, space enough at the end for one stamp, and can be printed on the back in connection with a brief description of the village and resorts, if desired. It will go on note paper with room below for a date line, and on letter paper with a date line and small business card. In fact can be used in many ways to look well and advertise the town.

We shall be pleased to receive orders for stationery or other printing with or without the above view, which we will do in a satisfactory manner. Parties in this vicinity, not residents of the village, have an interest in circulating this advertisement, for nearly every resorter leaves some cash in the villages adjacent to the Jordan and Boyne front-fishing grounds.

THE MOTHER OF A FAMILY.

A HOUSEHOLD CANTATA.

Characters—Mother of the family, children, servants.

SOLO—MOTHER OF THE FAMILY.

Recit.—Ai, laugh my work is ever and done!
'Tis true the morning is nearly gone,
But still there's a half-hour left, I find,
So now I'll sit down and improve my mind.
I'll write the letter I've owed so long,
Set right those accounts that would never wrong;
I'll peep into Scribner and Harper, too!
Oh! is this half-hour what were I do?

Aria—Sweet it is when the dishes are washed,
Sweet it is when the children are dressed,
Then it is my time when the stockings are darned
But in the hour of quietude cool
Hail! hail! hail!
What though a bonnet be yet to trim,
Or the second fringe, for my Sunday best!
Yet I say that when the daylight's dim!
Hail! hail! hail! of quietude rest!
Hail! hail! hail!
To the hour of quietude rest!

SEMI-CHORUS I.—CHILDREN.

Oh! please, mamma, my jacket is torn!
Oh! please, mamma, my kitten is gone!
Oh! please, mamma, look where I will,
My cap and mittens are missing still!

SEMI-CHORUS II.—SERVANTS.

Cook—Oh, madam, 'tis my duty to inform you
That empty stands the flour tub to-day,
You haven't any butter worth you,
And Arthur's dog has stole the Housemaid—Oh, excuse me, girl!

The 'e pantry door
Cook—The beautiful beef!
Housemaid—Well, girl!
Cook and Housemaid—Oh! powder and shot for the rascally thief
Who stole the beautiful,
The beautiful beef!

Housemaid—Alas! mam, here's your vase of

The way of it I cannot understand,
Yesterday I'm fingers carefuller than value are,
But, lo! it is all to pieces in my hand!

Cook—Oh! please, mam!
Oh! please, mam!

Why the hours of quietude rest?
For oh! It's a glorious thing to be
The mother of a family!
O, a famous!

Jackson's Manuscript.

A LESSON FROM A WOLF CHASE.

Rube Wexford ought to have been a happy fellow. He was certainly considered one on the day when Katie Wilde became his bride. He was the envy of every young man in the rude Western hamlet where the ceremony took place, and many were the good wishes showered on the heads of the newly-married pair for their future happiness and prosperity. Still there were those who not only insinuated, but boasted that the happiness of her choice was unworthy the woman he had won. Kate's father and mother were particularly opposed to the match, and did all in their power to prevent it, but the girl, beside her unwavering love, possessed a determined will which, when once aroused, carried much before it. Rube Wexford was never accounted a strictly-temperate man. Indeed, there had been times before marriage when he was for days under the influence of liquor, and Kate had seen him in this state, and therefore knew fully the extent of his weakness. But the woman loved the man, and unknown to herself resolved that his reclamation should be her duty. That success must crown her efforts she little doubted.

Autumn drifted away, the crops had been gathered in, and all the indications pointed to an early and severe winter. Rube's spree continued. No wind was too cold, no snow too deep to keep him from Washburn's and adjacent taverns. One evening in the latter part of December, he took down his leggings and gun from the pegs where they long had lain, and was preparing to go out. Kate went to him and said:

"Rube, you must not leave me to-night. Give in to me this time and stay at home."

"I am only going for a jaunt," he replied, "I'll be back soon."

"No, you are going to Washburn's. To-night you will, you must gratify me. I am afraid to remain here alone."

"Afraid!" he sneered. Such a thing as fear was almost unknown to Kate Wilde.

She clasped her arms around his neck, whispered into his ear, her cheeks flushing brightly, then sank down into the rocker and cried as if her heart would break. Rube stood the gun on a corner, threw aside the leggings, and cooed, too.

The next morning, when the winter sun beamed upon the cabin, the little log shelter held three souls, instead of two. A woe-stricken one came in the night, a bright-eyed baby girl. Her weak cry seemed to move all the better part of the husband's nature, and his wife looked on with a tender confidence in her face. After a week, when Kate was able to sit up, Rube went to relate the happy event to his great-uncle. It was the first time he had visited them for some months. Very early in the morning he started, and when the afternoon sunbeams began to lengthen Kate looked up eagerly for his return. It was toward dusk when he appeared, his hands and feet almost frozen, and his senses stupefied by liquor. The wife's new hopes were destined to be short-lived. Freshly-made promises marked the sorrow, but days went by only to see them unfulfilled. Now there was a new torture. Rube had forsaken Washburn's and made his visits to Pineville instead, where Katie's father and mother lived. It was almost more than the woman's nature could bear to know that her parents were the frequent witnesses of her husband's disgrace. This was a sort of thing which she could not and would not long brook.

Little Kate, the baby, was a month old to a day when Rube made preparations one morning for a trip to Pineville. Kate looked on silently, for a few moments, and then said:

"Where are you going?"

"Only to Pineville."

"What for?"

"To see about some powder and stuff."

"That is untrue. You are going to spend the day with worthless companions, and you will come back stupid with liquor. Rube, listen to me. I have stood all which it is possible for me to endure. I have prayed and entreated you to abandon a habit which has degraded us both. My pleadings have brought nothing. I remed and will not have our child grow up to know a father who is a drunkard. If you refuse to stay at home, I have said my last say. Go to Pineville if you insist on doing so, but if you are not here before sunset, I shall go with the baby to father's, and in this house I will never set foot again."

"That's all talk," Rube answered in a rough, joking and half serious fashion. "Why, it's fifteen miles to Pineville."

"No matter," was the firm rejoinder, "I will make the start. If the child and I freeze to death on the way."

"Look out for wolves," Rube laughed again. "There has been half a dozen seen lately. It has been a hard winter for them, and they're almost starved."

"Wolves or no wolves," muttered Kate, "I'll go."

Rube hung about the house uneasily for an hour or so, then slipped himself out, leggings, buffalo mitts, gun and all. Kate weren't away and said never a word. He opened the door, and without looking back, remarked:

"I'll be here by almost."

"See that you are," was the reply. "If you come here later, the house will be empty."

The wife watched his form across the clearing and saw it disappear in the heavy timber which circled the same. She turned to her household duties, but had no heart for them. Well she knew Rube Wexford would break his last promise, as he had broken others before it. If so he must abide by the result. She was determined.

The day wore by at a snail's pace, and the afternoon seemed never ending. Kate fondled the baby, listened to her crow and cry, and fed her a dozen times. Then she prepared supper, and sunset came when it was completed. But it brought no Rube. Another hour and still he was absent. So the moments passed until the clock struck ten. The baby was fast asleep. Kate rose from a chair at the cradle side, a look of firm determination on her face, and opening the cabin door, poured across the clearing. Not a soul was visible. She closed the door, went to the chest, and took from it a pair of old-fashioned skates whose steel runners gleamed in the firelight. She had them ready for use and proceeded to wrap herself as warmly as possible. Then she handled the baby in the same manner, kissed her tenderly in her arms, and with the skates slung over her shoulder, started across the clearing. After reaching the timber she left the beaten path and made for the river. It was coated heavily with ice, and the strong winds had drifted it full of snow, but in places leaving a nearly naked surface. Kate slid the baby down for a few moments while she fastened on her skates. Then she lifted her baby once more and started for Pineville, fifteen miles away. The moon shone brightly, she was a wonderfully rapid skater, and she knew not the slightest suspicion of the moonlight night, had made the journey on skates.

Rube kept his vow, the roses bloomed again on Kate's cheeks, and today a happy family of boys and girls feel no touch at shame as they look up with pride to their father.

Oregon's Timber Supply.

The average yearly cut of lumber in Oregon and Washington for the last thirty-five years has been, in round numbers, 75,000,000 feet. Let us assume that for the next thirty years it will be three times as much, or 225,000,000 feet a year. At that rate of forest destruction it would take 749 years to exhaust the timber now growing from the Columbia to the Fraser, and 1,249 years to exhaust the western slopes of the Cascade mountains at an average lumber consumption of 500,000,000 feet a year, there is a forest sufficient to last 520 years, and in that time the timber first cut would be reproduced.

The Danger of Too Much Immigration.

I would not be surprised to find, at no distant day, a general check called on foreign emigration by those above attended with rapid citizenship here. That would not be so much in the nature of a Know-Nothing movement as present as a movement of both the naturalized and native citizens. When they are supporting their paupers in many parts of Europe by turning them into American citizens it is worth stopping to consider whether citizenship here is not too cheap.—Cath.

A YOUNG lady losing hold at a recent fire to stand behind a fire hose would be turned on her, replied: "Oh, I don't care; they are striped on both sides, anyway."

HOW much does a single woman lessen before being considered an old maid?—Clara. If homely and proud of her is about the figure; if rich and hard-hearted, about two thirds.

NANCY, Miss Broughton's heroine, tells her middle-aged wooer, among other things, that she accepts his proposal, "I'd think it would be a sin thing for the boys; but I like you myself, besides." After this artless confession he kissed her with a sort of diffidence. Many men would have preferred to go out and kick the boys.

The average of human life is that women live longer than men. The is doubtless owing to the liberal circles of the tongue, which is said to promote longevity.—Carl Pretzel's Weekly.

A LITTLE incident, which illustrates the half-unconscious feeling which many people have about stepping on the sidewalk in front of the private residences of Mary Somerville. When she died, she had her bonnet laid around their timid mother to accompany them on a sail. The day was sunny, but a cold breeze was blowing, and presently the boat began to toss and roll. "Dear Mary," called Mrs. Fairfax to the Captain, "this is an awful storm! I fear we are in great danger. Shall we put you ashore, Somerville, I mean? Do tell us, Captain, what is your opinion?" The captain, who was a man of few words, replied: "Dead in perfect terror, the lady exclaimed, 'Dear me, is it come to that?'"

The Camel.

The expression of his soft, dreamy, dark eyes is that of a man of much submission and patient endurance ever ready to do your bidding. The camel appears to be wholly passive—without doubt or fear, emotions of hatred or love are all alike to him. He is a willing slave to destiny. He is the sense of the dash and brilliance of the horse. That looking down about with curved neck, bere eye, cocked ears, and tilted nostrils; that restlessness and, alone a racecourse, follow the hounds across country, or charge the enemy; none of that display of will and self-conscious pride, which demand, are a right, to be stroked, patted, petted, by lords and ladies.

The poor camel lends his neck, and with a lather round his long nose, and several hundred weight on his back, moves patiently along from the Nile to the Euphrates. Where on earth, or rather on sea, can we find a ship so adapted for such a voyage as his over those boundless oceans of desert sand? Is the camel thirsty—he has recourse to his gutta-percha cistern, which holds so much water as will last a week, or, as some say, two! Is the camel hungry—give him a few handfuls of parched beans, and a bundle of dried straw is a luxury. He will gladly crunch with his sharp grinders the prickly thorns and shrubs on the paths to which hard Scotch thistles are as the soft down. And when he fall falls, the poor fellow will absorb his own fat lumps. If the hard storm blows with furious hail, he will close his small nostrils, pack up his ears, and then his long, deflocked legs will strike after his sensitive neck through beating dust; and, having done his duty, he will nestle his guttural, and brave, profile, his bleached skeleton to be a land-mark to the waste for the guidance of future travelers.—Harper's Young People.

PEOPLE YOU KNOW.

And Sometimes With You Didn't—Male and Female Cranks of a Mild Order.

(From the Chicago Herald.)

The man who apologizes—what a bore! Thinks an apology settles all accounts with his fellows. Carelessly steps on a friend's tender toes. Apologizes and steps on them again. Walks along crowded streets swinging his cane against people and apologizing right and left. Turns to apologize to a man behind and runs into a woman in front. More apologizing. Thinks he is very polite. Never stops to consider that if he were, the necessity for apology would be removed. Would that he might lose himself off the Government pier or choke on his tiresome "Beg pardon, sir."

The woman who apologizes. Fishing for compliments. Thinks herself a paragon, sir, and that she apologizes for her appearance. At table apologizes for your biscuits. Oh, for something strong enough to reply. "Well, I have eaten better," just to see her fly in a rage and deny it. She will live a long time. Heaven does not wish for her.

The man who cannot sit still. Makes everybody nervous. In the parlor he walks up and down in a fidgety manner if he has to wait for a moment for a lorder. After he is shaved stands at the door and has a hair wondering where he will go to kill time. At the bridge he leans backbiteous and looks cross at everybody. Finally gets across and waits ten minutes to tell a friend how he got there. It is then time for the train, and, being nervous, steps to see how it looks down the track to see if the next train fast enough to get clear across. Great is hope.

The man who looks back to swear at a trucksman who nearly runs into his fingers. Trucksman drives right along about his business. Man keeps swearing and looking back at him. Will not dodge. Trucksman drives right along and knocks him over a block or ten.

Woman who pringes. Disgustingly sweet. Everything she is there—except dolefulness owing to the liberal circles of the tongue, which is said to promote longevity.—Carl Pretzel's Weekly.

For and Against the Sparrow.

In twenty years the sparrow in America has increased so that it is now difficult to find a section of the country from Boston to San Francisco which has not its chirping, noisy sparrow, feeding in the roadway or making a meal from the droppings in the street. They are not migratory, but remain the year through wherever they may be, whether in the Gulf States or Canada. They are in the same, and everywhere he has bitter enemies and most ardent friends. It is claimed that he is not a fruit eater; that he does not bore and drive away native birds; that he is and is not an insectivorous bird, and each of these directly opposite conclusions is supported by apparently good and sufficient observations. Sparrows by the hundred have been dissected in all seasons, and their bills have been found filled with grain or insects, as the operator was a sparrow-phobe or a sparrow-phile.

Dr. T. M. Brewer, the Boston ornithologist, has been the great sparrow advocate. He doubtless has lately added many prominent defenders, while the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, has been the leader of those who are writing down the sparrow. Most of the States have outlawed the little English pest, and in slaughter of it, thereby may care for the work.

The changes against the birds, briefly are: Its great abundance and its ability to do the work of other birds, which are not so numerous as formerly, and which might do better service if supplied with food, as in the old days, in the kitchen garden, the orchard and the grain field; they are quarrelsome, and have driven off many gentler and more useful birds; they are dirty, and have a peculiar odor, and leave a trail on national monuments and on public and private buildings.

Dr. Fisher, the entomologist, gave his testimony against the sparrow, and especially Dr. Coues has declared that the occasion of the bird is a matter of scientific importance, for they are ranging out into the grain fields and orchards, and are a material factor in the crop reports. The daughter of Audubon, the naturalist, also wrote against the bird, and Dr. Coues, who is one of the ablest men in the country, gave the bird a fine, well-deserved, rap on the knuckles.

THE FATHER OF FISH-CULTURE.

Seth Green's Ideas About the Finny Tribe and Some of His Varied Experiences.

(From the Turf, Field and Farm.)

"How did you ever come to devise this scheme?"

"I have been working at it ever since I was large enough to bend a pin."

The above remark was addressed to Mr. Seth Green, the veteran fish culturist, who is known to the entire world and intuitively indicates the extent of his labors.

"When I was quite young," he continued, "I found fun in the finds of trees that reached over the water, and for afternoons watching the movements of the fish and studying their habits. In this way I discovered many characteristics which were unknown to me. I saw, as every observer must see, the destructive elements that are warring against fish, and I realized that, unless something were done, the life in the streams of the country would become extinct. To counteract this disastrous end became my life work, and I am happy to say I have seen the accomplishment."

"Were you successful at the start?"

"No, indeed. Up to the time of artificial attempts to hatch and raise fish from the spawn had failed, and I was compelled to experiment in an entirely new manner. The work was a crucial and serious one, but I finally succeeded, and to-day I am able to hatch and raise nine-tenths of the spawn."

"Tomorrow! Why, that is a larger percentage than either the vegetable or animal kingdom produces in a like condition."

"I know it, but we exercise the greatest care. We do not leave the spawn to take care of itself, as some have done, but we have become also to care for the fish."

The foregoing conversation occurred at Green's house, the representative of the paper was paying a visit to the State fish-hatchery. It is there that the fish are reared, and many interesting sights within and without the building, the fish, the land and the water, are shown to the visitor.

"Now, Mr. Green, I attempted to count them it will be impossible to say. They evidently vary in size, and, as I understand, are shipped over America in all the ponds into very, and there seem to be no end to the supply. We have nearly every variety of the food fish of the world, and many delicacies."

"You speak of trout, Mr. Green. What do you mean by that?"

"I have experimented for years in growing the breed of the various fish and ever working upon it. We crossed the Rocky mountain trout with the male brook trout, and this gave us a hybrid. Then we cross the hybrid with the brook trout, which gives us the finest of brook trout and consequently salmon trout. This takes one of the best fish in the world. We hatch all the ova of the brook trout. Hitherto, when the ova of the brook trout, which gives us the finest of brook trout, is fly, in four months vigorous and fully analyzed, they were allowed to be tried of the same age. The parentage of breed, and the fish were hatched, and the ova are rapidly assimilating what they are."

As the man of science watched the acceptance of Mr. Green while he was giving the information, he could not but feel that he was in the presence of one of the few intelligentsia who, from his and his family experience, bring great benefit to the world. Let the reader imagine such an intelligent gentleman, surrounded by a land strangely resembling that of Germany, and with a white, silky beard and his head great hair, and he may see a man who, if he is a scientist of health, and the reporter could provide to the fish.

"If you taken me the best winter and spring, you would see a fish, and, if you differently," said the veteran.

"Well, I have a practical thing, to look at you, that science was something of a fish."

"I have not seen the fish, and young, young man, you be a fish, I thought the fish."

"How is that? One would think, to look at you, that you had some knowledge of which you know and time."

"I have not seen the fish, and last winter. I went down into Florida to the fall to see what kind of fish they had in their lakes and study their habits and what attracted the fish."

"Well, I have a practical thing, to look at you, that science was something of a fish

Crop Statistics.

From the October number of the crop report sent from the office of the secretary of state, we take the following paragraphs:

The number of acres of wheat reported threshed in the southern four tiers of counties is 261,421; number of bushels 3,372,218, an average per acre of 14.74 bushels. Acres reported threshed in the northern counties 37,265; bushels, 413,796, an average of 11.10 bushels per acre. These figures together with the acreage in May, as returned by the supervisors, indicate an aggregate product in the state of 23,147,135 bushels. The statistics of wheat threshed are from records kept by threshers.

Of the whole number of answers received in September and October to the question which variety of wheat has given the highest yield per acre, 218 correspondents in the southern four tiers of counties answer Clawson, 198 Fultz, 111 Egyptian, and 50 Lancaster. To the question which variety has given the second highest yield 224 answer Clawson, 188 Fultz, 83 Egyptian, and 57 Lancaster. To the question which variety is third in order of yield 170 answer Clawson, 114 Fultz, 63 Egyptian, and 50 Lancaster.

The total number of bushels reported marketed in August and September is 2,927,236.

The number of acres of oats threshed in the southern four tiers of counties as shown by threshers' records is 74,005; yield, 2,217,634 bushels; average per acre, 31.32 bushels; acres threshed in the northern counties 13,735; yield, 356,234 bushels; average per acre, 25.94 bushels. The canvass made by correspondents shows an average of 33.11 bushels per acre in the southern counties, and of 28.07 bushels in the northern counties.

Had the weather during the fall been exceptionally favorable the corn crop would not have exceeded one-half of an average crop. Inquiries made since the severe frosts of September 8 and 9 have elicited the following information: In the southern tier of counties possibly 14 per cent, and in the second, third, and fourth tiers 10 or 12 per cent of the crop has fully ripened. In the first, second, and third tiers of counties only one-fifth to one third, and in the fourth tier about one-eighth, of the crop may be safely cribbed. In the northern counties possibly three per cent of the crop has fully ripened, and ten per cent of it will do to crib. In the first tier 10 per cent, in the second 5, in the third 15, and in the fourth tier and counties further north, about 30 per cent of the acreage planted has been plowed up or abandoned.

Partial returns indicate that on a reduced acreage potatoes in the southern four tiers of counties will yield 67 per cent, and in the northern counties 58 per cent of the yield in 1882.

Winter apples promise in the northwestern part of the state 36 per cent in the northeastern, 28 per cent; in the central, 23 per cent; in the southwestern, 17 per cent, and in the southeastern 17 per cent of an average crop.

Late peaches promise in the northwestern part of the state 43 per cent; in the northeastern, 30 per cent, in the central, 31 per cent; in the southwestern, 40 per cent; and in the southeastern, 13 per cent of an average crop.

Michigan for Young Men.

The generation of men who are just entering on the business of founding a future is constantly on the watch for the field that promises the greatest chances for growth. If there is one that offers inducements above all others, or that appears to, they seek it earnestly. Immediate acquisitions are of less importance than the choice of circumstances conducive to the largest prosperity in the long run. Nothing is so satisfying as to know that one is ever growing in the respects that are prized. Hence it is that the new states are most commonly sought by those just getting their start, in the belief that in them is the best prospect for the desired results.

Contrasted with any of the new states the field in Michigan is better than all. If it is new and cheap lands that are desired, the state has them, rich, adapted to a wide variety of crops and in immediate command of the markets. She has many branches of business in raw materials that are unknown in about all the new states and yet they are entitled to no good advantage as here. The manufacturing interest is getting a remarkable growth, affording one of the best fields in the world. The chance to become thoroughly trained for conducting such enterprises or their subordinate departments, and making one's self indispensable to the business, is as good as anywhere in the world. Her manufacturing advantages make Michigan one of the finest states in which to organize new branches and found additional lines of business. The field for development of creative power and successful business talent is all that could be desired. The faculty for such enterprise can build up these institutions with greater results in Michigan than anywhere else. Young men, make your fortunes in Michigan, for you can win more success here than in any region west.—Kalamazoo Telegraph.

"I drink to make me work," said a young man, to which an old man replied thus: "That is right. You drink and it will make you work. Hitherto to me a moment, and I will tell you something that may do you good. I was once a very prosperous farmer. I had a good, loving wife, and two as fine lads as the sun ever shone on. We had a comfortable home and lived happily together. But we used to drink ale to make us work. These two lads I have had in drunkard's grave. My wife died broken hearted and she lies by her two sons. I am 72 years of age. Had it not been for drink I might have been an independent man; but I used to drink to make me work—and mark, it makes me work now! At 70 years of age I am obliged to work for my daily bread. Drink! Drink! and it will make you work." There is a powerful warning in this incidental anecdote that ought to be heeded by every boy or young man. And it is forced home as a true confession of a life misspent in drinking liquors. They will beat you in the end.—Lansing Republican.

The Bay City Press thinks that the refusal of the legislature of Georgia to pay the funeral expenses of the late Governor Stephens, a man who served his state grandly for nearly half a century, should be a warning to politicians to leave enough money to bury them, and save the humiliation to their friends and relatives of seeing how soon they were forgotten. Governor Stephens was a democrat and an honest man, but we have yet to hear of a republican who has been in office any length of time who did not have money to bury him and set his heirs to quarreling.

Old Mother Hubbard went to the cupboard to get her poor dog a bone, but when she got there the cupboard was bare and so the poor dog had none. She was in a great state to know what to do, for of money she had not a cent, so she said her last suit to buy meat for the brute, and go down in her night gown she went. All the ladies who saw it and the story to draw it, declared it the nicest thing out; so now on the street, looking ever so wicked, in their gowns they go raising about.

Jay Gould has abandoned his yacht, and is now cruising around Wall Street.

An influential list of Michigan democrats shows very little opposition to Tilden.

The Ohio contest being over, patriots can now turn their attention to Massachusetts.

Has anybody as yet suggested Jay Gould as a republican candidate for the presidency?

The printing of the pension list is causing uneasiness in the breast of many an alleged veteran.

George Bancroft, the historian, is still at work, though he has the start of the universe in century 29 about three months.

The domestic purity of Massachusetts is a political bicycle. It is unnecessary to say that Butler has his feet on the treadles.

General John M. Palmer has been interviewed by the Chicago Daily News. He is for Tilden and a tariff for revenue only.

President Arthur lifted an eighty-pound mass off Newport a few days ago. If this is not proof enough on which to run for president, it would interesting to know what the politic requires.

Now is the time your horses and cattle need attention. To prevent disease and loss up the system you will find Parmelee's Condition Powders unexcelled. Full pounds 25 cents. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co. 1-50

Two cent postage will increase the number of letters written and the chances are that after a short period the postoffice will be busier as much as ever. The next step ought to be uniform letter postage and one cent for drop letters of half an ounce.

The Colorado republicans are trying to patch up a peace. They do it by calling each other liars, renegades, cut throats, thieves, traitors and other pet names. All the harmony in the United States is not centered in Ohio and Massachusetts, by a long shot.

Boston may be the home of culchaw, San Francisco the best point to see a good cockfight, Tombstone the champion of the world for down light wickedness, but New York still maintains her reputation as the heaven on earth of elegance, business, things and thieves.

Always Useful.

If you have rheumatism, neuralgia or any sprains, stiff necks, sore muscles, bruises sore throat, &c., Parmelee's Universal Liniment will cure quickly and surely. If your horse has bone spavin, ringbone, splint, sweeny, or any lameness of any kind, Parmelee's Universal Liniment is the best possible remedy you can use. Large bottles 50 cents, ordinary size 25 cents. For sale by O. B. Weed & Co. 1-50

The refined and cultivated north gradually shows itself. The Oil City Blizzard, politely informs the editor of the Philadelphia Times, that he is a cowardly cur, and that he knows it. Both these journals are published in the commonwealth of Pennsylvania, which usually gets republican by 40,000 majority.

No Scrofula.

Can be no despondency, so malignant and stubborn, that Parmelee's Blood Purifier will not be found helpful. It will effect a cure, if cure be possible. And if you are troubled with boils, salt rheum, pimples, rough skin, or any humor whatever, just give the P. B. a thorough trial and you cannot fail to receive benefit. Price $1 per bottle. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co.

There is one dangerous point about necessary Folger's view of a new land issue, he might be all wool enough to issue 3 per cent bonds to replace those at a higher figure. The danger is in the suggestion that the government might pay a premium for the 4 per cents. The democratic platform ought to be millions for greenbacks, but not one cent for premium. No honest money for gambling in government bonds. No premium. This country is on rich enough to afford letting government officials buy its bonds in at a premium.

Renovated by Magic.

Has the lake air and wind spoiled your complexion? Do you long for a preparation that will completely remove moth, tan and pimples, and leave the skin clear and soft? If so, you have but to buy a bottle of Hamilton's Oriental Balm, which is simply magical in the effect and perfectly harmless. It is used in all the best families and gives unbounded satisfaction. Price 50 cents per bottle. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co.

The superior court of New York has decided that marriage licenses and the services of the minister and the justice, in fact, all ceremonies, are unnecessary in that state. A couple living together and honestly acknowledging to their acquaintance that they are husband and wife, are made so by that fact, no matter the Scotch law. In Philadelphia, a judge holds the same to be law. The New York court drew a distinction. Where the statement made by the parties was not intended in good faith to other, but only to deceive others and for mercenary purposes, it was no marriage.

The Keys.

The kidneys and liver are the keys to a woman's health. If these organs are in a healthy condition no fear need be entertained of sickness, for the system will cleanse itself of impure matter. If you have headache, dizziness, loss of appetite, tongue black or white, failing strength, languor, excessive flow of urine, &c., remember they are the advance guard, and give warning to make serious trouble such as diabetes, bright's disease, &c. Parmelee's Dyspepsia, Diabetes, Kidney and Liver Cure is a sure cure for all these diseases. CHARLEVOIX, MICH.: HARBOR AND SUMMER RESORTS.

CHARLEVOIX.

Its Business, Advantages, Resorts, and Surroundings.

Charlevoix, the county seat of Charlevoix county, is a flourishing village of about 1,000 inhabitants is situated on the high bluffs overlooking Lake Michigan, between Round lake and Lake Michigan, and on both banks of Pine river, which bounds the connecting link between Lake Michigan and the inland lakes, and is the key to the whole Pine lake region with nearly eighty miles of shore line. The citizens are justly proud of their town, and manifest a commendable spirit of enterprise and liberality. A writer, speaking from eight years acquaintance with the place, has said that the intellectual and moral standard of Charlevoix people is superior to any place of its size he has ever known. There are about ninety business firms here representing nearly all branches. A few however, are lacking, which could be added, and probably will at no distant day. Some branches are represented by a single firm, and others would make closer competition, more activity and better satisfaction. And this competition is sure to come as the village grows.

During the season of 1883, all branches of business have been good, but more particularly that of building and improving residences. From the opening of the season to Sept. 20, sixty-five thousand dollars were expended, and fifty-four new residences so far completed that they were occupied before the cooling winter. Large as this may seem, merchants predict a much larger business next year.

In slab-building, Charlevoix has just made a beginning. In 1882, there was but one slab-yard. Now, there are three, and the business of 1883 has been more than doubled.

Not having at hand the figures for the shipments during the season of 1882, it is impossible to make comparisons, but the following exhibit will show what has been done so far this year. The figures include only cargoes reported at the custom house up to Sept. 25, and not packages of fish, etc., carried by steamers to local or coast trade:

Hardwood lumber, feet	4,825,000
Pine lumber, feet	3,500,000
Lath	225,000
Square timber, feet	30,000
Railroad ties	56,000
Cedar posts	50,000
Telegraph poles	500
Wood, cords	11,000
Bark, cords	4,000
Pig iron, tons	6,000
Cubic stone, cords	14

The channel between lake Michigan and Round lake is perfect wide, and has a depth of 13½ feet in full length. This gives us a perfectly land-locked harbor where vessels may ride in safety during the severest storms. Between Round and Pine lakes the capacity of the channel is slightly less, but still sufficient for the uplake traffic.

The fishing business is an important item, and there is a ready market for all that can be caught.

On Sept. 20, Charlevoix experienced her first disastrous fire, for which the planing mill of S. M. Sec. Mason & Co., was totally destroyed, together with a large amount of lumber and finished work. Starting on Bonaparte and other streets, the company could not rebuild. Realizing the necessity and value of such an institution the citizens took hold of the matter, and in hundreds $10,000 in stock was subscribed, and steps taken to rebuild at once.

Other industries are being quietly worked up, among them a grist-mill, and a fruit, vegetable and fish canning business. It is certain that these two will be in operation before the close of another season.

The following industries are not represented here, and we should like to see a part or all of them started:

A dairyman could find immediate sale for the milk of several cows, if delivered at the door regularly and promptly.

A crocker baker would get all the trade, for the best crackers we get here are stale when compared with fresh.

All in want of businesses or any kind of marble-cutting are cordially invited to send candidates.

Among the industries requiring hardwood timber yet left, we have in abundance near at hand that might be converted into ready-to-use manufacture of chairs, agricultural implements, and farm wagons.

Handles of all kinds, and wooden bowls could be made here as economically as anywhere.

THE SOURCES.

Between Round lake and Pine lake and south of the main channel which connects them, is located the Charlevoix summer resort. The grounds of the resort comprise about 75 acres, and rise by three natural and well-defined terraces from 12 to 15 feet. The two lower terraces are sufficiently wide for cottage lots, with a broad walk in front, while the upper terrace stretches far away in a level plateau, from which glimpses of Lake Michigan are obtained. More than half the tract is cleared land, other parts being thinly wooded, and the portion farthest from the water being covered with heavy timber, while in the rear of the whole the dense woods extend to some distance. A handsome hotel, the Belvidere house, has been erected on an eligible site from which a charming view of the lake waters reaching far to the southeast is obtained. A number of beautiful cottages also stand on the terraces overlooking the lake. A music pavilion feet and a bowling alley so feet long, have been built and numerous improvements made. The company owning this resort was organized on the 21st day of May, 1878, under the laws of Michigan.

Directly opposite the Charlevoix resort is the Chicago resort, founded by a stock company of wealthy Chicago gentlemen for a private summer retreat for their families and their friends. An elegant club house, a large boat house, and several four cottages have already been built, and extensive improvements have been made.

As a resort Charlevoix has the superb advantage of lake breezes from both ways and when the winds which commonly prevail in a hot lake summer have the advantage of them all. Nature has provided every facility for healthy recreation and amusement, including sailing, boating and fishing; and the measures of the resorts make the most of their delightful location.

The Charlevoix resort has the inside and outside lakes. It fronts one way on the bay or lake, a beautiful sporting ground for small boats, and the other, on the inside lake, embracing area in one charming landscape of hill and valley and woods and clearing. The boating privileges could not be surpassed. There are two long lines of boat houses, many of them having elegant boats.

The place is perhaps not so conveniently accessible as some, but will have railroad connections of its own and long before this may be four ways now, and one of these, the bay trip from Traverse City will always be a favorite, however much more direct a railroad line may be. With these advantages understood, it is still a matter of wonder that so large a business which have been built up in the short period since the offering of inducements was first commenced. The railroad company have pursued a liberal policy in helping the Boomers to get on their feet. It has come to be an enormous item in the passenger department of the line. It has already the most valuable specialty of the Great Rapids & Indiana road, although the business is still in its infancy.

FINE LAKE.

One of the loveliest of all the many beautiful lakes that adorn this fair northern country, Pine lake, it stretches east and south some 3 miles. About five miles east it divides into two arms, extending on its same impulse, south to the distance of some 16 miles, into the heart of south area from the Jordan river, its famous trout stream. Prof. Winchell years ago gave the following graphic pen picture of the lake: "Far away to the southeast for fifteen miles, stretches the placid, smiling surface of the water, in white and pebbly shores shining the sunbeam or in the hills in all its awakening vitalities. The verdant ridges rise on every side from the shining shore line, and add to the lake in their enchanted embrace, while resolved into large distinct or in rapid succession across the receding landscape, till hill, vale, and sky, green, purple and blue, dissolve together in the blended hues of the distant harbor."

AROUND THE COUNTY.

The surface of the county is every where rolling, and in some parts decidedly hilly. It is well watered and is generally covered with hardwoods spring blocks of the coldest water. There is some valuable water power, particularly on the Jordan and Pine rivers. The soil varies from a light sandy to a heavy clay, filled with enormous masses of bowlders. The subsoil is invariably a mixture of that of the surface. Sugar maple, elm, beech, basswood, ash, hemlock, and cedar timber is found in great quantities throughout the county. The principal crops are winter wheat, oats, corn, hay, clover, potatoes and root crops. The summer resorts at Charlevoix furnish an excellent market for all sorts of garden vegetables. All fruits do well, excepting grapes and peaches. The hardier kinds of apples are especially successful. Charlevoix county is at the northern extremity of the celebrated Michigan fruit belt. The annual shipping averages $20 per acre, although the seed produced, generally pays for the clearing. There are no government lands in the market. There were 34 acres of state swamp, 1,066 acres of primary school, 5,326 acres of agricultural college and 42,295 acres of Grand Rapids and Indiana railroad land, subject to entry May 1, 1883. Unimproved lands are held at from $7 to $10 per acre, while improved farms average from $10 to $60, in the interior and from $25 to $100 near Charlevoix. The timber business is an important enterprise in this country. Wood, ties, fence-posts, hemlock bark, and logs are all during the winter, and are shipped during the summer to Chicago, Milwaukee, Racine, and other lake ports. There are several saw mills in the county, and an iron furnace at Ironton. The summer season is delightful, and the resort is a great resort for invalids afflicted with asthmatic difficulties. The schools are very creditable for a new county.

The Detroit House of Correction

This house of correction illustrates in itself many of the evil lines of prison manufacturing monopoly. The labor of the prisoners is employed in the manufacture of chairs on a large scale. The institution has been a kind of loaning house for convicts from all parts of the United States, so that a large number of prisoners are brought together there. The entire annual of labor is manipulated in the interest of certain individuals, and the goods can be produced so cheap as to give those interested parties almost the full control of the market. They are enabled to depress prices to almost any extent and have the power to crush all competition whenever they choose. The subject is of vital interest to northern Michigan, as this important branch of hardwood manufacture has already been greatly injured by the forced and unnatural production in Detroit. An effort was made at the last session of the legislature to effect a change in this matter, but the selfish interests of a few prevailed against the considerations of public good, and the movement was a failure. The private pecuniary interest of certain individuals in the present system will continue to support a powerful lobby and to control legislation directly against the most pronounced public sentiment throughout the state. We hope the time will come when cheap prison labor cannot be employed to enrich a few favored individuals to the injury of our general manufacturing and industrial interests.—Eagle.

Political Notes.

The silver dollars in the United States increased to $314,000,000. Of this $79,000,000 are held as a corresponding amount of silver certificates, and the other $235,000,000 the treasury may be called upon to disburse at any time.

If you think people are poor and hard up, just try to get a little work done for cash. Men will leaf, and hoe and mow and harvest in summer and fall, and when dreary winter comes, petitions will be circulated to raise up money and provisions for their families. Such cases are by far too common.—Excelsior.

The New York Herald has downed the newsboys and the Telegraph is on sale everywhere in New York for 2 cents. The Times at 2 cents has a circulation of over 100,000; the Sun has lost about 10,000 of its circulation, and the circulation of the World continues to increase. New York journalism is now substantially on a 2 cent basis.

An exchange states that a late order of the postmaster general provides that no parcel or letter will be forwarded upon which the postage has not been fully paid. This is an important order and ought to be fully understood. If the card of the sender is on the package, such packages will be returned, otherwise, the addressee will be notified and required to furnish the requisite amount of postage.

The recent failures in the woolen goods and clothing trades, though limited in their influence, indicate overproduction and less surely than the collapse of Shaw Brothers in the leather business.—New York Tribune. The Chicago Tribune which, as a republican campaign organ, did what it could defeat the free trade movement in Iowa, now that the election is over concedes the statement of its New York namesake to be true, and adds "Over-protection is the cause of overproduction. Too much tariff bounty has lured in excess of capital into the woolen, leather, iron, steel and glass manufactures, which in turn have produced artificially dear goods far beyond the consuming power of the country, and the failure and bankruptcy of manufacturers is the natural result. Under the handicapping of a high tariff the goods cost too much for exportation and sale in foreign markets, and the overstimulated home market is choked up, and the manufacturers go to smash, and the workmen are turned out into the streets to search for other employment. A little less protection would have averted these evils."

The wise republican editors are now engaged in wrestling with the vote in the Ohio election. As far as we can make out from the calculations of these mathematicians, the democrats were badly defeated in Ohio. They elected their candidate, but they were substantially beaten. It was a great republican victory. The more such victories the crushed old party has the better. But any republican editor who wants a full list of the injured can probably get it of Mr. Chas. Foster.—New York Sun.

The state board of charities, who were empowered by the last legislature to decide on the location and plans of the proposed new asylum for insane criminals, met at Detroit and selected plans prepared by Gordon Lloyd of that city. The new structure will be erected on grounds of 240 acres, taken from the state swamp land corner of the present house of correction premises at Ionia, and will accommodate about 70 inmates. Work is to be begun at once. It is expected to have the building ready for use by April 1, 1884.

New navy yard frauds have come to light in the Brooklyn navy yard. At an auction held Saturday over 25 and 25 large amounts of condemned cable, shackles and chain were sold by the pound, the catalogue showing the amount in each lot. The bids were far above the market value of the material per pound and it was ascertained on investigation that the lots sold weighed in some cases more than double the amount indicated by the catalogue. By the exposure of the scheme the bidders were nipped badly, as Commodore Upshur ordered that only the number of pounds indicated by the catalogue should be delivered.

It is well known that the republicans confidently claimed Ohio before the election, and in view of the local democratic dissensions, it was generally conceded that their claim was well founded. Even democrats openly admitted that the state would go against them. But look at the result! Nearly 10,000 majority for Hoadly outside of Hamilton and Cuyahoga counties, in which he was expected to run the strongest! The surprising democratic gain in the state at large shows unmistakably that the rural voters have lost confidence in the republican party and are willing to entrust the governmental affairs into the hands of the democracy. They prefer the latter with all its dissensions to the corrupt and unscrupulous republican leaders. The day has passed when either party can count upon its own success on the blunders or even the sins of the other. The people are not only critical in mind, but but they are keen in perception. Their moral sense has been quickened by the cases of corruption thrown to the surface by the Dorsey revelations and the sickening exposures of republican hypocrisy and wrongdoing, and they are determined to take things into their own hands and reinforce if possible the government to its pristine purity and simplicity.—Lansing Journal.

The following from the Evening News, will give our friends who are interested in the tariff question a pointer of some interest:

A protectionist journal speaks of the repeal of the duty on quinine as an outrage. At the time the duty on quinine was repealed, the wholesale price was $3.00 to $3.25 per ounce. Since we have had free trade in quinine the price has fallen to $1.80 per ounce. So the outrage was not committed against the consumers of quinine. Since the duty was repealed the production of quinine has largely increased in this country; two new factories have been established, giving employment to a much larger number of h. than ever before. So, the repeal of the duty was not an outrage on the men employed in its production. If the placing of quinine on the free list was an outrage it must be the manufacturers who are the victims. With a duty of sixty cents an ounce we have no doubt the manufacturers' profits were much larger than at present, but the fact that the two firms, that have become millionaires by taxing the sick, still continue to manufacture quinine is sufficient proof that there is still a profit in the business even at the reduction of $1.20 per ounce. Even protectionists should be able to see that the outrage consisted in taxing a man's medicine for the benefit of two firms who had become millionaries.

Hope for the Drunkard.

If inebriety is curable, as the Boston Transcript seems that it is, by the following method, then is there hope for the victim of this base passion—drink. That journal makes the following assertion: "An intemperate person can easily supply himself with the ingredients needed to undermine asylums, and his own physician, at his own house, without the necessary expense and publicity of visiting the Washingtonian home or any other public institution. His laboratory need only contain a small quantity of cayenne pepper, a pot of concentrated extract of beef, and a few grains of bromide of potassium. When the desire for alcoholic drink recurs, make a tea from the cayenne pepper as strong as can be taken with any degree of comfort; sweeten it with milk and sugar and drink. This tea will supply the place that a glass of liquor would fill and will leave no injurious effect behind. Repeated daily as often as the appetite returns, it will be but a few days before the sufferer will have become disgusted with the taste of the pepper, and with the appearance of this disgust disappears the love of liquor. The fact is proved every day. The extract of beef is to be made into beef tea, according to the direction on the pot, in such quantities as may be needed for the time being, and furnishes a cheap, easily digested and healthy nutriment—it being made to stay on the stomach when heavier articles of food would be rejected. The bromide of potassium is to be used carefully, and only in case of extreme nervousness, the dose being from fifteen to twenty grains, dissolved in water. This is a public exhibit of the method of treatment adopted at the inebriate asylums. In addition thereto the drinking man should surround himself with influences which tend to make him forget the degrading associations of the bar-room and lift him upward. He should endeavor, so far as his business avocations will permit, to sleep, bathe, and eat regularly, and obey the laws of health. By the adoption of this course energetically and sincerely, no man who has the will to reform can fail to do so. Hundreds and thousands can attest the truth of these statements.

THE assessed value of Texas has increased more than $100,000,000 within the past two years. The products of the State this year are valued at $113,766,256, against $85,100,000 in 1882.

A GERMAN man, after nearly jerking his leg off trying to get his foot out of a "frog" on a railway track before an approaching train should reach him, finally had to make his shoe, pull his foot out and leave the shoe to be run over. Just as he got his foot out safely the train went by on another track, and he used his shoe to kick himself with for not seeing that he was on a side-track all the time.

THE new English Illustrated Magazine is not only going to give Harper and Scribner a tussle in the old country, but will board them in their native den. It will be published in England for 12 cents and in America for 15 cents. Harper's sells for 18 cents in England and Scribner for 24 cents. All magazines—then sell by retail for 25 per cent less than the published price. A thoroughly good illustrated magazine for 15 cents will be a novelty in this country.

THERE are about thirty blind newsdealers in New York city. Most of them own their own stands and are doing a good business. Some of them are so active and dexterous that many of their customers do not suspect that they are blind. It is said that nearly all of them are experts in detecting false coin, and, what is more wonderful, can determine almost instantly the value of most foreign silver coins presented to them by customers in payment for newspapers.

AN improved ice-freezing apparatus is the subject of an invention for which a patent was recently granted to Mr. John Bowes, of Halifax, Nova Scotia, Canada. The inventor consists of an apparatus for freezing water by natural cold, the water being fed into shallow pans for that purpose. Steam-pipes are provided that pass through the frozen blocks free from the bottom and sides of the pans, after which the pans are tied up and the blocks of ice are discharged into the ice-house by gravity.

A REMARKABLE feat was recently accomplished by John Murdoch, of Dundee, Scotland. His brother Archibald was passing through a field when he was attacked by a bull, and, being a cripple, attempted to defend himself with his crutch. John ran to his rescue and, having no weapon, caught the beast by the horns, and with one supreme effort gave a sudden twist to the head, dislocating the neck by the vertebra and killing the bull. Mr. Maciccinski was at one time champion athlete of Scotland.

SUFFING BULL is in poor health. He says: "I have travelled much more to travel and to be present at the Cincinnati Exposition, but I never travelled on the cars, and I fear that to do so would make me sick. I now have a long disease, and fear that in a short while I must go to my fathers; therefore the little time that is spared me I want to spend with my children, whose sight delights me. I have ten children and many relatives, who want me to stay with them. Unless fear I intend myself from home that he whites would starve me, or that I would die before returning."

A NEAT little story is going the rounds of the English press about Premier Gladstone's experience with a wide-awake detective who was detailed to guard him during his stay at Hawarden Castle. The castle policemen lost it, some reason been reduced before a Premier arrived there, and the Bond Yard authorities hearing this sent one of their most experienced detectives down, where he took up private quarters. Shortly after midnight of the first day of his arrival he heard soft footsteps in front of the castle, and, after listening some time satisfied himself that it was an intruder. Having prepared himself for a fierce struggle with a conspirator or a dynamite plotter or something of that sort, the gallant Vidocq rushed out on his unsuspecting prey, but was surprised to find that no resistance at all was offered him. He was more surprised, however, when, bolting his lantern to the face of the midnight prowler, he discovered that he had pounced upon the Premier himself, who was just on the point of calling for help. The detective has been recalled to Scotland Yard.

YOTTHEE, crime is not wirkst at in New Jersey by the stern representatives of law and justice. At Paterson, the other day, a 7-year-old boy, while engaged in rolling some cake, was approached by Master Leonard Folden, a 9-year-old sinner in petticoats, who demanded a piece of the toothsome wind. The demand being refused, the hardened youth in kilts whacked the 7-year-old over the head with a stick. He was promptly arrested and taken before a magistrate on a charge of assault. On account of the tender years of the prisoner, the justice did not impose the full penalty of the law, but reprimanded him and bound him over to keep the peace. Next time that boy may be depended upon to take the cake.

CHARLES O'CONOR is said to have recently endured half an hour or so of undiscriminating praise of John Howard Payne. The dreary dissertation led up to a particularly painful version of "Home, Sweet Home," with interjected comments and ejaculations of praise. "Don't you think that is a masterpiece?" the cheerfulness inquired quite rapturously. "I do not," was the blunt reply; "it is disgraceful, and you would know it if you had any judgment at all about poetry." There is nothing more nonsensical in the whole history of literature, the venerable lawyer is represented as saying, than the fame given to Payne for those rhymes. "There isn't a thought in them worth preserving beyond the old and worldwide one of the sweetness of home. There isn't any excellence of language or structure. The piece as a whole is on a par with the sentimental songs of the negro minstrels. The tune is all that has kept the words from oblivion, and that was an old Sicilian air, stolen by Payne. Unrewarded genius? Payne hadn't any; and if he was able to make a fair living, as he did, out of his common place writings, he got all the reward that he deserved."

IN the number of deaths caused in recent earthquake and volcanic eruptions in Java should prove as great as it is stated—a hundred thousand or two—it is doubtful if history records any equally sudden extinction of nature. The earthquake at Lisbon, on Nov. 1, 1755, caused the death of 30,000 persons; and the great earthquake which occurred in Sicily in 1693, killed just double that number. Another formidable earthquake was that of Riobamba, in 1797, which swallowed up fully 40,000 human beings, and the mortality resulting from the two shocks in Calabria, in 1783, was exceedingly great, though there seems some doubt about the exact figures. The most formidable volcanic eruption mentioned in history is beyond all doubt the great eruption of Vesuvius, described by Pliny, which buried Herculaneum and Pompeii under the layers of ashes and lava which covered them for centuries. The fact that the volcano and the earthquake combined their forces to heap ruin upon the unfortunate people of Java explains the exceptional mortality caused by the recent terrible visitation, which in destructive force and intensity may be compared to the violent cataclysms that so often labored the surface of this planet in prehistoric times.

New Method of Pile Driving.

A French paper gives a description of a method of pile-driving which has been successfully adopted in making the foundations for the bridge of Asnieres, Jennevilx. Instead of the ordinary pile-driver a simple framework is erected to hold the pile in position. Attached to each pile by wire ropes are two tubes of about two inches in diameter. These are carried to the pointed end of the pile, where they terminate in a forward tound on another. Their upper ends are in communication by flexible pipes with the city water-mains. When the water is turned on it rapidly excavates a hole, in which the pile sinks by its own weight; but, should any unusual resistance be met with, weights are fastened to the top of the pile. By these means and under favorable circumstances a twelve-inch pile can be sunk to a depth of fifteen feet in ten minutes. Each pile requires, on an average, 200 gallons of water.—London Graphic.

GOSSIP FOR THE LADIES.

Waiting for a Letter.

There stands a lone maiden near,
And into her quiet ear
The wind whispers a plaintive tale
Of a weary heart and pale,
Of a form that is bowed and bent,
Of a voice that is feeble and spent,
Of a life that is ebbing fast,
Of a heart and soul at last
Nearly worn out and crushed.
The maiden listens, her cheek
Is pale, her lips are white,
Her eyes are wide and bright
With a look of wonder and fear.
The postman knows her well—
Knows the story she would tell
Were she but strong enough to speak
Of the long, long years of grief
Of the hope that has grown so pale
Of the heart that has ached so long
Of the weary, weary years
Of the long, long years of pain
Of the years of hope deferred
Of the years of hope deferred
Of the years of hope deferred

A Pittsburg dispatch says that three capitalists propose establishing a tinplate factory at Hubbard, Ohio, to turn by cheap imported labor, as the wages in this country are too high to enable tin plates to be made at a profit, even with the present tariff on the foreign made article. Cheap foreign labor is about the only cheap foreign product upon which no tariff is levied for the protection of the home article.

Alfred Osier, a prominent citizen of Cheboygan, who had been lost in the woods since Sunday, while hunting, was found Friday evening with a bullet hole through his hand and head. He had evidently rested his hand and and chin on the muzzle of his gun and it was accidentally discharged. It was afterwards shown that he walked several rods after being shot. He leaves a wife and three children.

For the week ending Oct. 20, 1883, the reports to the state board of health indicate that dysentery, scarlet fever, tonsilitis, consumption, and influenza increased, and that diarrhea, remittent fever, cholera infantum, and neuralgia, decreased in area of prevalence. At the state capital the prevailing winds, during the week ending Oct. 20, were north; and, compared with the preceding week, the temperature was lower, the absolute and the relative humidity and the day and the night ozone less. Including reports by regular observers, and by others, diphtheria was reported present during the week ending Oct. 20, and since, at 16 places.

The new republican paper at Lansing says: "We believe in the republican party. It is not a perfect party, otherwise it would not be human. It is a very human party. It has accomplished grand results for the country—for humanity. It has committed blunders—but not from "malice aforethought," it has erred, no doubt, but not from lack of principle." Slightly different is this from the republican arrogance of even three years ago; but then the "grand old party" has had a racket or two that has not only improved its beauty, but has materially lessened its conceit. The every-man-his-own supreme court platform of the average republican of 1876-66 don't chime in at all harmoniously with the recent Force bill decision of the United States supreme court through Alimale Joe. We wish the proprietor of the Telegram the average share of misery that falls to the lot of the fools of the rural dailies.—Bay City Call.

The managers of the Ionia prison recently attempted to so construe a statute regulating that institution that they could force contractors to pay a price for convict labor sufficient to make the prison self supporting, but Attorney General Stevens overruled their construction and published the correspondence, thus giving the whole thing away after the contracting firm had filed a bid high enough to cover the deficiency, but before the contract had been signed. The firm took advantage of the ruling of the auditor general, withdrew their bid, and the state is the loser to a large amount. The warden considers the indiscreet publication of the facts in the case by the auditor general a direct loss to the people of the state of not less than $20,000. John Heffron, of Detroit, one of the managers of the institution, was interviewed by a News reporter last Thursday and said: "The auditor general, not satisfied with not giving us a chance to work our own labor, as some other prisons do, and relieve the state of the burden of supporting the institution, has gone out of his way to publish a private correspondence, whereby our weak points were laid bare and we were thrown upon the mercy of the contractor, compelled to take just such a price as he should see fit in giving us. I suppose he did what he considered his duty." He may have considered it his duty; but if we had been republican officers and appointed by a republican governor, his course would have been far different from what it is. It is simply another indication of the policy of the republican officeholders at Lansing to hamper the democratic administration as much as possible. I want the people to know how they have treated the managers of the state house of correction, and to judge whether or not it is done in the interest of the people."

"There are at present living perfect new plans for a mammoth iron steamer to be built as soon as possible, which will be by far the largest, fastest, swiftest, and in all respects best passenger steamer ever seen on these waters. She is to be built for the Detroit & Cleveland Steam Navigation Company and will cost in the neighborhood of $300,000. She will be propelled by a compound beam engine, and with her feathering wheels, will be able to make her time between here and Cleveland in all kinds of weather. It is the intention of the company to have her so constructed that she will be able to carry 500 tons of freight on deck, and she will have in my opinion of sisterooms, similar to the Sound steamers. In compounding the engine it is expected that the new steamer will be a very economical one on fuel, and her increased capacity will enable her to carry freight more cheaply than is now possible between here and Cleveland. She will take the place of the steamer Northwest."—Free Press.

An honest Illinois farmer who called on his old neighbor President Lincoln at the White house, remarked to a friend as he came away: "Old Abe is puttin' on a thunderin' lot of style now, isn't he? Shouldn't wonder if he had chicken pie for dinner every day." In those primitive times our presidents were supposed to live in great style, but they were simple indeed compared with our more recent executives. What would the old farmer have thought had he dropped in on Mr. Arthur, who can scarcely feel comfortable for a month together unless the executive mansion is refitted from roof to cellar. It used to cost about $50,000 a year before the war to repair and furnish the establishment. Under Grant $25,000 was spent in the single year 1870 and it cost an average of $10,000 a year after that until Hayes came in when the average suddenly sprang up to $20,000. It cost $20,000 to get the place ready for Garfield, and it has required $85,000 already to keep the house habitable for Mr. Arthur, who never makes a trip beyond the borders of the district but he sees something that he immediately orders at the public cost to decorate the rooms.—Evening News.

Scarcely a day passes but some event transpires in the business world to illustrate the evil results of tariff "protection." The nail industry is so well "protected" that it overstocks the market regularly once a year, and the combined nail factories throw their workmen out of employment and shut down their machinery in order to prevent the fall in price which the people are entitled to and which the people would secure if the government did not assist the monopoly. The monopoly prevents any further supply from home production, and the government stands watch and ward at the border to prevent any further supply from foreign importation. Thus the nail monopoly gets the last penny it is possible to squeeze out of the consumer. The regular annual lockup has just been ordered, and until the prices of nails is at such a figure as to suit the pampered monopoly, the people of the United States must wait upon its pleasure. In Canada the knitted goods mills have reached a similar stage. They have made more goods than the Canadian market can absorb, and their tariff prevents exportation. They have accordingly ordered a suspension of business until the stocks are reduced, perfectly confident that the people will have to submit. They may be too cheap in the United States and knitted goods in Canada, to please the manufacturers, but for each individual who desires to see them cheaper, there are thousands who would be glad to see them cheaper.—Evening News.

"Sieve here, sir," exclaimed a grocer, treating up with righteous indignation as the milkman made his morning call, "I should just like you to explain how the chalk and white clay that I found in my coffee-cup this morning got in there." "Don't know, I'm sure," said the milkman, "unless you sweetened your coffee with the same sugar you sold me yesterday."

Do You Know?

ALBANY boasts of a 70-year-old bachelor who never uses tea, coffee, cake or pie, and has never been in a gentleman's company since he cut loose from his infantile dresses. His life has been about as monotonous as that of a wooden Indian in front of a cigar store—and he has just about as much fun.

Thoroughly Tried.

After many years of experience in our own family and upon my horses and cattle I am constrained to say that Parmelee's Pure and Unmixed is the most complete remedy for human ills. Colds, Coughs, Sorenessa, Lame Back, Sore Throat, &c., in the human family, and of Spasms, Sprains, Stiffness, Soreness, Bruises on Horses, Caked Bag, Sore Teats, &c., on Cattle, that I have ever known, and take pleasure in recommending it to others. Large bottles 50 cts., common size 25 cents. Sold by O. E. Weed & Co.

Concerning Foods.

There is nonsense talked considerable regarding the value of foods. Chemically considered, it is well known what the constituents of ordinary diet are, and it is no secret that the values of different articles vary greatly. But it is too frequently overlooked that the food which a hunter or plowman can not only relish and assimilate would cause torture of the most acute kind to a person compelled to pursue a sedentary life. Or what the former would starve the latter would live nobly.

Why Suffer?

with Dyspepsia when Parmelee's Dyspepsia, Diabetes, Kidney and Liver Cure will cure you. Warranted to cure Dyspepsia and with 10 Dyspeptics has overcome and relieves the others full possession of your body but remember that "an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure." This fine preparation will also tone up the kidneys and cure all diseases the system of all impurities. Price $1.00 per bottle. Sold by O. E. Weed & Co.

Youthful Precocity.

A 5-year-old boy one evening, when his father came home, unexpectedly asked: "Pa, you haven't found a knife anywhere, have you, since you laid been gone? The fact remains he did inquired why. The answer was: "Well, papa, I thought maybe you might come, as I'm not worth a cent at finding anything." The father saw the drift of the inquiry, and smiled as he went away. "The little fellow called out to him: "Pa, pa, if you find one, find a sharp one; no dull fellers for me."—Hardware Chronicle.

By Neglect

Which is at first but a slight cold, becomes a cough, straining and exhausting the lungs till such an inflamed condition exists, than powerful remedies are not always able to stop the disease and the person goes into consumption from mere neglect. Do not be so foolish but use Hamilton's Cough Balsam, which removes the impure matter from the throat and lungs and exerts a healing influence on the diseased parts. Even those who are in the weeks of their former selves receive wonderful help. In Croup and Whooping Cough it is invaluable. Price 25 and 50 cents. Sold by O. E. Weed & Co.

The Charlevoix JOURNAL improves with each issue. Business men in that town should devote advertising in it.—Elk Rapids Progress.

The Detroit Free Press should be read by every body who desire to keep thoroughly posted in the affairs of the world. Weekly $1.00 per year, eight pages.

During the fog last Wednesday night the barge John Otis got aground while trying to get into the harbor, and became disabled in some part of her machinery. The tug Ada then pulled her off and towed her to Boyne.

Piles have been driven for the planing mill dock, and work has been commenced on the foundation walls for the building. It is to be pushed as fast as possible.

We have been promised the particulars of the "oil find" on Mr. Spaulding's farm in Norwood, as soon as its quality and probable quantity is decided. It is evidently a big thing for Mr. Spaulding.

The Charlevoix JOURNAL seems to grow better with each issue. The enterprise of the place should not allow its politics to prevent their from liberally supporting the paper.—Manistee Herald.

The JOURNAL had an interesting paper in its last issue on "Charlevoix, its business, advantages, resorts, and surroundings." We know of no town magnificent, that nature has done so much for as it has Charlevoix.—Elk Rapids Progress.

Notice has been given by order of the light house board that a steam whistle will be sounded at Waugoshance light station during thick and foggy weather, giving blasts of five seconds at intervals of twenty-five seconds.

W. E. Saunder & Co., of Detroit, have been making a survey of Lake Michigan during the past week for a business directory of northern and eastern Michigan, particularly the towns along the line of the G. R. & I. and F. & P. M. railroads, to be issued about February first.

As the season is not over we can only give a portion of the shipments made from this place. So far this season the shipments are as follows: Lumber 3,000,000 feet, staves of lime 1,400,000 pointels, shingles 17,000 gallons, iron 10,000 tons. Receipts: Limestone 1,500 tons, ore 25,000 tons.—Elk Rapids Progress.

The schooner Experiment owned by D. W. Morton, of St. Joseph, laden with iron ore, went ashore at Saugatuck, last week. A tug and lighter have since been at work trying to save her, but at last accounts she was being stripped, and will probably be abandoned as a total loss.

The Detroit Free Press says that "Cleveland tugs have so little to do that they tow each other around the river for amusement. The James Amelous and Arcadian Eagle had a pulling trial a few days ago in which the latter was worsted. The latter, it is all be remembered was here a few weeks ago, but was evidently not satisfied with the business.

There is a good improver at Charlevoix who is fooling away precious time by staying there. His work shows that he has talent of a high order which can be turned into cash in some large city. Detroit News. Which probably refers to Mr. F. S. Blanchard, the engraver of the bird's eye view of Charlevoix, in another part of this paper. Mr. B. has also on samples of his work on copper plate, and on jewelry and silverware, and all that is intended by the above item is fully sustained.

Just as we go to press we learn that a horrible accident occurred on Braden last night. The facts as near as we can learn are that three young men, brothers, passed through town yesterday en route for South Arm, where they intended getting work in the woods. On their way they stopped at Ironton and while going through the furnace one of the boys fell from a car on the elevated railroad, breaking his neck, causing instant death. The body will pass through town to day on its way to Clarion, this county, where, we understand his parents live.—Boyne Stateman.

You may depend upon it that if the publisher of any paper in southern Michigan does his work satisfactorily he will find enough to do at home without scouting the country in search of job work. The fact is that these fellows who run around from town to town in search of customers can never find any at home because they are humbugs, and no one who knows them will trust their work in their hands. We say let every town in northern Michigan patronize its own printers and help them live. It is perfectly natural for people to look to their home printers for puffs and it ought to be just as natural to give them all the support in their power.—Boyne Statesman.

Mr. Blanchard informs us that in working the details of the view of Charlevoix, he took the large lithograph, marked in new buildings and improvements, and it reduced by photography to the size desired, and then transferred the design to the block of wood with a pencil. The last is a slow and tedious work, and the amateur in which it was done shows the artist to be in possession of a good stock of patience, as well as other very desirable qualities. We have been shown letters from professional engravers, praising his work, and offering desirable situations if he would go to the city. One piece of work received special mention in Scribner's magazine, at a time when they were offering prizes for specimens of wood engraving. On the whole his work is well done, and we have no doubt he could easily find a place "near the top" if he chose to follow the business.

J. Milo Eaton is agent for a mutual sickness and accident society, which provides an indemnity against loss of time in case of sickness or accident. Its hazards are divided into classes, the preferred class receiving $10 per week, ordinary $12.50, medium $10, luxurious $7.50, extra luxurious $5.00, and ladies' $5.00. To become a member of the society, an admission fee of four dollars, and an assessment of one dollar is required with the application. After admission, an assessment of one dollar for men and fifty cents for ladies is made on the first of every month. This assessment covers all the expenses and benefits of the society. Members are assessed upon only for accidental injuries and sickness, and whenever the accumulation of funds are equal to two assessments upon each member, no assessment will be required for the next month. All indemnity claims are to be paid upon receipt of sufficient proof, that being the time when assistance is most needed. Any further information desired will be furnished by the agent.

"Holy Island."

Thirty years ago this island located in the south arm of Pine lake, a few miles above Ironton, was selected as a sort of picnic ground, and an annual feast was held there, in the latter part of August. The remains of an arch or stone oven in which meat was roasted can be found to day, in excellent condition considering age, on the west side of the island, a few feet back from the lake. This island was probably selected on account of its excellent location and beautiful surroundings, as no finer place for such a purpose can be found in this whole region, and during the summer season now parties of resorters go there for a day of pleasure, and never fail to find it.

It is perhaps well known that Col. O. F. Winner, of this place, and Mr. Nelson Daniels of Waukesha, Clinton county, are now joint owners of the island. It contains eleven acres, and they have had it platted into 52 lots, with a street through the center, 80 rods long and 30 feet wide, each lot having a frontage of 60 feet on the street, and running back to the lake. There is room on the beach for an eight-foot walk around the island, which will probably be built at an early date. This plat has been made with special reference to the aesthetic undulation of the modern resorter, and it is the hope of the owners to get a number made before the close of another summer.

Ten lots have been reserved near the center of the island for a club house and surroundings, and a pier extending to deep water is to be built on the east side. The price of the lots run from $35 to $100, and several have already been spoken for. When the improvements are completed it will make a handsome place to spend the heated season.

Evergreens and hardwood timber make beautiful surroundings, and these grow in abundance on the island.

THE KITCHEN FRACAS.

BY THOMAS HUNY ENGLISH.

Said the Poker at the Tongs to the Kettle on the fire:
"Why thing
While I labor away hot and grimy job
You do nothing nowadays at contentment sing.
While with soot I am smutted and black
There your face is as ruddy as ever
Or you go to shop and stream,
With your nostrils breathing steam.
Thought work is all my one
Why don't you work, eh?
But a little degree of coke
Melt more than a little joke."
He was open it, said a gloomy shrieker I am;
"But, I'll strike, if I thinks
Said the discontented Poker at the Tongs.

Said the Kettle on the hob to the Poker at the Tongs:
"Timely thing!
While engaged in doing work like I sing
Or, to give them music, especially I sing
Wider I mine, it is, or sooner,
Never making time or tune,
Thus, with a cheerful mind and wad,
Boil, boil, boil and stream,
Or, if to the occasion fit,
Adagio, allegro, andante,
All above, musical, I can.
Stirring, I think, is a question above,
Neither I become your stirring tongs in the job
Said the musical kettle, if you please."

Said the Shovel and Tongs to the jarring crowd
Below:
"Stiffy fate!
Do you really imagine, warm you quarrel so,
Which of you is the most useful, pray, or easily
Up your tackling, I say, I am
Just as much a part of the kitchen
Some comfort at home your mouth
Or in work, and with a will
You have such big face to fill;
Or, if you prefer, I'm
Kettle, poker, shovel and tongs
Yours, the kettle, is a fine thing and sure,
And in it I have no share
Said the Mantelpiece, and then it said no more.

Then the Poker at the Tongs and the kettle on
Said the fire
Through the kettle's carved shell, convertible sally,
As if shouted from out of a cannon
With the ends the poker wriggled
"Tell the kettle there is a sell,
And its spout, for one, is crazy
Warning of a bad, bad day
There is I know a spider lodging
Under the lid, and I know
Tell the kettle, spider and song
And the poker was quite in a sight to See the Jackanapes say what they only
Never sate long in a kitchen stove, a friend!"

A GOOD SHOEMAKER.

How a Trade Well Learned Brought a Fortune.

I was born in the Lutenbourg pal about fifty years ago. Goodness! how I used to work at the bench when I was a lad, sewing and hammering, hammering, and sewing on boots and shoes. There was that dear old father of mine, with his shoe-trimmed spectacles perched on his nose, who set me an example of thrift and honesty. "Above all," he used to say to my, for a brother then worked with me, "be a good shoemaker. Never some anything. Do the best you can, and do it all the time."

We would work from sunrise until far into the night. The pay we got was little enough—so small that we used to wheln the candle that fattened in the wind and worry over its cost. If we worked very, very hard, and custom was good, we might count a gain of 2 sous each. But sometimes we would all stop getting away, because the poor people in our village had no money to spend for shoes. Oh, how difficult it was to buy a sack of coarse flour or a little scrap of meat! We lived from hand to mouth. Poor old father! Do what we could to help him, he got into debt, and owed at one time as much as 24 francs. What a huge sum that seemed to me to be! What a whole quarter of embarrassment!

I starved myself in order to put a little money aside. One day I said to father: "This thing don't work. I am going to shoe cats. I can't stand it."

"You will leave me, my son? Your old father is an incumbrance to you?"

"No, not at all. But I must go away to work for him."

"It is well," replied my father. "You are a good shoemaker. Your stitches are strong and even. You shape well. Go see the world, and God's blessing be company with."

I went to Paris, and led a miserable life there for a time. I hardly gained my bread at first. The habits of the Parisian shoemaker horrified me, for I had been brought up by a pious father. I was a good workman, however, and after a while found steady employment; but I could help poor father but very little. Oh, it tired to agony my heart now to think of him cramped up in his little dingy room, working away for dear life, with a meager reward of a crust of bread. The habits of economy he taught me followed me then, for I cerpaed together sou to sou, and at last had him in francs. It was one day that the sum had saved him from being turned out of his poor old chamber. "This will serve us," said I. "I must go somewhere else. I am a good shoemaker, and my experience in Paris has given me the missing touch. I must go somewhere else, where the art of Crispin will be appreciated."

One fine day in Lyon I took a place in Perdiman's on English lark, from Havre to Boston. I looked to the United States with joy, for in cents (2 francs) in my pocket. I would work alone. I saw to a little shoemaker's shop up a narrow street in Lyon, with a sign on it, and shaken my face against with a will. I rented one room with a bed in it, and hung up a sign: "Good shoemaker, from Paris." I had a few pieces of leather, but over the door there was a German name. I made bold to enter, and asked Germain to the proprietor.

"Sit down," he said, "on that bench, and sew one on that sole."

"I am a fair shoemaker, and you will see," I replied.

It was a pleasure to take hold of the tools once more; they seemed to know me. Yes! I labored my father there! My boss was satisfied, and I got a job right off at $1 a day and my food. This was a fortune to me then. I worked for six months steadily, and, save for a second-hand pair of trousers, bought by most a bargain, I hoarded every penny. I sent the dear old father $50, and back came his blessing. He wrote he had never seen so much money at one time in his life. But I was ambitious. Just then the California fever was raging. Something told me to go to the Pacific coast. I took ship, and crossed the Isthmus. Just before arriving at San Francisco there was a heavy gale; we came near being shipwrecked, and I lost my hat. I remember that quite well. I landed with exactly $5. On board there was a curousing shoemaker, who had been sent for from the East by a man who kept a shop in San Francisco. I heard him say that he had come before his time, and that, anyhow, if he could do no better, he was going to work at cobbling. He mentioned the name of the man who was to hire him, and I had his consent to apply for the place.

I went to the shoe shop at once and asked for the position.

"It is given to another man, who ought to be here soon, and I can't make one of you. Besides, you have no hat."

"That makes no difference," I replied. "I am shoemakers' wages are 25 a day it was the dash times of California then; gives me $3 and feed on, and only let me stay till the man you hired turns up for I am no more a shoemaker."

The boss gave a kind of grudging consent. Then I sat to work, and slept that night in the shop. When the master came, the shop in the morning, he found everything in elegant order, and I had made the before breakfast by mending a boot. I waited him exactly, for I am a good shoemaker. I lived with that man for a year, and saved my money. I went the dear old fellow of home $100. I on could only have seen the letter that came back! The blessed old daddy wanted to know if I thought he was a speculator. That still he was going to make do for the next three years. There was a chance I heard of in Sacramento. I took my master giving me some of his shoemaker stock. I did a splendid business. In six months I had made for my share $2,000. My fortune was before me. Poor old daddy was not forgotten. I got a cross letter from him this time. The poor, simple soul wanted to know whether I thought he was going to the dogs. Did I want to make him a drunkard, a gourmand, and put all kinds of temptations in his way? Too much money was the source of all evil. I was robbing myself to pamper him. But for all that there was a lot of sweetness in the letter.

Well, I thought that fortune was coming. But one night a bad fire broke out and I was burned out. Error occurred in Sacramento every night, and were the work of thieves. I gathered together the few pairs of boots I could put my hands on, and piled them with my money, all in gold, in a trunk, and I carried it out of the window, thinly just as the roof fell in. For safety security, I sat on my trunk, and guard watchdog-like at the flames. "I have something left," I said, "after all, to begin the world with." And then I was struck a heavy blow over the head with a club, and I lost all consciousness. When I came to I found myself on the ground and my trunk gone. The thieves had done the business for me. Ah, then I gave myself up, just for a moment, to utter despair. I am ruined, ruined forever; poor old daddy." I thought. But I was not ruined, for that night on the hotel was the means of making my fortune.

I didn't cry over things much, for I am a good shoemaker, and that has always a solid capital. I had a little money in my pocket, and I went to San Francisco. I knew my old master would take me back and he did so. I resumed my old place. There was an auctioneer among his customers, with the tendrest feel I ever saw, and, as I am a good shoemaker, that explains all my good luck. This auctioneer had been grumbling ever since I left San Francisco. When he saw me, he was delighted. "At last, my," he said, "I am out of my great misery. I shall limp no longer." At once I made him a pair of shoes, and he was delighted.

One day he said to me: "I had an auction yesterday, and I put up, without getting a single bidder, a lot of very fine French boots. They won't sell, because there is a glut of boots on the market. They were imported a year ago, but the ship is out of fashion now. It was a square one then; now it is a round one. Do you buy them?"

"How much?" I asked.

"Make your own price."

"But I have no money."

"That makes no difference; you may have them on credit; pay me when you can."

I went to look at those cases of boots. They were of the finest quality, and everbuilt as to make. Some of them sized exactly boots, but some were only clumsy horsemen or general officers wearing like? That is an idea! I bought the boots at 3 a pair. The rather were delighted, but I knew that. At night I used to work on them. I made the upper two months for I am a good shoemaker. Some of them I put down into the leathers. Oh, I worked right into them, I tell you! Some of them I hired a small shop, and hung up a few pairs in the window. A Mexican came first.

"How much?"

"Ten dollars."

He took the boots. Then a man passed. "Fifteen dollars."

Then a gentleman on a fine horse came by and looked from his horse at the boots, and he tied up his horse and asked:

"How much?"

"Twenty dollars."

He put down a double eagle. I must have made $2,500 clear on those boots, and I put in my pocket $6,000 in three weeks. I worked on for a year and made money in my trade steadily, for I was a good shoemaker. Then I got married in San Francisco to a woman I loved, and my married life has been a very happy one. It was with a pang that I said to to my wife, "I must leave you, my love, for a short time—only long enough to pay my dear old daddy a visit." I left my business in her charge. It was a voyage of business and pleasure, for I went to Paris to buy goods.

Poor old daddy! There was the same simple in the wicker work basket, and he seated me, for he remembered me. When I was a little boy I stuck a bit of false feathers on him with some cobbler's wax. He never forgot me, and shuffled his feathers at me as ought to be saw me, and if my maid to him had been of recent date. There was hardly a change in the room. There hung father's old watch, as big as a sawyer, ticking away, with a spray 99 a day it was the dash times of California then; gives me $3 and feed on, and only let me stay till the man you hired turns up for I am no more a shoemaker."

The boss gave a kind of grudging consent. Then I sat to work, and slept that night in the shop. HUMOR.

(From the Northern Herald.)

His Successful Undertaking and Escape from an Impending Fate.

(From the Buffalo (N. Y.) News.)

One morning several years ago, just as the dull gray light was beginning to show itself in the east, a small band of men might have been seen deployed about a house on Ferry street, "Buffalo. There was nothing special either in the dress or appearance of the men to indicate their intention; but it was plain that they had business of importance in hand, suddenly a man appeared at one of the windows, lock in the attention at a glance, and "wagging himself outward with wonderful contortions, sound the roof of the house. This done, Jim Bidlard, the mysterious commander, ordered his men to the rear, and, putting his situation, he dodged hither and thither, the officers taking him for the officers, and the officers taking him for the man, proceeded to shoot him until he was literally riddled with bullets, when he fell, and declared that if he had ever officers would need him to second, he would engage the man alive. Accordingly he began the difficult and dangerous task, and succeeded in bringing his prisoner to the ground in safety.

The man who accomplished this task was Mr. Thomas Cavin, the present Superintendent of the police of Buffalo, N. Y. Mr. Cavin is a man who is known by every prominent detective and policeman in America, and he stands preeminently in the front rank in his profession. Quick and prudent in his judgment and resources, he possesses a coolness and courage which never deserts him, but rather seems to the force of difficulties and dangers. Cool, calm, and resolute, he goes through the most difficult and dangerous trials, exposures, and expeditions, by which he has accomplished even more than his fame and reputation are expected. Compelled to be on duty almost constantly, subjected to the most inclement weather, and often necessitated by the nature of their duties to prolonged undertakings, they endure a severe ordeal, and he who experience to a representative of this paper he said:

"Without a shade of vanity I would feel my success equally as well as any man, but I have been very fortunate in my undertakings, and I have had only moderate sickness in my family. I did not take time, they me placed in one of three when pouches, which are mailed up in the "medium." These pouches have no locks; the days are always open, and the prisoners in the "Medium" same themselves by examining them, suppose they contained money, or what seemed to be money, or suppose they were addressed to anybody in whose also the time was short, and I, I suppose! The driver's lock is always in the "Medium." Yes, I think the whole know it is better to two years' imprisonment, and then fell into my arms. How we kissed one another!

"My son, my son, you never would have succeeded had you not been a good shoemaker. Your mother was anything; you did the best you could and the only reproach to be said when I told him of my good luck.

"Like my dear old daddy did before me, I sobbed. The tears fell on my workbench and said, 'No more work for you, old poppy, for I am rich. I have a wife; I have a life to live; I am married after you—and you now to take the cobbler's place, tomorrow or the day afterward, and come just haste out of the old country to California, so that your grandchild may see the light of your and you shall teach him to be honest and a good shoemaker.'

"And may I not make him a good shoemaker?" he asked. "But you go you fast. Let me think over it." I asked ask me to leave this old Lunenbourg, where I was born. I should never see again the grave whereover mother, my good wife, has slept for this last thirty said years. I don't know, I said, I is old. I should be in the way. I force my old trade. Do they wear shoes in California? May I cobble there? I guess you though the bogbrelsha butler me just a little at times, and the manner moves just a trifle slower, still I am fifty and a very decrepit old wonder if I cannot beat you now, boss, let us see."

To please the old man I took up a bit of work and commenced on it.

"It was well done," said father, admiringly. "I see you have not forgotten my lessons. Perhaps that one which there is not quite—ah, you see is at should be. My remarks don't worry you? Still I and he laid out with his shaky hands the old boot near his eyes. 'It will pass muster.'

At last the blessed old man consented to go with me. Next day we took a feast in the village. All the old crones were invited—the cooper, the watchmaker, the butcher, the driver, the tailor and the collector. The curate gave the party his blessing. Oh, what a good time we had! The old man was introduced to every one as M. the American shoemaker, who had learned his trade in the Lunenbourg. We kept it up all that afternoon and late into the evening. It was a feast as that sleepy old town will remember for many a year. Just occasionally I noticed that the old man wandered when some ancient crone took him by the hand to talk about gossip. That still he was going to make do for the next three years. There was a chance I heard of in Sacramento. I took my master giving me some of his shoemaker stock. I did a splendid business. In six months I had made for my share $2,000. My fortune was before me. Poor old daddy was not forgotten. I got a cross letter from him this time. I didn't cry over things much, for I am a good shoemaker, and that has always a solid capital. I had a little money in my pocket, and I went to San Francisco. I knew my old master would take me back and he did so. I resumed my old place. There was an auctioneer among his customers, with the tendrest feel I ever saw, and, as I am a good shoemaker, that explains all my good luck. This auctioneer had been grumbling ever since I left San Francisco. When he saw me, he was delighted. "At least, my," he said, "I am out of my great misery. I shall limp no longer." At once I made him a pair of shoes, and he was delighted.

One day he said to me: "I had an auction yesterday, and I put up, without getting a single bidder, a lot of very fine French boots. They won't sell, because there is a glut of boots on the market. They were imported a year ago, but the ship is out of fashion now. It was a square one then; now it is a round one. Do you buy them?"

"How much?" I asked.

"Make your own price."

"But I have no money."

"That makes no difference; you may have them on credit; pay me when you can."

I went to look at those cases of boots. They were of the finest quality, and everbuilt as to make. Some of them sized exactly boots, but some were only clumsy horsemen or general officers wearing like? That is an idea! I bought the boots at 3 a pair. The rather were delighted, but I knew that. At night I used to work on them. I made the upper two months for I am a good shoemaker. Some of them I put down into the leathers. Oh, I worked right into them, I tell you! Some of them I hired a small shop, and hung up a few pairs in the window. A Mexican came first.

"How much?"

"Ten dollars."

He took the boots. Then a passer-by. "Fifteen dollars."

Then a gentleman on a fine horse came by and looked from his horse at

The Spanish Postal System.

There is a postal office here, and, since the advent of a railway, a telegraph station. Both of these, in one office, are in the town, while the inn is at the station, half a mile distant. The post and the telegraph agent goes to inn office at 1 p. m., and leaves at 4 p. m. At other hours the "administration" is closed. As a matter of especial favor, he may call to deliver a letter or a journey to the mines. I got a letter at 10 a. m. It was necessary to go to the office, to the "administrator's" house, then back to the office, then to wait two hours, and to express a deep sense of the obligation and the honor conferred. The office is not an office. There is no window, no desk; there are no writing implements, no officials. There is a small stone-and-plaster place, having a twelve-foot courtyard paved with cobbles. On one side of this is a closet—a sort of dog kennel. The administrator goes into this closet, and dips out a lot of letters, newspapers and old trash. If your letter happens to be among the lot, if the address is entirely in square, and if the administrator happens to see it, all of which are remote contingencies, you will get it. Otherwise, you will get the trash instead. Of course, you will get and feel cheated, and only let me stay till the man you hired turns up for I am no more a shoemaker."

The boss gave a kind of grudging consent. Then I sat to work, and slept that night in the shop. When the master came, the shop in the morning, he found everything in elegant order, and I had made the before breakfast by mending a boot. I waited him exactly, for I am a good shoemaker. I lived with that man for a year, and saved my money. I sent the dear old fellow of home $100. I on could only have seen the letter that came back! The blessed old daddy wanted to know if I thought he was a speculator. That still he was going to make do for the next three years. There was a chance I heard of in Sacramento. I took my master giving me some of his shoemaker stock. I did a splendid business. In six months I had made for my share $2,000. My fortune was before me. Poor old daddy was not forgotten. I got a cross letter from him this time. The poor, simple soul wanted to know whether I thought he was going to the dogs. Did I want to make him a drunkard, a gourmand, and put all kinds of temptations in his way? Too much money was the source of all evil. I was robbing myself to pamper him. But for all that there was a lot of sweetness in the letter.

Well, I thought that fortune was coming. But one night a bad fire broke out and I was burned out. Error occurred in Sacramento every night, and were the work of thieves. I gathered together the few pairs of boots I could put my hands on, and piled them with my money, all in gold, in a trunk, and I carried it out of the window thinly just as the roof fell in. For safety security, I sat on my trunk, and guard watchdog-like at the flames. "I have something left," I said, "after all, to begin the world with." And then I was struck a heavy blow over the head with a club, and I lost all consciousness. When I came to I found myself on the ground and my trunk gone. The thieves had done the business for me. Ah, then I gave myself up, just for a moment, to utter despair. "I am ruined, ruined forever; poor old daddy." I thought. But I was not ruined, for that night on the hotel was the means of making my fortune.

I didn't cry over things much, for I am a good shoemaker, and that has always a solid capital. I had a little money in my pocket, and I went to San Francisco. A DETECTIVE'S EXPERIENCE.

His Successful Undertaking and Escape from an Impending Fate.

(From the Buffalo (N. Y.) News.)

One morning several years ago, just as the dull gray light was beginning to show itself in the east, a small band of men might have been seen deployed about a house on Ferry street, "Buffalo. There was nothing special either in the dress or appearance of the men to indicate their intention; but it was plain that they had business of importance in hand. Suddenly a man appeared at one of the windows, lock in the attention at a glance, and "wagging himself outward with wonderful contortions, sound the roof of the house. This done, Jim Bidlard, the mysterious commander, ordered his men to the rear, and, putting his situation, he dodged hither and thither, the officers taking him for the officers, and the officers taking him for the man, proceeded to shoot him until he was literally riddled with bullets, when he fell, and declared that if he ever officers would need him to second, he would engage the man alive. Accordingly he began the difficult and dangerous task, and succeeded in bringing his prisoner to the ground in safety.

The man who accomplished this task was Mr. Thomas Cavin, the present Superintendent of the police of Buffalo, N. Y. Mr. Cavin is a man who is known by every prominent detective and policeman in America, and he stands preeminently in the front rank in his profession. Quick and prudent in his judgment and resources, he possesses a coolness and courage which never deserts him, but rather seems to the force of difficulties and dangers. Cool, calm, and resolute, he goes through the most difficult and dangerous trials, exposures, and expeditions, by which he has accomplished even more than his fame and reputation are expected. Compelled to be on duty almost constantly, subjected to the most inclement weather, and often necessitated by the nature of their duties to prolonged undertakings, they endure a severe ordeal, and he who experience to a representative of this paper he said:

"Without a shade of vanity I would feel my success equally as well as any man, but I have been very fortunate in my undertakings, and I have had only moderate sickness in my family. I did not take time, they me placed in one of three when pouches, which are mailed up in the "medium." These pouches have no locks; the days are always open, and the prisoners in the "Medium" same themselves by examining them, suppose they contained money, or what seemed to be money, or suppose they were addressed to anybody in whose also the time was short, and I, I suppose! The driver's lock is always in the "Medium." Yes, I think the whole know it is better to two years' imprisonment, and then fell into my arms. How we kissed one another!

"My son, my son, you never would have succeeded had you not been a good shoemaker. Your mother was anything; you did the best you could and the only reproach to be said when I told him of my good luck.

"Like my dear old daddy did before me, I sobbed. The tears fell on my workbench and said, 'No more work for you, old poppy, for I am rich. I have a wife; I have a life to live; I am married after you—and you now to take the cobbler's place, tomorrow or the day afterward, and come just haste out of the old country to California, so that your grandchild may see the light of your and you shall teach him to be honest and a good shoemaker.'

"And may I not make him a good shoemaker?" he asked. "But you go too fast. Let me think over it." I asked ask me to leave this old Lunenbourg, where I was born. I should never see again the grave whereover mother, my good wife, has slept for this last thirty said years. I don't know, I said, I is old. I should be in the way. I force my old trade. Do they wear shoes in California? May I cobble there? I guess you though the bogbrelsha butler me just a little at times, and the manner moves just a trifle slower, still I am fifty and a very decrepit old wonder if I cannot beat you now, boss, let us see."

To please the old man I took up a bit of work and commenced on it.

"It was well done," said father, admiringly. "I see you have not forgotten my lessons. Perhaps that one which there is not quite—ah, you see is at should be. My remarks don't worry you? Still I and he laid out with his shaky hands the old boot near his eyes. 'It will pass muster.'

At last the blessed old man consented to go with me. Next day we took a feast in the village. All the old crones were invited—the cooper, the watchmaker, the butcher, the driver, the tailor and the collector. The curate gave the party his blessing. Oh, what a good time we had! The old man was introduced to every one as M. the American shoemaker, who had learned his trade in the Lunenbourg. We kept it up all that afternoon and late into the evening. It was a feast as that sleepy old town will remember for many a year. Just occasionally I noticed that the old man wandered when some ancient crone took him by the hand to talk about gossip. That still he was going to make do for the next three years. There was a chance I heard of in Sacramento. I took my master giving me some of his shoemaker stock. I did a splendid business. In six months I had made for my share $2,000. My fortune was before me. Poor old daddy was not forgotten. I got a cross letter from him this time. The Age of Trees.

Usually the age of trees is determined by the number of rings added every year to their circumference. But this is no certain test, for they constantly develop very unequally from their center, so that in specimens preserved in museums great inequality in the rings may be seen. For example, in Kew there is a specimen in which there are 250 rings upon one side to 172 on the other. The largest number of rings ever counted was upon an oak felled in 1812, when they amounted to 710. But even in estimating the age of this particular tree an allowance of 300 years was made to cover the remaining rings which it was no longer possible to count. Such a computation in this manner is in reality to little more than guesswork, and leaves us very much at the conclusion at which Pliny arrived centuries ago, that "the life of some trees may be believed to be prodigious."—Lechange.

The Enterprise figures out $56,450 in improvements this year.

The schooner Sophia Bonner, of Beaver Island, came in Tuesday morning with 1,500 bushels of wheat.—Progress.

A three-year-old child of Fritz Grobi, of Elk Rapids, was burned to death Wednesday; the clothing caught from a bonfire.

W. J. Lewis killed a porker the other day that weighed, when dressed, 556 lbs. He was one year and seven months old.—Statesman.

Ira Bartlett, of Whitewater, has sent the Herald a blood beet, grown from a single root, and weighing 13½ pounds.—Grand Traverse Herald.

Miss Cherrie, of Chicago, will in the future have charge of the Iron Cove store. She will have several assistants from Chicago, including a telegraph operator.—Enterprise.

The steamer J. J. Morley has laid up for the season—or rather until all other boats are off the bay and then she will make trips to Traverse City around the point.—Progress.

C. P. Avery has shipped this fall, from Norwood, to Vick's seed house, Rochester, N. Y., 3,000 bushels of seed peas, and to Rockford, Ill., 2,000 bushels.—Grand Traverse Herald.

Col. Wasson, of Charlevoix, was in town one day last week and purchased a lot of Nicholas Morgan. We understand it is the Col's intention to erect a residence upon the lot soon.—Statesman.

J. W. Plummer, employed at Plummer's mill Bay Springs, had the misfortune to get his arm in contact with a belt in the mill last week and the result was a fractured fore arm. Dr. Sanderson set the limb.—Statesman.

Dr. H. P. Snyder, who for the past two and a half years has been located at Charlevoix, has located permanently in Traverse City, occupying the rooms lately used by Dr. Sifton in George F. Stephens' building on Front street.—G. T. Eagle.

Hard-wood manufacturing enterprises are starting in all directions throughout Northern Michigan. Saw mills, handle factories, wooden bowl factories, stave mills and a variety of similar enterprises are being established all along the lines of railroad.

During the last two weeks the farmers of Old Mission have shipped to D. M. Ferry, seedsman, of Detroit, 2,000 barrels of potatoes. These were taken by steamer Grand Rapids to St. Ignace and there reshipped to Detroit.—Grand Traverse Herald.

A. B. Noyes, proprietor of the Pioneer house, Ironton, is making preparations to enlarge his hotel. He intends to raise it two stories, with an addition in the rear. The two front rooms below will be used as ladies' and gents' parlors, with a smoking room in the rear.—Enterprise.

Hotel changes were in order yesterday. Mr. Rogers purchases from the Arlington company and Mr. J. R. Hayes bought in. The firm will therefore be composed of H. O. Rose, William Mills, and J. R. Hayes. Mr. Hayes also leased the Occidental and took possession yesterday. Mr. Steph ens going south last night.—Record.

At last we are out of the woods. After this time, for February next we are to receive two mails daily from the south and north, while the route between this place and Charlevoix has been increased from a tri-weekly to a daily, and a semi-weekly from here to Hortons Bay and Undine. Good enough for us.—Statesman.

The railroad company are thinking quite strongly of running the elmir car on day trains and the sleepers on night trains to Traverse City, instead of up on the main line, through here and on to Mackinaw. The reason for this is that the greater part of the patronage received by these cars comes off of that line.—Petoskey Democrat.

One day last week L. Philips, living on a farm, was leading a cow with a rope when, by some means, his thumb was caught between the first and second joints, severing the thumb completely, missing the accident a very painful one. Mr. Phillips immediately started for town and Dr. Sanderson, assisted by Dr. Brown, amputated the remaining portion of the thumb at the knuckle joint.—Statesman.

John A. Mitchell is just finishing up his second survey for the proposed Ludington harbor of refuge under orders from Washington. That Ludington is in line for a harbor of refuge is virtually settled, and the only difference that may be made in regard to the matter, is in regard to the plans and amount of appropriation. The Ludington petition called for improvements which would cost $1,500,000, and this amount seemed too large by the department, yet the amount of $650,000, is now spoken of to complete the proposed improvement.—Ludington Telegraph.

It is generally understood that the Michigan Central people have vainly tried for one or two seasons to make some arrangements for exchange tickets with the G. R. & I. management. Perhaps that will account for the report that a corps of engineers will this week commence a survey from some point on their line into Petoskey. Whether that be the reason or not, the report is certainly well founded, and the survey is certainly being made.—Record.

Last Saturday morning a Star was discovered approaching our town, of which we are sure northerners have taken no note (the Star, not the town), and though it does not excel in brilliancy the famous north star so dear to the heart of the mariner, yet to us it is a star of the first magnitude, as our town is included in its orbit. Long may it twinkle on the lesson of Pine Lake and prove a source of pleasure and profit to her brave captain and his patrons.—Statesman.

The Michigan Central railroad company have made preparations for safe transportation across the straits this winter on the Mackinaw division by improving and greatly strengthening the transfer Algomah, which has that recently returned from Detroit, where she has been in dock for some time undergoing extensive repairs. The heavy iron plate with which she was encased originally was, during the terribly severe weather of last winter, discovered to be too light for service, and much of the damage she sustained was due mainly to this cause. This season she is fitted with much heavier armor and her engineers express their confidence in her ability to navigate in the severest weather.—Bay City Press.

The amount of the shortage in the accounts of Elias Palmer, the absconding county treasurer, is estimated at $1,254.57. This amount his bondsmen are compelled to "chalk up," so the county will lose nothing. No word has been heard of E. Palmer, and his whereabouts is a matter of conjecture. Although Mr. Palmer has disgraced himself and those who trusted in him, we cannot help feeling compassionate towards him. Of a pliable and accommodating disposition, he has been lead into transactions that have proven his ruin. The prime cause of his downfall was the wine cup. And the same causes which led him on are sure to lead others, are now, and will be the ruin of thousands of good men.—Independent.

A hundred men or more are still at work on the asylum. Before winter the entire foundation walls will be laid, and for two-thirds the length of the building the brick work of the first story is well advanced. But little more brick work will be done this season, the entire force being put upon the completion of the stone foundation work at the south end. This is already laid out and well defined, and the great building now begins to show what it will be when completed. As far as the work has gone both the brick and stone work make a very handsome appearance. There will be no handsomer fixed brick building in the state than this, made as it is, from Grand Traverse brick, manufactured within three miles of the asylum grounds. Should the weather remain as fine as now, for three or four weeks longer, the season's work will be completed in a most satisfactory manner. Another year will complete the walls and the roof.—Grand Traverse Herald.

Waugoshance Light.

The last of the working party employed in repairing the light-house and erecting a fog signal house at Waugoshance Pier, Straits of Mackinac, have arrived in Detroit, having been on the pier two months. There were thirty-nine men in all employed at the work, though not all for the whole time.

This pier is on the most exposed point on the whole lakes, a southeast wind throwing spray twenty feet over the lantern which is about ninety feet above the lake. In freezing weather the ice envelops the whole pier and in winter the only thing visible is a great mound of ice, with nothing but the upper half of the tower in sight, the house, pier and boat house being covered. The action of the ice cut into the brick work throwing down large pieces of masonry work, and by crushing in the crib threatened the destruction of the structure. Sixteen years ago the foundation was renewed by sinking a caisson and building up with cut stone from fifteen feet above the lake. On this was built the dwelling house. The old pier, 100 feet square and ten feet high, still surrounds the stone work, though a few seasons will see the last of it so possessed that it strikes against the stone work in a heavy sea.

It was decided to repair the tower and dwelling, by building a casing of three-eight-inch boiler iron around the whole, leaving space enough for holding on the rivets and filling the space with concrete. The job was done by contract, the bids being opened July 1, the Buhl Iron Works being the lowest bidder at $23,000. Arrangements were then taken and the sheets of the boiler plate were all punched and bent at the shop in this city. There were about 24,000 holes punched, only four of which had to be repunched, at the pier.

The materials used in the job were: 136,000 pounds of iron, 120 barrels of patent cement 350 barrels of sand, 360 pounds of stone, 20,000 brick, fifty barrels of lime, two boilers 42x12, two fog signals, engines 4x6, with all the valves, pumps, pipes, whistles and other tools and appliances for erecting the work, beside the large amount of provisions consumed by the men.

The difficulties of the work were great, every rain or heavy sea driving the men from the pier, and as the scaffolds were sixty feet high, work could not be carried on in a high wind. At one time the weather was so bad that two weeks elapsed during which no communication could be had with the shore a mile and a half distant, from which sand and stone were obtained, and no mail or materials could be brought from Mackinaw. But in spite of these obstacles and a large amount of sickness on the pier, six men having to be sent home on that account, the job is at last completed three weeks before the specified time. The fog signal house is of three-eights boiler iron, tightly riveted and calked. It is in a radius of twenty feet, the center of which is the tower, being fifteen feet wide and two-thirds of a circle, the coal bunkers occupying the corners.

The whole structure is painted with a coating of brown mineral paint. The boiler iron casing of the tower is sixty-two feet high from the stone foundation. The fog signals are duplication with boilers set in brick work. They are so arranged that they make two blasts of about four seconds duration in a minute. The whistles are ten inches in diameter, a duplicate of those used on the lake. The fog bell which was heretofore used, has been removed. It would seem that the light-house on this more exposed situation was now finished for generations, as nothing but an earthquake or tornado can cause it, and it would be safe to give the light-house the odds against an average tornado.—Detroit Free Press.

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.: HARBOR AND SUMMER RESORTS.

Charlevoix, the county seat of Charlevoix county, is a flourishing village of about 1,500 inhabitants is situated on the high bluffs overlooking Lake Michigan, between Round lake and Lake Michigan, and on both banks of Pine river, which forms the connecting link between Lake Michigan and the inland lakes, and is the key to the whole Pine lake region with nearly eighty miles of shore line. The citizens are justly proud of their town, and manifest a commendable spirit of enterprise and liberality. A writer, speaking from eight years acquaintance with the place, has said that the intellectual and moral standard of Charlevoix people is superior to any place of its size he has ever known. There are about ninety business firms here, representing nearly all branches. A few have, or are doing, which could be added, and probably will at no distant day. Some branches are represented by a single firm, and others would make closer competition, more activity, and better satisfaction. And this competition is sure to come as the village grows.

The channel between Lake Michigan and Round lake is the favorable, and has a depth of 18x4 feet its full length. This gives us a perfectly land-locked harbor where vessels may ride in safety during the severest storms. Between Round and Pine lakes the capacity of the channel is slightly less, but still sufficient for the lake traffic.

The following industries are represented here, and we should like to see a part or all of them started:

A dairyman could find immediate sale for the milk of several cows, if delivered at the door regularly and promptly.

A cracker baker would get all the trade, for the best crackers we get here are made when conveyed with fresh.

All kinds of tombstones or any kind of marble ornamenting are called to send estimate.

Among the industries requiring hardwood timber (which we have in abundance near at hand) that might be successful here are the manufacture of chairs, agricultural implements, and farm wagons.

Handles of all kinds, and wooden bowls could be made here as economically as anywhere.

THE RESORTS.

Between round lake and Pine lake and south of the main channel which connects them, is located the Charlevoix summer resort. The grounds of the resort comprise about 25 acres, and rise by three natural and well-defined terraces from Pine lake. The top terrace is quite sufficiently wide for cottage lots, with a broad walk in front, while the upper terrace stretches far away in a level plateau, from which glimpses of Lake Michigan are obtained. More than half the tract is cleared land, other parts being thinly wooded, and the portion facing Round lake being covered with heavy timber, while in the rear of the whole the dense woods extend to more center. A handsome hotel, the Belvedere house, has been erected on an eighty site, from which a charming view of the blue waters reaching far to the southeast is obtained. A number of beautiful cottages also stand upon terraces overlooking the lake. A music hall 30x50 feet and a bowling alley 40 feet long, have been built and numerous improvements made. The company owning this resort was organized on the 21st day of May, 1873, under the laws of Michigan.

Directly opposite the Charlevoix resort is the Chicago resort, founded by a stock company of wealthy Chicago gentlemen for a private summer retreat for their families and their friends. An elegant club house, a large boat house, and several fine cottages have already been built, and extensive improvements have been begun.

As a resort Charlevoix has the superior advantage of lake breezes from both ways and with the winds which commonly prevail in a Michigan summer has the advantage of them all. In landscape surroundings no one of the inland lakes, one of the prettiest sheets in the west, in this respect it could scarcely be improved. Nature has provided every facility for health recreation and amusement, including unrivaled bathing and boating, and the managers of the resorts make the most of their delightful location.

PINE LAKE.

One of the loveliest of all the many beautiful lakes that adorn this fair northern country is Pine lake. It stretches east and south some 9 miles. About five miles east it divides into two arms, extending, as the name implies, south, at the distance of some 3 miles, to form the east end of south arm flows the Jordan river, 15 miles from mouth. Post, Windmill years ago gave the following graphic pen picture of Pine lake: "Far away in the southeast for fifteen miles, stretches the lake, smiling earlier in the winter, its white and pebbly shores chasing the contour of the hills in all its sinuosity and beauty. The verdant ridges rise on every side from the shining shore line, and hold the lake in their enchanted embrace, while rounded hill tops bubble up in rapid succession across the retiring landscape, till hill, vale, and shade, green, purple and blue, dissolve together in the blended hues of the distant horizon.

AROUND THE COUNTY.

The surface of the county is every where rolling, and in some parts decidedly hilly. It is well watered and is generally covered with hardwood timber, which we have in abundance near at hand that might be successful here are the manufacture of chairs, agricultural implements, and farm wagons.

Handles of all kinds, and wooden bowls could be made here as economically as anywhere.

THE fashionable society of New York is in mourning because Mrs. Bonanza Mackay is to remain in Paris another winter, instead of coming there as promised. The latest news of Mrs. Mackay is that she has rented two houses at the Theater Italien for the season at the moderate price of $10,000.

JONATHAN C. BOWLES, who recently died poor and friendless in the Cleveland (Ohio) city infirmary, at the age of 75 years, was twice worth $100,000, it is said, and had both fortunes in real estate speculations. Among his few effects was found a copy of Will Carleton's poem, "Over the Hill to the Poorhouse."

JOHN LEACH, of Yarmouth, England, says the London Athenæum, has had the inscription over the tomb of the grandfather of Abraham Lincoln, at Norwich, photographed for friends of the family. The inscription is as follows: "In memory of Mr. Abraham Lincoln, of this parish, who died July 13, 1736, aged 72 years; and Hannah, his daughter, who died September 23, 1736, aged 6 years.

From Thee, great God, we spring, to Thee we tend;
Path, mother, globe, original, and end."

F. B. BABBER, owner of Longfellow and Ten Broeck, said a few days ago: "Longfellow is now 16 years old and Ten Broeck 12. I always keep a guard over them both night and day. I have been offered $50,000 for Longfellow, but I wouldn't sell him for $100,000, nor would I sell Ten Broeck for the same money. I will keep them as long as they live or until I die. I am not married, but I have some pow kin down in Woodford county who would like to have them."

CRACKED earthenware should never be used for domestic purposes. It is as safe rule in good housekeeping to break any fractured stoneware to pieces and render them quite unfitted for any employment as utensils. In a paper read before the Academy of Sciences, Paris, M. E. Peyrusson demonstrated very clearly how the germs of cholera, typhoid fever and similar diseases may be preserved and communicated by even the slightest crack or fissure, which may be caused by very trifling accidents to crockery and faïence.

TWO YEARS ago two Cincinnati policemen found on their beat a little black dog with one of its legs broken and unable to walk. They took the animal to the station and splinted up the broken limb, and in a few days he was all right again. Ever since then the dog has clung to the officers, remaining with them on their rounds all night long and taking lunch with them. During the day he sits up at a shoemaker's shop on the beat, but when darkness comes on he starts out and soon finds his friends, and never leaves them until morning.

BURNIA, the deceased historian, was very fond of chess. Speaking of a slow and poor chess player, he said: "The slowness of genius is hard to bear, but the slowness of mediocrity is intolerable." His opinion of one of the lesser stars was thus couched: "He is no player. Chess begins just where he leaves off." He thus describes a talkative and meddling spectator: "He looks on a knight stronger than he can play." He said that two qualities were essential to a good chess player, imagination and a facility for calculation. It was the same sort of gift that a painter or a landscape painter possessed, and was no criterion at all of intellect and capacity.

THERE is a well-defined and growing belief that the timber supply of the United States is soon to amount to the sum total, and those who have studied the subject argue that seven or ten years hence will see all our great forests swept away. And now the agitators are at work to mathematically determine how long our coal supply will last. There is very little cause for alarm in this particular. Nature has provided plenty of fuel for all time, and when the supply gives out the millennium will have long been over and few of us will have gone to one or the other of two places, at neither of which is coal or kindling necessary. In the State of Pennsylvania alone are 320,000 square miles of coal, with billions of tons yet to be mined. And there is scarcely a State or Territory west of the Allegheny mountains which has not millions of acres of coal underlying its soil.

KATRINA and Sophia Schmidt have arrived at Castle Garden under peculiarly distressing circumstances. Their father came to America some months ago. Recently his wife, left in Germany, found herself unable to support her children, so she coaxed half to forward these two—aged 6 and 9—to their father. She put them on board the ship, giving in charge of the older child, as she thought, a purse containing the name and address of the father. When the paper was inspected at New York it was found to be blank, the mother evidently having put in the wrong bit of paper. The case is complicated by the fact that the children do not know their father's first name, nor his whereabouts, except that he is "in America."

THE Lake Superior Sentinel says: Will Hendrick, while out fishing last week, near the head of the bay, caught a 170-pound deer, with large horns. The young dentist had no shooting iron with him at the time; but, on seeing the animal enter the water, he cautiously pulled his little row-boat between his buckship and the shore and drove him out into the bay, where, after a hard and long spell of rowing, he managed to catch him. He hooked into the deer's neck with a couple of fish-hooks, and then with his fish-line he managed to steady the boat until he could lassoo it, which he did by throwing the boat's painter over its horns. The buck was not to be lugged so easily, however, for he turned upon his pursuer, and a lively tussle was had. An old buck will fight hard at such a time. If there is any one who has any doubt in the matter, let him ask Hendrick. At one time he struck the boat a blow with his fore-feet which nearly capsized it. Will hung on the rope like grim death, and by the dexterous use of an oar he finally knocked the buck out and brought him in.

MR. BRUCE, a New York farmer, had a great deal of faith in his fellow-men, but his feelings have received a shock. Four years ago a stranger with cropped hair and forbidding face applied to him for work. The man explained frankly that he was just from Sing Sing, where he had served a term for burglary, but wanted to lead an honest life. Mr. Bruce was pleased with this appearance of true repentance, and allowed him to remain on the farm, where he proved to be industrious and gave good satisfaction. After remaining three years he went South. A few days ago Mr. Bruce received a letter from him, written from Texas, in which, after saying that he might never come North again, he instructed his old employer to look in a certain place in his chimney, where he would find a package of jewelry which he might dispose of as he thought best. It had been taken from people on the streets, he explained, and could not be restored to the owners, as he did not know who they were. As the man had brought nothing with him from the prison, the horrified farmer can only suppose that his ex-valued farm-hand amused himself by acting as pickpocket during his occasional trips to neighboring towns while in his employ. About $1,000 worth of rings, watches and other jewelry were found in the designated spot. N.A wishing to have anything to do with the stolen property, Mr. Bruce hastened to ship it to the thief himself, and is now under the condemnation of his neighbors for having used bad judgment, to say the least, in thus disposing of what was not his own.

In the Mexican Capital.

Newcomers in the City of Mexico are surprised on finding so many of the conveniences common to large cities at home, such as the telephone, the electric light, a police force, and an excellent street-car service. The electric lights are on the tops of iron rails running up from the gas lamp posts. The cars are far more sightly than the regular array of the country. They wear a blue flannel suit, the coat buttoned up, and their cap has a covering of white, which, with the standing linen collar, is always immaculate. In their belts on one side they carry a club and on the other a large revolver. If one wishes to see a policeman he has only to go to the nearest corner, and he will surely find him standing there, fan in hand, with his cigarette, ready to speed at which street cars go is astonishing. They dart along as fast as mules can pull them, and as they approach a corner the driver gives a loud toot on a horn for the purpose of warning people on the crossing to get out of the way.

GOSSIP FOR THE LADIES.

How Well She Knew Him.

They sat alone—no matter where,
Or how there came to be a chair,
He did not know (the fact is there,
Was why he was so shy) with
He knew she was a girl to be free,
And knew if ever he met her
And venture that he has forgotten
He could be bound to do
To call it a bow, the utmost deliberation
Of a bow he might be!
Her great eyes in his fancy's flight,
Were "Heaven's own blue,"
"I know as strong as ever,"
"That this you seem to place,"
"You her face remember well,"
And admitted tell of her eyes,
"Why, I know I have met a girl,
"Just like the lady in question,"
And then—the truth must out—
He was bewildered tell he knew
And pleaded it was the least.

A Remarkable Case.

An old man was arraigned before an Alabama court for some trifling offense, and among the witnesses was an old woman, who, in giving her testimony, made such efforts to shield the old man that the Judge asked:

"Madam, have you known this man very long?"

"Yes, sir," the old woman replied, "I have known him a very long time. When I was a young girl this man used to visit me. In fact Judge, we were sweethearts," and she twisted her apron and looked down.

"Ah, I see" the Judge replied, "used to be sweethearts, hey? Well, I think each other now because you did not marry each other long ago."

"You are mistaken, Judge, for we did marry each other then, and are husband and wife now."

"Indeed!" the Judge exclaimed, "this is a remarkable case. Liberate the old fellow Mr. Officer.—Arkansaw Traveler.

A Tired Woman's Epitaph.

"Yes," she sighed, "the world is hard, especially to the poor. I can think that the good people who enlarge with so slightly do not know much of overwork." "Quite true," asserted Mrs. Sotheran. "Poor Sarah Dempster consider she resided to a neighboring tombstone! was of your opinion. He eulogize, unless some of mosted as, points her life as it really was. If you never read it, it is worth your while to do so." The tombstone stood in a neglected corner of the churchyard, overgrown with nettles and long grasses, but its inscription was still legible:

Here lies a poor woman who always was tired,
This world in a journey she long had desired;
Her long stands on earth were, "Dear friends, I Where working aint done, nor sewing nor sewing;
Here everything else is exact to my wishes,
For I believe they don't cut the grass on Heaven."

"Those good sentiments will always be longer lived
Than marble or brass, I know, for my Ever where they don't cut the grass on Heaven."

"Well, I do think that epitaph will always be longer lived than any other," said the other two mentioned.—Cleveland Herald.

Mrs. Clemmer Hudson.

Next to Mrs. Southworth, Mrs. Clemmer Hudson has probably earned more money by writing than any other woman in Washington. All, or nearly all, of her money has been made from her letters to the New York Tribune and the Brooklyn Argus, for, though none of her books have been conspicuous failures, none of them ever created any special sensation in the literary world, and her remuneration from them has been small. She has earned as much as $6,000 a year, but her regular income is by no means so great as this. Like Mrs. Southworth, Mrs. Clemmer Hudson has sought substance to show for her work except a home; but it is a very roomy, comfortable, pressed-brick house, well furnished, and worth, perhaps, $40,000. Inside having exhausted much of her earnings in the support of her parents, Mrs. Hudson is said always has been fond of the good things of life, which presumable good livers to the manifold ills and drawbacks common to this vale of tears. She likes pretty bonnets for her rooms, has a weakness for dining off tracks, expensive China, has her own carriage, clothes herself in silk attire and takes a real feminine delight in the dainty French bonnets, or "confections, as the milliners call them, with which she crowns her fresh, naturally fine. Her eyes are of that clear, peculiar blue rarely seen except in young children, and she likes to wear robes and bonnets of the same certain hue. If she has a blank account it is not because she lacks generosity, for she is a cheerful giver as well as a good liver. An old friend of Mrs. Clemmer Hudson, commenting upon the remarkable firmness and self-reliance of that lady's character, says she only developed these traits after scores of years of buffeting with the world and some more struggles. Why, when she first began to win her letters for the press, she would correct, re-write and cry over them, just like a nervous school-girl over her first compositions. I have known her to destroy a letter after it was all ready to post, just because she suddenly decided that it wasn't worth sending and consequently not worth printing." —Washington letter.

No Trouble in the Choir.

"I think you treated us very unkindly in saying that we had a fight in our choir," remarked the contralto, taking the chair the religious editor placed for her and straightening her hat. "You hurt the feelings of everybody, and I don't see any good of it."

"Did I hurt you? Did you have a fight?" repeated the religious editor. "Don't the tenor say the soprano don't know any more about music than a jackass? Doesn't the bass say the contralto don't know any more than a jackass? Doesn't the soprano tell the tenor he can't sing for a cent? Don't the contralto say the bass is a jackass? Don't the tenor say the soprano don't know any more than a jackass? Don't the soprano tell his wife—"

"Do she did, the meddling old cuss! It was none of her business. He didn't take her, and he isn't likely to. We had a good time in the choir until you let slip out your opinion that all the people who sing in spite of his being married must be jealous of him. Why, I wish that you would come out and state that the choir is perfectly harmonious, and the prayer was unknown in its report about the difficulty."

"Of course I will, if there is any treats in it," responded the religious editor. "Is the difficulty all over?"

"It will be as soon as the tenor gets his hands on the organist. He has been going his mouth a holiday and saying that the tenor wants to get the soprano out so he can get another one who need to sing in the same church up in the country. As soon as I heard of that I told his wife that she had better keep a lookout for her husband. She told him about it, and he said there wasn't a grain of truth in it, and now she is keeping a watch on him and he can't go home with me from choir practice until it blows over. I don't see why the tenor's wife should be so jealous of him."

"She isn't going to throw the organist, is she? I spoken the religious editor.

"If he can catch him before he gets over his head she will. I wish you would see that all the differences in the choir have been settled, and that the congregation are anxious to have a new organist. Will you do that for me?"

"Certainly," said the religious editor. "Didn't I hear something about the alto leaving the choir?"

"Oh such luck as that!" sighed the contralto. "She's as much of a fixture as the contribution box. She and the bald-headed bass are as thick as the notes in a long run, but I have put a spoke in her wheel by telling his wife that he held her hand all day when we were practicing the Easter music. She won't believe me and the tenor my many mild she gets out of that scrape. I wish you would authize that bass's voice. He can't sing any more than a lobster, and when he puts his out on the leader looks hard at me and says I will have to do better if I am going to stay in this choir. I'd like to see him try to get me out. My husband would write him a card for him!"

"So you're married, too, are you? murmured the religious editor.

"Married? I am," replied the contralto. "You needn't say anything about that in your old paper, because I never allude to my husband unless he's around. Now, I want you to write a nice article about us, and say that all the church choirs in Brooklyn there's not one so perfectly harmonious and devoted to its duties as ours. Will you—that's a good man?"

And the religious editor hadn't the heart to refuse.—Brooklyn Eagle.

ANGLO-SAXONS ABROAD.

The Careless American and the Well-Dressed Englishman.—The Lately Married Lady and Her Lady American Cousin.

Robert Laird Collier:

The American gentleman travel and walks and dines in the same suit of clothes, and those of the older sort are in the everlasting broadcloth style. Much were his mental history, really. He is also careless—that is, unpressed—in his walk and bearing. Mind you, I am not describing my friends when I am meeting, but a great fad of Americans when I am daily seeing in public places. On the other hand, when the American affects dress he is rather over dress it. He mul es a point of it. He centers his mind so much upon it that he lets the cut out of the bag and sun to the beholder: "This 'get up' is the result of thought, not unconscious latch."

The English gentleman is always well dressed. He is dressed much the same as every other English gentleman, and this is certainly monotonous. But, to the foreigner, all this in England is monotonous. Still, the English gentleman is usually as well and as suitably dressed; his loads are clean and his clothes are but well brushed before he makes his appearance in the morning. When in Paris he has something to do since upon her left arm, a new dollars and sunkin g about the hotels and public places.

But the American gentleman is a less considerable factor in domestic and social life than the English lady. And so it is that the American lady takes the place she ought, gracefully, and has about her all the outward signs of her relative and "advanced" position in the family and in society. In the matter of dress the English lady cannot hold a candle to her. There is the fact. The English lady does not know how to dress well. She is the worst-dressed lady in Europe. She goes to the extreme of the American gentleman. She is careless and untidy on the one hand, or she is "fine" and "smart" on the other. She wears no end of feather and ribbons, velvet and lace. She is usually short one stout, but all the same she has flounces and frills.

The American Cousin is natty—she has "just the thing" on usually that makes her look quite stylish and neat. She is quite as well dressed as the French lady, and I lean toward the opinion that the American lady is the best-dressed lady in the world. Perhaps when a young she is the prettiest and most interesting. Dress is the outward sign. But not only the outward sign. Much that is true comes to the table daily in a lady and gentleman who are the order. The lady is a dignified and refined in bearing. She is usually unconscious and at her ease. She is quite as well bred as her husband, in either study, consciously ill at ease, or her be ing, is the overbearing black leg, the man who is "smart" in horse-seeing, perhaps, and perhaps not. Now, that is, he has been sitting in the court of his hotel talking business with his counsyman. He comes to the table and he has left his hat in the street or the hotel. He follows his wife with outstretched shoulders and a stride, as all good husbands ought to be. Between husband and wife there is no social or social relations as revealed in social life and you have the ideal of the English man and wife. The gentleman takes his hat, as his manners, as any Englishman, over on he is so much at his ease as and the gentleman ever can be. He wears clothes, not over the way, but well worn and well brushed. He usually carries with half a dozen pairs. Now, in this case, it is the lady who is homely, rather dull, but religiously dutiful wife, who carries the sunshine in her wake. The English lady is associate with Christians. But, if that has been in the past, it is apparently ceasing to be so. For instance, two Chinese gentlemen, very excellent, recently came to Nankin with mutiers, wives, concubines and servants; rented a house; secured with high rank and wealth people; business men and officers of rank were their sworn brothers, and received Judges among their relations. Six days ago the two Chinese swell were arrested, and it has been discovered that they were great frauds, the "mothers," wives and concubines and servants were accomplices. Shipments had been actually cut of $50,000, beside private loans and money obtained by false pretences.

A COON got into Boston and up in a tree in Worcester street, the other morning, and everybody stopped to see him. That part of Boston, for one or three blocks around his coonship, was literally jammed. How to dislodge the coon was the question. There wasn't a man in the multitude who knew just how to get him, but every man declared some one else to try his particular plan. One fellow, however, climbed the tree and thought he would take the coon down gently, but teeth and nails were too much for him. Then it was proposed to knock him down with a club, but some tender-hearted woman remonstrated. He could not be shot, for mere were policemen at hand to arrest anybody who might violate a corporation ordinance. A venturesome chap climbed up the tree with gloves on, but he was quickly repulsed; and a like fate was that of another who went up with a piece of carpeting to throw over the coon's head. Finally a ladder was sent up to the top of the tree, and in an unwary moment the coon deserted his branch and clung to the ladder, as affording better protection. The ladder was moved from the tree and gently lowered toward the ground, a strip of carpeting was thrown over the coon, and he was captured.

CHEOPS is due the Buffalo Courier for winding up the dull season with the most incredible romance of the year, fresh from the pen of its Lockport correspondent. In 1852, the story is, Miss Mary Place, now Mrs. Nesmith, of Charleston, S. C., was a member of a Lockport church choir. One Sunday an electric bolt entered the church, and, proceeding directly to the choir, annihilated one of the singers, Mr. Crocker, stunned several others, and knocked Miss Place senseless. When she recovered she was unable to explain the disappearance of a gold chain, from her long, which she had worn to church that morning. A physician who was examining a low and narrow pendulum upon her left arm, now and then, that it is nothing more nor less than the chain, which the electricity must have drives into her person. It was a startling theory, to be sure, but, as it is that the American lady takes the place she ought, gracefully, and has about her all the outward signs of her relative and "advanced" position in the family and in society. In the matter of dress the English lady cannot hold a candle to her. There is the fact. The English lady does not know how to dress well. She is the worst-dressed lady in Europe. MR. TALMAGE intimates that "the average sermon" will be between seven and eighteen minutes in length. This explains such abstemious. The people are voting the innovation.

IN those portions of Pennsylvania where Mr. Blaine passed his boyhood days pedlers are being taken for his "Twenty Years in Congress" at a rate which makes book agents dizzy. One of them has taken orders for 100 copies in a township having a population of 200. At the rate of fifty to every 1,000 population, the sewers either edition the edition of 1,000,000 will hardly satisfy the first demand.

IT is said that the results of the recent examination of women students at Cambridge, England, are satisfactory, Twenty obtained honors and two degree. In the mathematical tripos, Miss Perm, of Girton College, secured a senior wrangler. In the natural science tripos, five women students obtained degrees; in the moral science tripos, three; in the historical science tripos, four; and in the classical tripos twelve women students obtained honors. All the young women had been prepared at Girton or Newham Colleges.

AN English clergyman in Berkshire recently rebuked Sabbath breaking in a way that some people might resent. The parish silver was started in the middle of its Sunday afternoon quiet by the loud and rapid tolling of the church bell for twenty minutes. The town crier itself inside out trying to find what was the matter. It was finally announced that the rector while engaged in a pastoral visitation had been confronted by the sight of a lawn tennis party in the grounds of one of the principal houses in the parish, and he had taken this means to remind the young people of the Fourth Commandment.

PRESIDENT TANNER, of the Illinois College, says that Illinois is not rich except prospectively. The State is not immoderately rich, and yet twenty-ten years ago her farms were mortgaged for half of their value, and twenty-five of her corn fields were owned out of Chicago. Now, the farms have the mortgages will be lifted. "For so long as the East owns part of the land," he argues, "she owes some duty to the colleges which have helped land. So long as the East owns our means of transportation, she owes something to the colleges that hate commerce, teach the people to respect the rights of property, and make wealth secure.

THERE is an occasional attempt in this country to show that the Chinese are not entirely heathen, that they have Christians. But, if that has been in the past, it is apparently ceasing to be so. For instance, two Chinese gentlemen, very excellent, recently came to Nankin with mutiers, wives, concubines and servants; rented a house; secured with high rank and wealth people; business men and officers of rank were their sworn brothers, and received Judges among their relations. Six days ago the two Chinese swell were arrested, and it has been discovered that they were great frauds, the "mothers," wives and concubines and servants were accomplices. Shipments had been actually cut of $50,000, beside private loans and money obtained by false pretences.

A COON got into Boston and up in a tree in Worcester street, the other morning, and everybody stopped to see him. That part of Boston, for one or three blocks around his coonship, was literally jammed. How to dislodge the coon was the question. There wasn't a man in the multitude who knew just how to get him, but every man declared some one else to try his particular plan. One fellow, however, climbed the tree and thought he would take the coon down gently, but teeth and nails were too much for him. Then it was proposed to knock him down with a club, but some tender-hearted woman remonstrated. He could not be shot, for mere were policemen at hand to arrest anybody who might violate a corporation ordinance. A venturesome chap climbed up the tree with gloves on, but he was quickly repulsed; and a like fate was that of another who went up with a piece of carpeting to throw over the coon's head. Finally a ladder was sent

The Elections.

New York elects the democratic state ticket except secretary of state, by 40,000. Hendrix, dem., is elected mayor of New York city by a small majority. Brooklyn also elects a democratic mayor. The republicans claim the legislature.

Butler is defeated in Massachusetts by 9,000. The canvas has been very exciting, and the total vote is 30,000 in excess of any previous year. The legislature is republican.

Mahonism is repudiated in Virginia by 10,000. The democrats sweep everything, and have good working majorities in the legislature.

In Mississippi the election was quiet, with a sweeping democratic victory.

Abbett, dem., is elected governor of New Jersey by nearly 5,000, and the legislature is democratic.

Maryland elects a democratic governor by 3,000.

Pennsylvania is claimed by the republicans at 16,000.

Minnesota is republican as usual.

In Detroit the returns up to 3 o'clock a. m., give Grammond rep., 434 majority for mayor, and Saenger rep., about 800 for city clerk.

In Chicago, Shepard, dem., was elected judge of the superior court, and the entire democratic ticket is elected except one county commissioner.

Thanksgiving Proclamation.

In conformity with a time-honored custom, endeared to us by many sacred associations, I, Josiah W. Begole, governor of the state of Michigan, do hereby appoint Thursday, the 29th day of November, 1883, as a day of public thanksgiving and praise to almighty God.

It seems proper that at the falling of the leaf, when the ripened fruits of labor are gathered, we should reverently pause, and from our hearthstones and temples of worship offer our grateful thanksgiving to the giver of every good gift for the blessings of the crowned year.

Industry and frugality have been rewarded; the interests of religion, temperance and education have been advanced; our marvelous increase in population and wealth has not affected the integrity of our free institutions; the scars inflicted by civil war have been healed, and a growing sentiment of fraternal concord and loyalty to the flag prevails among all the states of our once imperiled union.

Let us observe this thanksgiving day with such social festivities and religious observances as tend to cement the ties of family and of friendship, and foster a spirit of brotherly kindness toward all men. Let it be a day for the exercise of the broadest charity in thought and deed, remembering the words of him who said: "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand, and caused the great seal of the state to be affixed at the city of Lansing, this first day of November, 1883.

JOSIAH W. BEGOLE,
Governor.

By the governor:
HARRY A. COBAYS,
Secretary of State.

The Lansing Journal pronounces one Rev. A. B. Earl, a Boston evangelist, "a good deal of a fraud."

"Hallowe'en" was celebrated by the students at Ann Arbor in a very boisterous manner. They had a collision with the police, and several of them had sore heads as a result. Among other devilries, they took a bronze statue of Ben. Franklin and painted it yellow and green.

Dorsey is sending large quantities of cattle from his ranch in New Mexico to New York, and has given $5,000 to a university in that territory. That Star Route bonanza was bigger than was reported. It seems to have left Dorsey with plenty of money, seven after he had paid his lawyers and bought two juries.

Vast Railway Stations.

The centre of London will before long be turned into a collection of vast railway stations. From north to south, from east to west, there is but one desire on the part of a railway director—to increase the size of the terminus of his line. The enlargement of Euston Station has been brought prominently before the public through the destruction of an open piece of ground adjoining the Hampstead road. The accommodation at Liverpool street has already been pronounced insufficient for the traffic on a bank holiday. A new bridge across the Thames and a new station are contemplated by the managers of the Chatham and Dover Railway, and, if their attempt to obtain a fresh outlet for the Londoner through Croydon to Surrey and Sussex should prove successful, they will be urgently required at once. At Waterloo station the work of patching and increasing has been recommenced after the briefest of intermissions, and within a short time 55,000 square feet will have been added to one of the most inconvenient stations in London.—Pall Mall Gazette.

A Rabbit with Snow Shoes On.

The snowshoe rabbit is a small animal that has exceedingly-large hind feet, the toes of which are covered with long, fine hair. This peculiar formation enables the creature to travel, in search of food over the lightest snow without sinking. The snowshoe rabbits are a little smaller than the cotton-tail rabbits of the Eastern States. They are excellent eating, after you have lived on rancid bacon for a few weeks. I know of no more deceptive tracks than those animals make. Judging from the size the animal would weigh at least thirty pounds. It really weighs about two.—New York Sun.

The Wright returned from Manistee last Friday night with the family and household goods of Jas. Hylind. Mr. H. is getting settled in a house on the terrace, south from the boiler shop.

Several cities in Michigan have paid heavy damages for injuries caused by defective sidewalks. Charlevoix may do the same if some of the holes in the crosswalks are not repaired soon.

The Gratiot county Democrat is much improved since the Daily Democrat was established. J. V. Johnson can make a live paper if he chooses, and his last issue looks as if he is running himself.

A judgment of $5,000 has been given against the city of Charlotte in the suit of Geo. E. Preston, for injuries resulting from a defective sidewalk. Our council should remember this, and avoid a similar suit by repairing broken and defective side and crosswalks. Some people seem to think the young trees and shrubbery in the park are of no value, and frequently destroy what will require years to grow again. All this is wrong. That tract of land can be made very beautiful, and should be protected.

A late number of the Detroit Commercial Advertiser printed nearly a column for the benefit of Charlevoix, a large part of it being from the JOURNAL's article. Other state papers are also helping along the work of advertising our resources and advantages.

There are two holes in the crosswalk near the JOURNAL office which needs attention before someone gets seriously hurt. A member of our family got her foot in one recently, while going for a bucket of water in the night the injury might have been serious.

Arthur E. Martin who has been with E. A. Foote for some time, has about completed arrangements to move to Boyne City, where he will locate in his profession.—Charlotte Leader. We welcome Mr. Martin to this country, and think he will soon be identified with the growth and development of that thriving village.

The fire department are preparing to give a dance and supper on thanksgiving night which will probably eclipse anything in that line of entertainment ever held in Charlevoix. It is to be an all night dance, and those who attend will probably get their money's worth, besides the credit of helping a worthy cause.

Arrangements have been made for warming the opera house, and Congregational services will be held there next Sunday morning and evening, and hereafter until the new church is completed. It is expected that Rev. W. H. Seaver, of Traverse City will preach next Sunday morning, and Rev. Leroy Warren, of Lansing, in the evening.

The following from an exchange will apply with equal force here, and every week we are asked, "why didn't you publish such and such a local item?" Simply because we heard nothing about it until after the paper was printed. Some people are very close mouthed about such things, and yet they expect we will give all the news. "Consistency," etc.

This is conceded to be as good a wheat growing county as there is in northern Michigan. Mr. Al. Richardson, from 44 acres of winter wheat, threshed 156 bushels, and from 12½ acres of spring wheat 48 bushels; he also had on a piece of land 17 rods square, for 4½ acres and 9 rods) 201 bushels of corn. Other farmers can make as good a showing. Why should not our town grow with such a farming country to support it? It will.—Kalkaska Leader.

The schooner Monitor, with ore for Cleveland, ran ashore during the late storm near Manistique and went to pieces on Saturday. The tug Leviathan was sent to her relief, but returned to Cheboygan on Sunday and reported her all broken up. The crew are saving all they can, and will probably secure her entire outfit. The Monitor was owned by Capt. Riordan, of Buffalo, and valued at $12,500. There is an insurance of $5,000 in the Boston Marine and $2,500 in Crosby & Dimick's agency on the hull, and her cargo is also fully insured.

The schooner Ketchum went ashore near Gill's pier last Thursday, and the latest advices are that she will go to pieces. She was partially loaded with hardwood lumber, belonging to Gill, and was bound to Milwaukee. Gill's pier is a lumber mill located on the Michigan shore of Lake Michigan, a few miles north of Ludington, and abreast of the North Manitou island. The Ketchum was there loading lumber, and the heavy western winds soon drove her aground alongside the pier dangerous. She ran out a short distance from shore and cast anchor. Her anchors did not hold, and she dragged on the beach. She was valued at $5,500, and insured for $4,000, cargo and all insured.

A gentleman in this vicinity remarked the other day that he had cows and all the apparatus necessary to deliver milk, and would do so as soon as he thought it would pay. Later on in the conversation he suggested that if anyone from the outside undertook to establish himself here, he would give him all the competition he could stand. This kind of "dog-in-the-manger" policy will ruin any town. If this man starts a wagon first we will give him our patronage, but if he waits until a stranger comes here, and then tries to run him out, we will use all our influence to sustain the stranger. We represent but one family, but we know other families who want milk, and express similar sentiments.

FATAL STABBING.

The Murderer Still at Liberty.

Last Wednesday evening, Thomas Barrnes, second engineer of the propeller John Otis, was stabbed in the abdomen, during an altercation in a saloon in Ironton. As near as we can learn, there had been some feeling between Mr. Barrnes and a Kentuckian who had made himself obnoxious about the boat, and the latter had been advised that he better keep off. On this evening he had just liquor enough to feel bloke to avenge the fancied insult, and took the first opportunity to plunge a knife into Barrnes' abdomen. The tug Bob. Stephenson was despatched to Charlevoix for a surgeon, but was detained some time by running aground near the channel between Round and Pine lakes. The tug was finally released, and returned to Ironton with Drs. Preston and Carlsten.

The doctors found the man with his bowels protruding, and somewhat strangulated. Anesthetics were administered, the incision made larger, the intestines put back in their place, and the abdomen sewed up. The next day the patient was brought to the Bridge Street house, Charlevoix, and made as comfortable as possible. Every care was given and attention by the physicians, but died yesterday afternoon about 5 o'clock.

After the stabbing, Barrnes' friends gave the Kentuckian a terrible beating and bruising, but in the latter excitement of getting a physician and caring for the wounded man, the villain escaped, and has not since been seen. It has been said that the bruises and gashes on his face and head will make him easily recognized for some time.

Historical Society.

The parlors of Senator Battars were filled to overflowing last Tuesday evening at the meeting of the historical society. At the usual hour President John Nicholls called the society to order, and announced, as the first piece on the program, a piano solo, by Mrs. O. D. Wood. Mrs. C. Y. Cook then read a carefully prepared paper on the causes leading to the American Revolution. The paper, providing both the new world and the old in 1775 was ably depicted, and the steps in the conflict between the American colonies and the spirit of tyranny characteristic of England, were carefully traced. After a short intermission the society were favored with a vocal duet with guitar accompaniment by Miss Loveday and Al. Washburne. Miss Dance, of Northport, being present was prevailed on to render a vocal solo which was thoroughly enjoyed and heartily applauded. Ed. Parmelee gave another of those illustrated lectures on American history which created much laughter. Miss Potter rendered very acceptably a recitation entitled "The Vision." Mr. Parmelee and Miss Essie Battars closed the program with a vocal duet. All went away well pleased with the evening's entertainment. No business of importance was transacted. Mr. and Mrs. Byron See will entertain the society next week at their new home on State street.

Reported for the Journal by UPHOLSTER BROS., real estate dealers.

Lake-Strip Wood-piling Contest.

Last June a bet of $50 a side was made between Richard Lake and W. S. Strip on the time required to put wood over the rail of a vessel from a dock or from the beach over a dock. Mr. Lake to load from the dock and Mr. Strip from the beach. Mr. Lake's wood was piled four tiers deep, and 50 cords were put on the schooner Lapointe by six men in 1 31. Mr. Strip had four men to load, two teams and drivers, and two men besides the drivers to unload. He put 50 cords on the schooner Three Bells in 1 56. This left Mr. Lake the winner by 25 minutes. Messrs. Lane and Brown were judges. The contest was exciting and was witnessed by over 50 citizens.

THE ORCHARD AND THE HEATH.

BY GEORGE MEREDITH.

I chanced upon an early walk to see
A troop of children through an orchard enter
Where blossoms hung low, the grass was blight;
They had no heart to lift heads or scent
For frolics to fill them; frolics were all their sky.

Their scented, running on from zero to love,
And played the game the wind plays, on and off:
It was pitiful to behold the glee,
Promising, and a female's sound
Of laughter spouted, pattering fresh on me.

I could have watched them till the daylight fled,
Their power lower made such a light of day.
A sunset one trembling song, "Oh, heed!"
Sang to me, comforted him straightway
Refloating a branch and thumped down apples two.

The tiny creatures flashing through green grass,
And laughing with her tried and overcoming
Young apples, while a little lass
Of six, a mimic mother (helpless found)
Thus slight I saw, and passed as silence pass.

My footsteps left the pleasant home and time,
Soft orange-smoke, slanting cooks season, gay
Beyond
Beyond the blackberries of the wains,
Where the heath-fire burns all the hours,
And not the trivial brooms, tin-cans and rains.

Still in my view sole children frolic approach,
Where, under a parched charred-black orchard
When I neighbor whose fate fellow-dropped search,
Behold, a lonely but richer
Lady comes and hands at the lowest upstarted.

Here, too, were many children, quick to sear
Now thing sending, scanty, pitch clocks, while Twin:
In mingled robbed together run.
Like iron rushes of the heath,
Deep-rooted, flowering fierce, dense, and drinking rain.

Three girls, with sound here like a load at sea
Tipped sideways by the wave (their clothing slits
From collar rent unmendable,
Leaps, on fire and visible, hearted
A sailing ship, outlooked by the bent knee.

They meet; their leaders yelled their sea, and Ho!
In set to follow, bar as one fleet smelled
Wind-Choice, and in fleetness, fleet that sense
Of prowesses. By gale (Rule-land)
And spoke, answer, shout forms grey-bling enlisted.

Eyes on the dark edge of a reddish pt on
The mother and a young, all, circle at that,
Placed for it, holding an expression
A long upright in one: and
Another sat near with the dying steam.

I turned and looked on heaven visible, where
The mass-forest sunset, broadend with red light,
Thus which shift a golden bough,
And seemed in the shoots of the trees,
Far down with mother occasions to endow.

HER LAST CONFESSION.

BY G. F. LATHROP.

A mill without water, wind or steam to drive it—what a curious thing!

Yet, there it stood, and had stood for many a year, and no one could tell the reason, though you could see fill to see that there must be some story belonging to the place.

Strangers coming to Nantucket sometimes asked about it, but as they could find out was, that one day long ago the dam of the mill-pond had given way, the water had all gone out with a rush, and the stream was scattered in new channels or was lost in the sandy soil.

The less came upon old Humphrey Gurton, the miller, at a time when he could not afford to rebuild. He was thereafter a ruined man. People said that his loss made him *t*o say, for he used to declare that the water could never have escaped if some one had not opened the waste-pipe in the dam; and he vowed vengeance against the person who had ruined him out of mere mischief.

Finally the idea worked upon him so that he used to go about the streets with a pistol in his hand.

"Looking for my unknown enemy," he said.

The town-people were easy going, and since Gurton had always been one of the kindest men alive, and never had an enemy in the place, they didn't dream of harm coming from his threats.

But one day, about four years after the accident, he and John Barlow, and in a sudden fury shot him dead.

"He was the man that did it!" cried old Humphrey, with insane satisfaction. "Barlow is the enemy I have been looking for. I told you I would kill him when I found him, and now I've done it."

When this tragedy occurred, everybody saw that Gurton had become a maniac just *c*ure, for Barlow was one of his best friends, and, in fact, Barlow's daughter Nelly, then 18, was engaged to marry old Humphrey's son Will, one of the finest fellows on the island.

The poor miller was carried away to the mainland, to an asylum for the insane, and there he died.

A great change had come over Nelly since the miller's ruin. She was only a girl of 15 at the time, but she and Will Gurton had seen then promised to marry each other when they should grow up.

The engagement was not broken, though Will came to her when he found his father was ruined, and told her that she would have to marry a poor man if she took him now.

"Still," he said, "I am only 18, and if you will be true to me when we are older, Nelly, I may get to be well off by the time we are married. Only I must go as a sailor now, for father has no business for me, as he expected to have, I used to go to the sea, and work my own way up."

"Oh, Will," said the girl, weeping. "You know I shall love you always, and it doesn't make any difference about the mill. And I shall keep my promise, if you still want me. But I am not good enough. No, Will, I am not good enough."

At this the young boy grew a little angry. "Never say that again, Nelly," he commanded her. "I don't know what you mean when you call yourself not good enough."

But they soon came to an understanding again, and Will kissed her, and Nelly tried to look bright once more, and the promise was renewed.

The two children had already confided this promise to their parents, and, though it was looked upon as premature, it had received their approval.

But the change in Nelly, of which I have spoken, was this, that, while before she had been one of the merriest, romping girls in the town, always full of fun and tricksiness, she now became very serious and almost melancholy.

"Why, cheer up, Nell," her father would often say to her. "What is my little girl thinking about? Has anyone done aught to hurt you?"

"No, father," Nelly would answer, very briefly. And then she would go about her work, and not be questioned.

When she grew older, Mr. Barlow thought perhaps she was grieving about Will, seeing how the childish attachment was ripening into womanly love.

"I know it is hard," he once said to her, "to think how different Will's lot would have been if he had had the mill; but don't fix your mind on that, my child. You have got a brave fellow, and he is sure to do well by you."

"But I never wanted him to go to sea, you know, father. And now it is coming like a fate. He's going away like all the other boys."

"Tshaw!" said Mr. Barlow, who had served many years on the whale ships and rather despised land employment. "In my time the girls would not have a lover at all who had not toughened his hands on the oars for one voyage, at least. Don't pout over that."

Nelly agreed to try being braver; but her pensiveness did not diminish, and her father began to suspect that there was some cause for it which she had not revealed.

And then came the terrible day when he was murdered by the poor, crazed miller.

After that, no one wasted any wonder over that melancholy expression which was gradually becoming indelible upon Nelly's face. Her future husband's father had fallen a prey to disaster and died in madness, while her own father had been cut off in his hale vigor by that very hand which should have welcomed her as a daughter. Were not these events enough to have wrought a revolution in her character?

She was terribly overwhelmed when her father was brought home, after the shooting.

Those who saw her related that her grief was almost too painful even to speak of afterward. She seemed to consider herself the cause of the calamity.

"Oh, I wish I had never been born!" she cried. "But for me these grieve would never have come to us all. My poor, poor father—he wondered so what made me sad, and I never told him; and I felt something dreadful coming—but how could I tell it was to be this?"

"Hush!" said one of her friends. "It is wrong to talk so, as if you could make or prevent what Providence has appointed."

"But I am doomed, I am doomed," moaned Nelly. And all her words seemed to me are being visited with my shame."

"How do you mean?" asked her friend, bewildered.

Then Nelly became quiet at once. She set herself to care for her mother, and never again gave any outward sign of her own dreadful suffering; and she showed such dread when any reference was made to that one outbreak of wild grief, that her friends learned not to speak of it again.

She was so devoted to her stricken mother, that every one pointed her out as a pattern to their children, and her Mrs. Barlow often said to her that without her she should not have been able to live a week.

"How different you are, Nelly," she would say, "from the thoughtless, fun-loving little thing you used to be. I never thought you would be such a comfort and stay to me."

"Oh, mother," begged Nelly, "don't praise me for that. I don't deserve to have you think so much of me. I ought to have been better than I am. I ought to have you call me good."

When she spoke thus it only made her seem all the better for her modesty. But in spite of her tender care, the widow gradually fell into a decline, and at length she, too, passed away.

This was while Will was absent on his first cruise.

At first, when Mr. Barlow was killed, the gossips had decided that it would be unnatural for Nelly Barlow and Will Gurton to become man and wife. But the two young people in question decided otherwise. Their love was the one bright thing left to them in the midst of the gloom that was gathering over their lives, and they clung to it faithfully. So when Will came home and found Nelly left alone in the world, they were married at once.

They lived in the old mill by the grassy hollow, that new occupied the place of the pond. Around it some shabby poplars grew, from behind which the queer, antique houses, standing at various angles, peered out in a dazed kind of a way, as if they had never got over the joke, or the surprise, of having the little stretch of water suddenly vanish from before them.

Nelly, also, had never gotten over the shock of that event and all the changes which followed it. But she tried to be cheerful, for Will's sake, and he was proud of his wife. Yet Nelly's misfortunes were not over; for, on his second cruise, Will's ship was wrecked and he was lost with a number of the crew.

She never would marry again, and so she was left to live, without children, utterly alone in the old mill. She shunned all companionship, for she had a secret in her heart which was a very exacting companion and drove out everything else.

By-and-by, as she grew old, she was so peculiar that few persons attempted to have anything to do with her.

She became very poor, but when charitable town-people went and offered her help she repelled them, saying, almost fiercely:

"What have I to do with you? You are not witches, and don't you know I am an old witch and have bewitched my own and suffering on all who have had to do with me? Leave me alone."

"Poor old creature! I am not afraid of her. But, as is often the case, they tried to show that they weren't afraid, by making her a call and leaving her. They would go to her house and knock on the windows and door, and hide when she came out, or else they would fasten the door on the outside, and throw things in at the open window, to plague her.

Peggy Winslow, who was a leader in these adventures, one day conceived the idea of placing some flowers, which she had filled with red pepper, on the top of the door, so that they would fall on the head of Dame Gurton (as Nelly was now called) when she came out, and half choke her with sneezing. Peggy strewed flowers so that if Dame Gurton didn't feel the pepper at once, would be used likely to take up the flowers and smell them.

The trick succeeded.

Poor old Nelly was brought to the door by a gentle tap which deceived her into thinking it was some one come with sewing for her to do. But when the flowers fell down, and she found no one in the street, she looked up and saw the pepper, and guessed at the mischief. She carried some of it upstairs in her apron, and, after a little trouble, succeeded in picking up the flowers, and she discovered the pepper too late. The pepper went into her nose and eyes and convulsed her.

What was worse than that was the bitter disappointment of finding what seemed such a pretty gift only a malicious jest.

She rushed out into the old patch of shrubbery she called her garden, to find the offender. Peggy had hidden behind a bush, expecting the result would be very amusing. But, when Dame Gurton appeared, she was overcome with fright.

The old woman was gasping for breath, her eyes were streaming; she shook her fist in the air with wild, incoherent curses, which the artist: "How will you have it, eh?" "In chimney," said the smearch. Do we not all sympathize with him?

The same King had some dirty water thrown over him. His courtiers would have the offender punished. "No," said the gentleman; "he didn't throw it over me, but the man he thought I was."

This reminds us of Macaulay in one of the Town and Country Gazette-jokes, when a dead cat came into the room. The man who had thrown it came up to Macaulay and made an apologetic. "I didn't mean it for you, sir, for Mr. Adams." "Oh, very well, my good friend; but I wish you had meant it for me, and let Mr. Adams." Hardly any saying is better known than that "Speech is silver, silence golden." Simonides used to say that he never regretted holding his tongue but very often was sorry for having spoken. Epictetus knows the maxim paralled to the saying of Socrates: "The wicked live to eat and drink; the good eat and drink in order to live."

Bonze one remarked to Socrates that it was a great thing to have ears, as a prince. "It is still greater," said the philosopher, "to have no ears."

This is very like the well-known saying of Brotherton, M. P., of Salford, England, which deserves to be written in letters of gold: "My riches consist not in the extent of my possessions, but in the fewness of my wants."

We all know the rich man who, finding fault with an extravagant son, told him that at his age he did not squander his money. "No, but you hadn't a rich old bunks of a father like I."

Go back to Plutarch for this. Dionysius, reproving his son for bad conduct, said: "You never knew me to do so."

"No," replied the youth; "but you hadn't a King for a father."

"And you won't have a son a King," said the monarch.

A Deserted Village.

In the very heart of the Adirondack wilderness is located what is known as "the deserted village." Fifty years ago 20,000 acres of land were purchased by a man named Henderson, and other capitalists, a St. Francis Indian having disclosed to the party that the region was rich in ore. A blast-furnace, a forge, a saw-mill, tenement-houses, a store, a school-house and a bank were erected, and hundreds of thousands of dollars expended in cutting roads and other improvements. Operatives were carried on twenty-four years, in 1845 Henderson was accidentally shot dead, and five years later business had evidently suspended. The ponderous water-wheel and the machinery are just where they stopped thirty-three years ago. Wheelbarrows and tools lie around as though operations had been discontinued only yesterday. The village is now the headquarters of a New York sporting club, and the greater part of the year Orson Phelps, agent of the club and his family are the only inhabitants of this once busy spot.

In 1827, Patrick Bell, in Scotland, invented the first successful harvesting machine. It had the principle of the shears-cut, which is in all modern machines.

The Central Pacific Snow-Sheds.

On the topmost height of Red mountain a slight prominence that looks no larger than a hundred baskets, can be seen, which is a telephone station established by the Central Pacific railroad company. This is a house occupied by two watchmen, who are on the lookout for fire in the snow-sheds. The ears take in the whole line of snowsheds with their natural sight and by the aid of glasses. If they observe a fire in or near the sheds on any part of the line, her immediately notify the station at Cisco by their telephone line, and forthwith the information is sent by telegraph to the railroad station at Sacramento, and in a minute or two the order is sent up the line to Blue Canon and the Summit, where fire teams are constantly on duty, to proceed to the point where the fire is prevailing. The fire team consists of a locomotive, with tank cars filled with water, which is thrown by hose with a steam force pump. When the fire teams are sent up they have the road, all other trains are on the point of danger being stopped. The service of these fire trains are frequently called upon, but they are so prompt in action that they generally subdue the fires before much damage is done. The system is as near perfect as can well be made, so that any serious destruction of the sheds is now rarely possible.—Reno (Nev.) Gazette.

PORTY BILLION GERMS.

A Wonderful Theory That Connects the Welfare, Happiness, and Life of Everyone.

In his quiet and cosy library at the close of a busy day sat a gentleman and his wife, he absorbed in a new book and she in the newspaper, quickly glancing toward her husband, she asked, at a certain point in the article:

"John, what is the germ theory?"

"The germ theory, why-yes; just look in the encyclopedia under germs. That will explain it so much better than I can."

Accordingly his wife opened the book at the word cited and read: "The theory of disease—A theory advanced in the 19th century by Pasteur, Lister and others. It supposes the surface of the earth, the air and the water to be inhabited by a great or less extent with a peculiar growth of the lowest form of fungi, commonly termed bacteria, whose power of reproduction, under favorable conditions, is so great that a single germ will increase to 16,000,000 in twenty-four hours' time, and, introduced in its proper vehicle, would grow to a mass of 800 tons in two days' time. If some and fact be true, they have the road, all other trains are on the point of danger being stopped. The service of these fire trains are frequently called upon, but they are so prompt in action that they generally subdue the fires before much damage is done. The system is as near perfect as can well be made, so that any serious destruction of the sheds is now rarely possible.—Reno (Nev.) Gazette.

"Well," said the wife, "I wonder how much of this is true?"

"Why, I suppose it is true, I will write you a letter and find out."

"Dear Sir—Is the theory that Bacteria are the cause of all disease true? If so, how can we prevent it? Yours, etc."

Accordingly his wife opened the book at the word cited and read: "The theory of disease—A theory advanced in the 19th century by Pasteur, Lister and others. It supposes the surface of the earth, the air and the water to be inhabited to a great or less extent with a peculiar growth of the lowest form of fungi, commonly termed bacteria, whose power of reproduction, under favorable conditions, is so great that a single germ will increase to 16,000,000 in twenty-four hours' time, and, introduced in its proper vehicle, would grow to a mass of 800 tons in two days' time. If some and fact be true, they have the road, all other trains are on the point of danger being stopped. The service of these fire trains are frequently called upon, but they are so prompt in action that they generally subdue the fires before much damage is done. The system is as near perfect as can well be made, so that any serious destruction of the sheds is now rarely possible.—Reno (Nev.) Gazette.

"Dear Sir—Is the theory that Bacteria are the cause of all disease true? If so, how can we prevent it? Yours, etc."

"Well, I guess I'll be a poet," answered the little fellow.

"And what are you going to try and do, Willie?"

"I'm going to be an artist."

"An artist, eh? And what do you think you will adopt as a profession, Eddie?"

"I don't know what I'm going to make a minister out of me."

"That's good, very good. Now, Frankie, let me hear what you intend to be?"

"I'm going in for money."

"Going into a money-making business, eh? Well, what is it?"

"I'm going to be a rich widower, I know."—Texas Siftings.

Whisky in a Tree-Top.

A witness in a "moonshine" case, tried in Louisville, Ky., told how the illicit trade is carried on down on Green river. He said that he had gone and went to Bowes and told him how he was "sick to death" and had "got a little whisky?" the proprietor inquired, and he said he would give "all you take it away from the still company, no, indeed." "Well, how did you get it?" asked the judge. "Why, I hired a man and he found the place, and he climbed up a tree and I climbed after him, and he gave me a jug of it." "Why did you climb after it?" "Why, I knew it was in the top of the tree, of course." "Did you see any?" "No, I didn't know. All I knew was that I got my jug of whisky."

What Is Money

Without question that health is the chief thing to be considered, and that no man can be said to enjoy a state of complete health who is not in a condition to perform the greatest or most difficult of the functions with which he is endowed. Some do so in incurring the disease of insanity by the adoption of such means as are adopted by the insane to relieve their excess, neither hours, sound sleep, nor the ability to take food, nor even the power to digest food, but also be unfitting to the exercise of these fine traits are so dear to the heart of every man, woman or child, and cause everything else to be considered of little value in comparison to them.

Any business man ought to be a sound sleeper, and have wonds enough of necessity to pass from.

There are somewhere the number of human beings who are in the enjoyment of the full vigor of a medicine that will cure all that ails them, and yet they are so ignorant of the existence of the medicine or the destroyer either it or the influence of the medicine, that they have to be coaxed and entreated. This wonderful medicine is known as Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which is introduced to the suffering public, after its merits have been fully tested by thousands of people, who have found it to be a sure cure for all the ills which it is proposed to cure, and which are so numerous that it would be a waste of time and space to enumerate them. Suffice it to say that it is a sure cure for the ills of the stomach, liver, bowels, and nearly all the ills of the human family. The liver is the largest and most active organ in the human system, and when it becomes deranged it is the cause of a great deal of misery in the world. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is a sure cure for all liver complaints, and it is a most powerful and effective diuretic.

HUMORS.

The animal fluids of the body, when poorly nourished, become vitiated and cause eruptions to appear on the skin. They are distributable from their sluggishness, and vary in character from a common eruption to a positive distress and severe pain. Hood's Sarsaparilla corrects the derangement of the functions, purifies the fluids, purifies the blood, and changes the diseased condition to one of health and vigor.

Pimples.

HARLEM-TIMES, New York, had so many pimples in his house his face that he was ashamed. He tried various remedies without effect. Hood's Sarsaparilla finally healed, and all blemishes disappeared.

If your wife is cross at meal-time, take an observation of the wood pile. The woman who can go out in a storm of sleet and dig soggy wood out of the snow to cook her husband's dinner, and still wear a cheerful countenance and speak honeyed words, is more than human.

Philadelphia has night-schools for working women, in which the studies are divided as follows: Those which every woman needs for herself, such as reading, writing, and arithmetic—physiology and hygiene—sewing, and cutting and fitting; those which contribute to her enjoyment of her leisure, and such as contribute to her power of improving her home life—viz: cooking, reading aloud, and singing. The teachers are volunteers.

Reports to the state board of health for the week ending October 27, 1883, indicate that dysentery, consumption, diarrhea, bronchitis, tonsilitis, influenza, and rheumatism decreased in area of prevalence. At the state capital, the prevailing winds, during the week ending Oct., 27, were northeast; and compared with the preceding week, the temperature was lower, the absolute humidity less, the day and the night cooler considerably less, and the relative humidity more. Including reports by regular observers and others, diphtheria was reported present during the week ending Oct. 27, and since, at 15 places.

Remember in all things that if you do not begin you will never come to an end. The first weed pulled up in the garden, the first seed in the ground, the first dollar put in the savings bank, and the first mile traveled on a journey are all important things; they make a beginning, and thereby a hope, a promise, a pledge, an assurance that you are in earnest in what you have undertaken. How many a poor idle, hesitating outcast is now creeping and crawling on his way through the world who might have held up his head and prospered if, instead of putting off his resolution of industry and amendment, he had only made a beginning.

If a person swallow any poison whatever, or has fallen into convulsions from having over-loaded the stomach, an instantaneous remedy, more efficient and applicable in a larger number of cases than half a dozen we can now think of, is a heaping teaspoonful of common salt and as much ground mustard, stirred rapidly in a teacup of water, warm or cold, and swallowed instantly. It is scarcely down before it begins to come up bringing with it the remaining contents of the stomach, and leaving there no any remnant of poison, however small, but the white of an egg, or a teacup of strong coffee, be swallowed as soon as the stomach is quiet. These very common articles nullify a larger number of virulent poisons than any medicines in the shops.

The American Public Health Association, an organization of leading sanitarians from all parts of the country, holds its annual meeting at Detroit, Michigan, commencing Tuesday, November 13, and ending Friday, November 16, 1883. This is first meeting in Michigan offers an unusually favorable opportunity for health officers and others in this state interested in public health to attend. Its meetings are open to the public. Local boards of health will no doubt be glad to avail themselves of this opportunity to have at least one member from each board present to gather what he can for the benefit of his locality. Reduced rates on railroads may be secured by applying to W. K. Muir, chairman of transportation committee for the association, Detroit, Michigan.

We are far too narrow in our conceptions of what justice means. It makes many claims upon us which no law can ever enforce and with which public sentiment can never meddle. It demands much more than the discharge of pecuniary obligations. It enters into every detail of life, and regulates our conduct in all the relations we bear to others. It pronounces upon our behavior to relatives and friends and the community in which we dwell. It enforces debts of gratitude, or affection, of thoughtful consideration, of kindness, of compassion, as well as those of shillings and pence. To call a man just who is not kind, or tender or grateful, or loving is a misnomer. True justice implies the due exercise of all those sentiments in their proper season and the cheerful discharge of the conduct which they suggest.

Now is the dyspeptic's time to live well, says the Baltimore Sun. If a great sufferer, let him eat only fruit for breakfast, and dispense with their jackets on. The peach skin has some quality that is highly useful, in aerid dyspepsia especially. Watermelon and cantelouge eaten with other things may disagree with the dyspeptic. Try eating them alone. Especially begin the meal with them. If you are very hungry, yet too weary to eat, nibble at a pear or peach and wait. Fresh fruit has a tonic quality. The stomach will respond, and either you will find yourself refreshed without needing anything more, (most likely), or you can indulge in a hearty meal. We underrate the nutriment conveyed in fruit. A fatigued and irritated digestive tract will get more benefit from the slice of a melon or an unpeeled pencil or pear than from a quantity, a "hearty meal," of heavy food that it cannot manage. This country is the paradise for all such sufferers. Nothing strikes a returning traveler from Europe more forcibly than the bounty of our September tables; the affluence of vegetables, the lengthened variety of our fruits, the cheapness of both. It is not without reason that "hot corn" is a street cry in cities. Hot corn alone makes an excellent and light supper. It may quarrel with other food, but eaten by itself is light and easily assimilated. The tyrannical torment of a dyspeptic's day can be laid by the fruit diet. He can always swallow the skins, except of the grapes and melons.

Among the guests of a New York hotel was a maiden lady from the rural districts. The landlord noticed that about nine o'clock every night she would come down stairs, get a pitcher of icewater and return to her room. "One night," he said, "I made bold to speak to her, and asked her why she did not ring the bell for a hall-boy to bring the icewater to her. But there is no bell in my room. 'No bell in your room, madam! Pray let me show you,' and with that I took the pitcher of icewater in my hand and escorted her to her apartment. Then I pointed out to her the knob of the electric bell. She gazed at it with a sort of horror and then exclaimed: 'Dear me! Is that a bell? Why the hall boy told me that it was the fire alarm signal, and that I must never touch it except in case of fire!' And that is how the hall boy saved himself the trouble of going for icewater."

The number of type used in an ordinary country newspaper is about 500,000; that is, the actual number of bits of metal arranged for each newspaper in preparing the newspaper of that size for the press. We suppose few people think of the printing trade as one of the most exact and particular handicrafts; but it is. In making type, variations that might be allowed in the finest machinery, would render type useless. It is very rarely that type furnished by two separate foundries can be used together without a great deal of trouble, even though they should try to make it after the same standard. We read once in a while of a wonderful piece of cabinet or mosaic work containing ten, twenty or 50,000 pieces, the maker of which has spent in months or even years of labor in producing it; and the people go and see it as a curiosity. But the most elaborate and carefully fitted pieces of work of this kind ever made do not compare for minuteness of detail and accuracy of fitting with that which the printer does every day. The man who does the first is looked upon as a marvel of skill, and if 100 of his pieces are put in wrong side up or turned around it is not noticed in the general effect; but if a printer, in fitting ten times as many pieces together in a day, puts one the wrong way, everybody sees it and is annoyed at the "stupid carelessness of these printers."—Gazette.

When a man chooses the profession of law he does not expect to be a musician and a journalist also; he knows that if he would succeed he must devote himself to the one chosen calling. When a woman marries she confines that in order to reach the lofty heights in wife and mother hood she must sacrifice lesser aims. She must be willing to lay aside the delightful occupations that make her girlhood pleasant; she must know that from the hour when the baby is laid in the cradle, dressed with loving forethought, to that darker hour when the mature man lies down in his last sleep, that she will give full meaning to the words "constant care," that her mind, once unfettered, will be at liberty no more, but is bound by ties stronger than life or death to those who have come to her from out the great unknown. Wait awhile, girls, think it all over before you promise to become wives—to take these duties and burdens upon you. Sweet and satisfying as are the obligations of wife and mother, they are not to be taken lightly. A husband must not be looked upon as a sort of perpetual beau, and children as extremely uncertain and improbable adjuncts. Unless, like Wilhelm Meister, your apprenticeship ended, you reach out of yourself and sail for larger duties, for a wider field of labor, you had better stay at home with father and mother, dignifying the relation of daughter, filling the old established home with mild radiance which would seem but a dim light in a new one.

AMONG the reasons urged by a Peoria (Ill.) woman for a divorce are: Drunkenness, swearing, obscenity, arson, filthy habits, incompatibility, infidelity, brutality, laziness, bigamy and nonsupport. She married him to spite her father for boxing her ears.

SEVEN years ago Mr. Dalrymple went to Dakota a penniless man. Capitalists backed him with the funds necessary to start his big farm of 50,000 acres on the conditions that he was to pay them 7 per cent. on the investment and the cost of stocking the farm, after which he was to have a one-third interest. To-day Mr. Dalrymple has paid for his third interest in the three farms, and has an annual income from the same of more than $100,000.

A YOUNG Canadian girl, who had her picture taken by an Ottawa photographer, refused to receive and pay for it on the ground that it was not a correct likeness. The photographer, angered by her refusal, added a mustache and a cigar to the picture and placed it on exhibition in his window. The young lady thereupon entered an action for $1,000 damages, but the matter was compromised by the photographer paying her a smaller sum.

NOW THAT the channel tunnel project has been abandoned, at least temporarily, travelers mourn that there is no way of getting from England to France, save by almost certainly incurring the qualms of seasickness. The proposed plan of oiling the troubled waters is costly. Allowing a thousand gallons of oil per square mile, it is calculated that an oiled passage a mile broad would cost about $875,000 per annum. Neptune seems to be able to still demand his old-time casting up of accounts.

WICHITA (Kan.) Eagle: Mr. J. G. McCoy, of this city, exhibited at the fair last week a coat cut and made for Abraham Lincoln in 1860. It was during the campaign and McCoy's wedding had been fixed. He went to his tailor in a hurry for his wedding garments. McCoy being the same size of Lincoln and his counterpart in make-up, especially his shoulders, and the tailor having Lincoln's coat about finished and plenty of time to make another before it would be called for, let McCoy have the coat. He was married in it and now preserves it as an heirloom.

HANLAN is said to have accumulated a comfortable fortune by his oars. He lives well, but is no spendthrift, and never drinks a drop of alcohol. He works very hard. "I have traveled thirty miles to-day," he is quoted as saying, "and all with my own wind and muscle. I went about twenty of it in a boat, and the rest on my legs. Oh, no; that is not exceptional. I do as much as that every day, from early in the spring until late in the fall. You see my races are rather frequent, and it is necessary that I should keep myself constantly in perfect condition. I am, therefore, in training all the time. My diet is always as carefully regulated as though I was to pull a race next day."

VARIOUS methods of executing criminals have not only been practiced, but still others—an electric shock and chloroforming—have been advocated. Some go even farther and recommend that criminals be not executed at all. According to an Englishman the old-fashioned style of choking has superior merits. When a student he took a scarf, bound it about his throat and held it there drawn with its full force. At first his senses were very acute, but gradually sight and sound failed and a dreamy sensation, something like that produced by chloroform, set in, followed by a painless and complete oblivion. He was not conscious of choking or an effort at breathing. He liked the sensation so that he hung on to the scarf until his hands fell, the scarf was loosened and breath and circulation came back. He might, he supposes, under proper conditions, have died and known no more of the matter.

THE Rev. Mr. Houghton, the New Haven clergyman, who, before large congregations in his church on Sunday evenings, tried and convicted Lewis of the murder of Rose Ambler, is not content with the reputation thus acquired. He owns a fast horse. He is fond of fast horses. His parishioners remonstrated with him, but a few Sundays later he delivered a sermon on the propriety of a minister's owning a fast horse and quoted texts of scripture in support thereof. But he seems to have imagined that perhaps it would be more difficult to sustain horse-racing by Biblical authority, and, therefore, when he wanted to ascertain whether his horse was really faster than some others he nominally transferred the animal to a young dentist. The letter to conceal the horse's identity he was entered at the Waterbury races under the name of Allen, his real name being Boras. This was discovered and a fine of $50 imposed for changing names. Soon after the horse was entered at New Haven under his old name of Boras, whereupon his ostensible owner was again fined $50 and not allowed to enter him until the Waterbury fine was paid besides. The Rev. Mr. Houghton stepped forward, paid over the $100, the horse trotted, beating all competitors, and winning $200.

THIS has been a year of surprises among horsemen, and the theories of breeders are just beginning to tell in the improvement of the speed of stock. That speed is no longer an accident is generally understood, and the records of the turf are making the fact clearer ever day. The breeders of cattle are now able, by the aid of science, to fatten stock so as to make it marketable, and can produce in a given animal the minimum of bone and the maximum of beef. A certain amount of work can be produced from a certain amount of corn with as much accuracy as wheat can be converted into flour or wool into blankets, and the same mastery over animal life embraces the development of speed in horses. The record of the horse, Jay-Eye-See this season is but one more illustration of the success of science in this direction, and the only question now to be discussed is the degree of speed that may ultimately be reached. The horse Hindoo Rose has beaten the fastest time ever made by a 3-year-old, and Bonita has beaten the hitherto unsurpassed record of Jay-Eye-See as a 4-year-old. There is scarcely a horse on the turf to-day but can surpass the speed of the fastest trotter of twenty years ago

SETTLEMENTS are made showing a large decline in the value of railroad stocks. On an estimated capital of $905,000,000, the shrinkage is set down at $823,000,000, or more than one-third. "The heaviest losses," says the Chicago Herald, "are in the Vanderbilt lines and the Pacifics. The decline in the value of the capital stock in the Central Pacific is $22,500,000; in Lake Shore, now paralleled in part by the Nickel Plate, $23,250,000; Denver and Rio Grande, nearly $31,000,000; New York Central—a Vanderbilt road—nearly $37,000,000; Northern Pacific, common and preferred, almost $40,000,000 each; Oregon Transcontinental, closely allied with the Northern Pacific, $42,000,000; Union Pacific, $27,000,000; Wabash, common and preferred, $25,000,000." "It is worthy of remark in this connection," says the Indianapolis Journal, "that there is nothing alarming in these reports. On the contrary, they indicate healthfulness, integrity—a return to honest dealings." It is said by the Herald that, "where the shrinkage in the value of railroad stocks has hit the hardest, it has damaged least for the owners of the great blocks have been boosted into their millions by wholesale watering of the stocks. The values thus made were fictitious. The shrinkage of the last three years, which has been enormous, has caught many a small-fry speculator and some honest investors; but the burden of the decline, it will be found, falls heaviest where it should fall." The shrinkage means that, under the influences of the hot breath of popular indignation, the water is being evaporated from railroad investments and tried you is being reached. If, as the Herald states, the sum of $823,000,000 of water has been reduced to vapor, the only sighs there should be business is that the Vanderbilts and Goulds will still be able to make the people pay dividends on the vapor. The reduction, however, is in the line of retribution, and things are becoming healthy.

HE that will not permit his wealth to do any good to others while he is living, prevents it from doing any good to himself when he is dead; and by an egotism that is suicidal and has a double edge, cuts himself off from the truest pleasure, and the brightest happiness hereafter.—Colton.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS.

A Nameless Hero.

Pale is the song of a nameless man;
Listen awhile, and the deed he did!
Home who ventured his life in over
Another's, but not for lame or gold.

Winter had been both hard and long;
Spring set in, and the brooklets ran
Wild and free, foaming and breaking the ice
Into mighty blocks. Then the floods began.

Red were coming, the rushing stream
On its breaking bosom the ice blocks bore;
Stronger at length to a fetter it formed,
It lounged and dashed with a sullen roar.

Crushed and dashed—on the piers of a mill
They yielded at last to the fearful strife;
The miller saw, with the miller's house,
And helpless humans alone remain.

Piers and fetter were rare the deed.
Wilder and wilder the waters sway,
Rushing over the rocking mill:
"Mercy! have mercy, great God on high!

"Help for my helpless wife and child!"
Very heard him load above the torrent's roar;
"Help, man! there is none to bring;
No boat could live if it left the shore.

Wilder stood comes galloping hot with haste,
And urges for river racing wild!
Count Allen, who offers red gold to him
Who'll save the keeper with wife and child.

Lies, a thousand, the offer heard,
Hearts, a thousand, with grief are sore;
They look at the fee, the flood and the sky,
But never a human leaves the shore.

"Boatmen, then, are we cowards all?
Are most they prank without a child?"
"Try it yourself, Lord Count," they cried.
"Alas!" said he, "for my strength is slight."

Out from the crowd a wagoner sprang
Down to launched with the speed of thought.
"Will anyone follow? Is no helper wanted?
The arm is strong and he cares for naught.

Twice he plunge he with plain courage,
Twice both he brought his safe to shore;
Twice he had the last present in peasants,
When with awful rush the arch fell over.

There was a low voice and man or men
A single laborer brave and bold.
Grand was the deed," I hear you say;
"But still he did it for pounds and gold."

Listen, then. "Came the deed you've done,
And well," said the Count, "I reward the deed."
Franklin and modestly answered then
Very silent man with the footsteps sound.

My sire, Lord Count, is no for gold;
Your money at th the keeper give;
Lass in the flood to his little all.
Yet he and his wife and child more live."

With a careless smile he turned and went,
This man, we know, with the frank and honest eye,
We sine of his fame; but what was his name
Is known alone to the Lord on high.

The Polly-Dancers.

When a wee bit of a child—almost a baby—I remember that one day my father called me to the low table, which was just about on a level with my eyes, and said:

"Look at the Polly-dancers!"

He had brought in a green pine-twig from the wood-pile, had cut off half a dozen brush-like little tufts, had trimmed them up, and then, lifting upon them gently, had set them down upon the table as if they were alive. They floated this way and that, each facing its own direction; and when one moved too near the edge of the table, a light puff from his lips would send it back again. They seemed to me like tiny green-skirted sylphs having a frolic together, and I wholly forgot my Christmas and my Lowlow dolls in my rapture over the Polly-dancers.

When I asked, "Where did the Polly-dancers come from?" and was answered "From the woods," a new, unexplored world rose before me. There was a dark-blue sky against the sunset, across the river, and another heavier line of purple-green in the distance, toward the sea, which I had heard called "the woods." The same had been full of mystery, no before; but from that moment it stood for a wonderland—the home of the Polly-dancers! How I longed for the time when I should be old enough to go to the woods! The next day, or summer day, a year or two after, my father asked me if I would care to take me with him to the woods. Happy girl! He will see the Polly-dancers!

But the walk was through a long street, past a great many houses, then over an open, unshaded road. But at last we were there. When the cool, lofty greenness closed us in, and fresh earthy smells came up from the mossy leaves beneath our feet, I seemed to know it all as if I had been there before. There were really "the woods" of my dream!

My brother wanted me on a great rock covered with lichens, and told me not to move from the spot until he came for me. Then he went out of sight with his basket, whistling. I felt like crying for loneliness when I saw him disappear, but the stillness around me imposed a feeling of awe that made me afraid to utter a sound. And presently I began to feel at home in the wonderful place. There were soft whisperings all about me, that seemed like kind voices of unseen friendly people, rustlings as of gossamer garments.

Nothing would have tempted me from my perch, for I had read of elves and gnomes and fairies, and I firmly believed in them. They always lived in the woods; and, though I might gladly have stepped inside a fairy-ring, just once, I would not for worlds have done so without first feeling my hand fasten about the business is that the Vanderbilts and Goulds will still be able to make the people pay dividends on the vapor. The reduction, however, is in the line of retribution, and things are becoming healthy.

Quarrying Marble in Vermont.

The more imported marble quarries and works are situated north and west of Rutland itself, at Center Rutland, West Rutland, Sutherland Falls, and lesser points in the vicinity. The Vermont Marble company is, in fact, domiciled at all three of these places. It has finishing works at Center Rutland, quarries at West Rutland, and both quarries and mills at Sutherland Falls. At the first-named point a marble is excavated, and then, as a splendid water-power, which naturally is not neglected, and here one can observe every stage in the process, except the quarrying itself. The marble is brought to the mills in immense blocks, sawed, turned, chiselled, polished, mounted, and emerges as fountains, capitals, cornices, columns, mantelpieces, and tabletops. Much of this work, especially the hand-work, of course, be studied in every place where people lie and have monuments set up by the local stone-cutter over their graves, but the heavier preliminary labor is best to be seen at the quarries themselves.

The marble is delivered at the mills in elongated cubes—parallelopipeds, I suppose. Euclid would say—from ten to fifteen feet long and three feet on the feet square, and placed on the frame for sawing. An expert will tell you at a glance the number of reductions, that is, of thickness and number of the slabs, according to the quality, the shape and size of the block, or the special nature of the orders to be filled. To outward appearance a "gang," as a set of saws is called, resembles the old-fashioned upright sash-mill, except that the metal frame contains not one but many saws, arranged at different intervals, corresponding to the desired thickness of the cuts, one process, therefore, divides as many blocks into slabs. The saw, too, is should be added, no teeth, but cutting is the joint effect of a hard edge of the steel blade and the sand and water which is fed into the opening and thus produces an immense friction. The ordinary progress is about two and a half inches an hour, and the gangs work night and day. The polishing of small pieces is done on a revolving iron disk somewhat twelve feet in diameter. The marble is thrown upon this, and caught by fixed wooden strips like the nail of a circle, while the motion of the wheel, which is supplied with sand and water, furnishes the attrition. It takes two or three hours to polish a surface does not much. Heavy pieces are smoothed by hand, with the aid of pumicestone. Marble is turned into circular shapes on a lathe, exactly like iron, and is sawed with an ordinary dry drill.—Harper's Magazine.

Never No More.

He had just got his oyster-supper opened in the public when in came a man who asked:

"Got any raws?"

"Yes, sir."

"Serve 'em on the half-shell?"

"We do."

"Extra large?"

"We have some of the largest oysters I ever saw."

The price was asked and given, and as it seemed to be perfectly satisfactory the man ordered a dozen and added:

"I've got a slight contraction of the muscles of the throat, and sometimes I choke. If anything happens to me run me to the door where I can get the air and then rush for a drink of water."

The caterer promised to observe the caution, but it is was only when the twelfth and last oyster was taken in before the man rose from his stool which stood out like temporary mails that anything happened. Then the oater suddenly turned purple, heaves bulged out, and he began to skip around like a goat dodging a club. The caterer did not know. The oaterer seized him by the arm and tuttered him to the door, and then handed to the rear end of the restaurant for a glass of water. When he returned with it, lad expecting to see the customer lying on the floor in the agonies of suffocation, no one was in sight. The man was out in the liver, nor around the door. He was two blocks away, and his twelth oyster had gone down to keep the company of the other eleven.

Just exactly another such thing won't happen in that place again. Some other man will come in and choke through my start in to play the game, but before he can eaten his second oyster he will be disgusted with a hickory club, and he body sent to some medical college to find where the lose spake was.—Detroit Free Press.

Little Belgium.

The total area of Belgium is 11,756 square miles, or 7,526,000 acres, could be cultivated, and of this 6,000,000 acres are productive. The remainder being in forest. Belgium is credited with being the most productive agriculturally of any country in the world. The average yield of wheat is 27.3 bushels; rye, 25.4; oats, 42.4; barley, 35.1; buckwheat, 22.5; potatoes, 194 bushels per acre. It will be seen that in spite of this the average is more than twice that of Michigan. The population of this little area is 5,912,913. There are 350,000 horses, 100,000 mules and asses, 718,800 cows and 600,000 other cattle, 787,000 sheep, 593,913 hogs, 208,000 goats, and nearly 24,000,000 fowls. It is not contended that the soil of Belgium is naturally more fertile than that of some other countries, but that a system of high cultivation has made it so.

THE JOURNAL

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

A NEW teacher in North Carolina, who was giving a lesson on the piano, discovered something wrong with the piano, and upon opening the pianoforte, found a large snake coiled up on the strings.

THE latest yarn emanating from Erie, Pa., is to the effect that Miss Susan Conkoe was attracted thither from Ireland by the ghost of her brother, which informed her that he left a large estate which was being enjoyed by a fraudulent heir, and she spent twelve months in securing title to a farm near town which properly belonged to her.

A LAKE over the Mississippi at New Orleans, where the river is 2,030 feet wide, is projected. An engineer proposes seven spans of 330 feet each, one mile a span. The piers are to be oval in plan, driven in clusters, and heavily cased and capped with iron. The depth of water will be no obstacle, as the piles can be spliced. The estimated cost is $12,000,000.

SINCE last at a menagerie in Liverpool recently witnessed a thrilling spectacle. A Swiss tamer entered the cage of a young Arabian lion for the purpose of taming him, although he had been told not to do so. He had no sooner thus entered when the beast sprang and seized him by the head, with great difficulty the tamer was extricated and extinguished the lights, after which, between the fury of the tigress and the panic of the people, within the building was exceeding tremendous. No less than ten persons, including the pastor of the church, received severe injuries, the originators of the disturbance were turned to the elephant's prank. Seizing the elephant's trank ("Smoot," Reed called it), he tried to wind it round and fling it away from it, but the elephant drew its trank from Reed's hand and swinging it around gave Reed a terrible blow on the side of the head. Reed gave back and felled the elephant to the ground with a blow from his fist delivered over the eye. The elephant's keeper then attacked Reed and Reed knocked him down. In the meantime the elephant had regained its legs and gave Reed another blow on the side. The elephant's companion then appeared and actually knocked the elephant over on its back, and then left the tent.

THE United States Senate, as at present constituted, is, in a number of respects, a peculiar body. In no particular is it so strongly marked as for its thirstiness. Not only for its thirstiness, but for the singular turn that peculiarity takes, as shown by the accounts of the Secretary of that body. The latest report of the Acting Secretary of the Senate contains the following purchases of Apollinaris water:

June 5—Per 6 cases, 200 quarts	$12.00
June 10—Per 10 cases, 200 quarts	15.00
June 14—Per 10 cases, 200 quarts	15.00
June 16—Per 9 cases, 200 quarts	13.50
June 17—Per 10 cases, 200 quarts	15.00
June 21—Per 6 cases, 200 quarts	9.00
June 25—Per 6 cases, 200 quarts	9.00
June 26—Per 10 cases, 200 quarts	15.00
Total	$104.50

In the month covered by these extraordinary purchases, the Senate may have been, but probably was not, in session twenty days. The sessions were from five to eight hours. Taking it for granted that the water was all consumed, which doubtless was not the case, and that the whole was full, which was not the fact by several, each Senator consumed an average of six gallons of Apollinaris water each day. The Senate is a deliberative body, but it does not dilly-dally in its thirst, and, when it does, it does it with a vim. It is a somewhat peculiar thirst, and it is a somewhat peculiar Senate. It is a body of men who have one of the most metal family names in the country, and most familiar in fashionable annals, a family which delights to trace its lineage to a royal source. This proud dame has married her daughter or if by mere force to a connected lord of hereditary acres. It was a familiar fact of the society in which she was a conspicuous figure, and it was impossible not to ask: "Can there be anything more comely vulgar than to sell a daughter for money and a title to a man for whom she does not care; and shall we begin to expect that our aristocracy will develop the vulgar offshoots?"

Delights are still silent, and the brilliant rooms began to fill and murmur with a gay company. Among them was a lady and her dismissed Mrs. Snasher, to whose unparalleled fetes even Belinda would be admitted if she requested a card. The Snasher lineage is not renowned or regal; the Snasher name is simply plain, unassuming, the Snasher manners are those of the solid people' rich who are not also suddenly refined.

"Is any conceivable vulgarity greater than that which simply vulgarizes, and shall we continue these exercises by expelling also this essentially vulgar Snasher?"

Belinda was still silent. She has remained silent even to this day.—"The Easy Chair," in Harper's Magazine.

Pretty Tidies.

Very pretty little pocket cases for holding the tiny tidies are made of bits of satin and silk, and are far more dainty to use than the heavy cases of perforated cardboard and silver mounings.

The silk and satin may be chosen from as delicate colors as may be fancied, but the one we shall describe is made of black satin, lined with a pale shade of lilac silk. The materials required for the case consisted of a piece of light-quality bristol-board, four and one-quarter inches long by three inches wide, a strip of satin four and one-half inches long by ten wide, and silk the same size as the satin. Fold the piece of bristol-board exactly in the middle, so that each side shall be two and one-half inches wide; cover it smoothly with the satin for the outside and the silk for the lining; as nothing will be used on the edges, they should be joined so neatly that no stitches can be seen. Care should be taken that the exact middle of the cover and lining is at the fold of the bristol-board, then fold in the ends of the satin and silk extending beyond the lining to within a half inch of the center, this forms the pieces in which the cards are slipped. When the edges are neatly fastened press the case together and place for awhile under a weight so that it will be pressed flat and smooth; then on one side of the cover paint in a diagonal position a cluster of lilies-of-the-valley, and on the other, some forget-me-nots.

Plain white cards, with or without beveled edges, and having the name in plain script, are always in good taste. An engraved copper-plate used for printing these can be obtained for $1.00, including fifty printed cards, and from this plate as many more as you may desire can be printed for 50 cents per hundred.

Wicker work-baskets are prettily trimmed by weaving in the openings inch-wide satin ribbon of a cardinal color. A row of this should be brought all around the bent-over rim by putting the end of the ribbon through one opening, over one, and pull it through; the third to the under side again, spreading all the ribbon on the upper side the full width in the center; weave the ribbon in this way all around the edge, and join the ends on one with a little bow. On the opposite side of the basket leave a little square cushion, for pins and loose needles, with a piece of ribbon placed diagonally around it and tied in a bow to the basket edge. Unless the bottom of the basket is very firm and close, fit a pasteboard exactly to it, and cover neatly with sateen of the same shade as the ribbon used. Inexpensive little baskets for holding thimble, thread and scissors can be made very ornamental in this way.—Ladies' Floral Cabinet.

Charming Girl Students.

Prof. F. L. Ritter's genial face shone with a ruddy after-dinner glow. It is his task to guide the hands and voices of the dear Vassar girls in music. His eyes sparkled through a pair of Brazilian pebbles as the reporter approached.

"How are all the girls, Professor?" he questioned, with a sympathetic smile, as he hunked out the lock. Then with what interest he watched you fit the glittering band on your smallest finger, giving advice as to weight, size and style with kind friendliness.

Out on the street, after your purchase was made, what delicious thrills kept tingling through your veins, and that a warm sensibility to bling they was about your heart.

In the exuberance of your joy you could have embraced the whole world, and three times you went out of your way to help tired, frightened children over the crowded crossings. In the street car you surrendered your seat to the stout woman with the big market basket, without a selfish thought, and stood on the platform with the driver contentedly for fifteen long blocks. Little beggar girls passed from you in abashed humiliation, and lovely, impudent boot-blacks regarded you as their legitimate prey. Sitting in your arm-chair now, in your solitary bachelor apartment, you to be solitary and bachelor no longer, you take the tiny casket from your pocket, and, with the golden band between your fingers, fall adreaming of the things to be.

Deep down in the sanctuary of your heart is registered the vow to love, protect and cherish with all honor and tenderness the sweet little cricket lands to you forever.

How earnestly and faithfully you plan to shield and guard her, striving ever to advance in truth and nobleness so that your breast may always be a fitting shrine for her pure love. With what tender reverence you touch with your lips the shining token of the bliss to be, as you unmask a prayer in your heart that God will bless the glad, new life and hand so soon to wear your wedding ring.

In your reverie in the deep armchair, love holds aloft a fairy mirror, and pictures all the future's scenes. In fancy you behold the dear form clad in flowing sussey garments and enveiled in a dimpy cloud of lace, floating back from you up the isle of the stately old church. The pastor's impressive head is crowned with orange flowers, and in the beautiful eyes is a tender fondness shining. Around the sweet lips plays a quivering smile like April sunshine, and the hand on your arm trembles a little.

The grand solemn ceremony begins which binds her fair young life to yours, for joy or grief, weal or woe, till death shall break the link, and as the words fill your ears you realize with grateful, awed intensity that a grand wonderful responsibility and never over the happiness of a human life is given into your keeping.

Then you walk dreamily down the aisle and are drive home, where you partake of the wedding breakfast and make a speech of thanks when the health of the bridal couple is proposed, with only a vague, indistinct notion of what you are doing, for heart and brain are filled to overflowing with the glad exultant consciousness that the wonderful white robed creature beside you is your wife, and that on the third finger of her hand gleams your golden wedding ring.

Machine Guns.

Machine guns in the field are now entirely abandoned. The French suitrailleuse, from which such wonders were expected, was as heavy as a field gun and required six horses to draw it. Its range was practically the same as that of infantry, and had its disadvantages. If the range was correct and the mark remained steady, great execution was done, but the slightest error would throw every bullet out, unless at short range. Both French and Germans have given up machine guns for the field, and have increased and developed their field artillery. They both admit that the machine gun cannot face field artillery at artillery ranges, and that its projectiles have no power whatever against walls or buildings or earthworks; but they believe when two hostile bodies of infantry are within the machine guns may be brought from cover, in which they should be kept till then, and may then exercise great influence on the result.

The Wrong Document.

Among the recorded mistakes of busy men who are too much in a hurry to be careful is the following:

A few weeks ago a gentleman entered the office of a well-known insurance agent, and, tossing a paper on the counter, said: "That's run out, and I want to get it renewed."

The clerk unfolded the document, and, with a smile, inquired:

"Are you sure that this has run out?"

"Oh, yes," said the gentleman, "my wife told me it ran out yesterday morning."

"Well, I am sorry for you, but we are not taking that kind of risks now," responded the clerk, as he handed it back to him. It was his marriage certificate.

Your Wedding Ring.

To-morrow will be your wedding-day. The feast is prepared, the guests bidden, and all things made ready.

In the pocket of your vest is the tiny box containing the golden talisman which is to change all your future life. How your heart beats with glad, tumultuous throbbing at thought of the shining circlet resting just above it, and how absurdly happy you have felt ever since the wonderful thing has been in your possession.

The clerk in the jeweler's store saw through the elaborate unconcern of your air, and was no whit deceived by the careless tone in which you asked for plain gold rings. "Wedding rings, sir?" he questioned, with a sympathetic smile, as he hunked out the lock. Then with what interest he watched you fit the glittering band on your smallest finger, giving advice as to weight, size and style with kind friendliness.

Why Women Faint.

An old bachelor says ladies do not faint from tight lacing, but from tight hair-dressing. "Is it a sure preventive, truly?"

"It is, ma'am. It is indorsed by the Local Medical Council of London as the best preventive ever known."

"Well, I'll take a bottle. How much is it?"

"Only 75 cents, ma'am. But you should know how to use it properly. If you know, so he should have a bottle ready at his side in case of an attack, so to be prepared in case of an attack."

THE "oil spot" in the Gulf of Mexico, about which there has been so much talk of late as a place that is unruffled while all about is storm, is, Lieut. Stamm, of the revenue cutter Andrew Johnson, says, about ten miles south of the Sabine pass, and extends about two miles along the slope and seaward three-quarters of a mile. It is not noticeable in calm weather, but in a gale it takes a reddish hue, and is thick and muddy. The Lieutenant has pushed a pole thirty feet in length down into the soft stratum. The mud is soapy, and has remarkable cleaning qualities. If there is oil, the Lieutenant says, it comes from the bottom, as none of the mud of the Sabine river has any of the properties of that from the "oil spot."

THE carriages of the fast train which is to run from Paris to St. Petersburg will be supplied with adjustable wheels which will enable them to travel on various gauges. From Paris to the Russian frontier the same gauge is used, but there it changes, and at the frontier the cars are lifted off their axles and Wirtzallen, the wheels will have to be readjusted. Travelers will thus be able to go the whole distance without the inconvenience of having to change carriages. The speed of the trains will be one not hitherto attempted on the Continent. It is to be 50 kilometers or 36 miles (without stoppage) an hour. It is announced that the trains are on "the American pattern," including kitchen, dining-saloon, reading and drawing rooms, and all the other comfortable arrangements essential to modern traveling.

A NORTH CAROLINA negro knocked an elephant out in two rounds the other day. The Charlotte Observer thus describes the match: Reed, who is a tall, muscular colored man, had been giving the elephant a few apples, handing it off except one, which he put in his pocket. While his attention was thus diverted the elephant reached out its trunk and getting hold of Rufus' pocket, tried to pull the apple out, tearing the vest nearly off before the owner's attention was turned to the elephant's prank. Seizing the elephant's trank ("Smoot," Reed called it), he tried to wind it round and fling it away from it, but the elephant drew its trank from Reed's hand and swinging it around gave Reed a terrible blow on the side of the head. Reed gave back and felled the elephant to the ground with a blow from his fist delivered over the eye. The elephant's keeper then attacked Reed and Reed knocked him down. In the meantime the elephant had regained its legs and gave Reed another blow on the side. In the month covered by these extraordinary purchases, the Senate may have been, but probably was not, in session twenty days. The sessions were from five to eight hours. Taking it for granted that the water was all consumed, which doubtless was not the case, and that the whole was full, which was not the fact by several, each Senator consumed an average of six gallons of Apollinaris water each day. The Senate is a deliberative body, but it does not dilly-dally in its thirst, and, when it does, it does it with a vim. It is a somewhat peculiar thirst, and it is a somewhat peculiar Senate. It is a body of men who have one of the most metal family names in the country, and most familiar in fashionable annals, a family which delights to trace its lineage to a royal source. This proud dame has married her daughter or if by mere force to a connected lord of hereditary acres. It was a familiar fact of the society in which she was a conspicuous figure, and it was impossible not to ask: "Can there be anything more comely vulgar than to sell a daughter for money and a title to a man for whom she does not care; and shall we begin to expect that our aristocracy will develop the vulgar offshoots?"

Notes and News.

Paul Cannino, a prominent lumberman and old resident of Manistee, committed suicide at his home last Friday morning by shooting himself through the heart. There is no known reason for the act.

The discovery was recently made of a portion of stone wall laid in mortar in the woods about three miles northwest of St. Ignace. It is supposed that this is the remains of a jesuit chapel, as it very nearly corresponds with the location of such a building as indicated on a map made by Father Marquette over 200 years ago.

During the fall cleaning, so dear to the good housewifes heart, you doubtless run across some garments left from last winter which are too good to be thrown away and not quite good enough to wear. Do not cut them up into carpet rags but give them to some needy person and in keeping the winter's chill away do a nobler work.

A pecuniary paper claims that the only object which prohibitionists have in view is to cut the throat of the republican party. There must be some mistake about this. The throat of the republican party is already cut, and the party is about ready to give up the ghost. The disloyalty deed was done by the party itself. It is as clear a case of suicide as was ever recorded, and to attempt to charge it over to the prohibitionist is the quintessence of cowardice.

A peculiar clock, which marks the hours from one to twenty-four, has recently been completed by a Wilmington, Del., manufacturer. The new time piece is one of the kind soon to be adopted by several of the railroads. The most conspicuous innovations are in the marking upon the dial and in the movements of the wheels which run the hands. The minute hand instead of making twelve revolutions to every revolution of the hour hand, as in the ordinary clock, makes twenty-four revolutions while the hour hand passes around once. The figures upon the dial are marked in Arabic, in stead of Roman numerals. They are from one to twenty-four inclusive, the spaces between the figures thus being only half as great as those on the dial of an ordinary twelve-hour clock. The minute hand therefore marks the half minute as well as the minute. The railroads proposing to adopt the new system as a standard will prepare new time tables, upon which the distribution between trains marked a. m. and those marked p. m., which is often overlooked by careless travelers, will no longer appear. This system does away with the a. m. and p. m. business. It begins the day from midnight, and continues for twenty four hours, the twelfth hour being noon and the twenty-fourth hour midnight. The minutes between the close of the day, the seventy-fourth hour, and one hour after midnight will be expressed as so many minutes after midnight. Then four minutes after 12 o'clock, midnight, current time, will be shown as 0.4, indicating that the day is four minutes old; and so continues until sixty minutes are reached, when the hour is 1.00. From that point it will be shown as now, 1.10, 1.15, and so on, until it is 2.00. The same rule governs through the entire twenty-four hours, all numbers below 12.00 indicate a. m. and all above 12.00 p. m.

The Longest Bridge.

China possesses the longest bridge in the world. It is at Langang, over an arm of the China sea, and is five miles long, seventy feet high, with a roadway seventy feet wide, and has 300 arches. The parapet is a balustrade, and each of the pillars, which are seventy-five feet apart, supports a pedestal on which is placed a lion twenty-one feet long, made of one piece of marble. The highest bridge in the world is said to be the railway viaduct at Garabit, in France, now being erected over a river in the departments of Cantal. The bridge has a total length of about 1,880 feet, and near the middle of the great center arch, which is one of the noteworthy features of the structure, the height from the bed of the river to the rail is 413 feet. The viaduct was commenced in 1881, and is to be completed next year.

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.; HARBOR AND SUMMER RESORTS.

Charlevoix, the county seat of Charlevoix county, is a thriving village of about 1,200 inhabitants is situated on the high bluffs over looking Lake Michigan, between Round lake and Lake Michigan, and on both banks of Pine river, which forms the connecting link between Lake Michigan and the inland lakes, and is the key to the whole Pine lake region with nearly eighty miles of inner line. The citizens are justly proud of their town, and manifest a commendable spirit of enterprise and liberality. A writer, speaking from eight years acquaintance with the place, has said that the intellectual and moral standard of Charlevoix people is superior to any place of its size he has ever known. There are about ninety business firms here, representing nearly all branches. A few however, are lacking, which could be added, and probably will in no distant day. Some branches are represented by a single firm, and others would make closer competition, more activity, and better satisfaction. And this competition is sure to come as the village grows.

The channel between Lake Michigan and Round lake is 150 feet wide, and has a depth of 18 feet in full length. This gives us a perfectly land-locked harbor where vessels may ride in safety during the severest storms. Between Round and Pine lakes the capacity of the channel is slightly less, but still sufficient for the quite traffic.

The following industries are not represented here, and we stand like to see a part or all of them started:

A dumpcart could find immediate sale for the milk of several cows, if delivered at the door regularly and promptly.

A cracker baker would get the trade, for the best crackers we get here are stale when conveyed with fresh.

All in want of lumbermen or any kind of machineshop goodies, is small enough.

Among the industries requiring nurtured capital which we have in abundance near at hand that might be successful here are the manufacture of chairs, agricultural implements, and farm wagons.

Handles of all kinds, and wooden bowls could be made here as economically as anywhere.

THE RESORTS.

Between Round lake and Pine lake and south of the main channel which connects them, is located the Charlevoix summer resort. The grounds of the resort comprise about 25 acres, and rise by three natural and well defined terraces from Pine lake. The two lower terraces are sufficiently wide for cottage lots, with a broad walk in front, while the upper terrace stretches far away in a level plateau, from which glimpses of Lake Michigan are obtained. More than half the tract is covered land, other parts being thinly wooded, and the portion farthest from the water being covered with heavy timber, while in the rear of the whole the dense woods extend to some distance. A handsome hotel, the Belvedere house, has been erected on an eligible site, from which a charming view of the blue waters reaching far to the southeast is obtained. A number of beautiful cottages also stand upon terraces overlooking the lake. A music hall 20x50 feet and a bowling alley 40 feet long, have been built and numerous improvements made. The company owning this resort was organized on the 23d day of May, 1879, under the laws of Michigan.

Directly opposite the Charlevoix resort is the Chicago resort, founded by a stock company of wealthy Chicago gentlemen for a private summer retreat for their families and their friends. An elegant club house, a large boat house, and several fine cottages have already been built, and extensive improvements have been begun.

As a resort Charlevoix has the superb advantage of lake breezes from both bays and with the winds which commonly prevail in a Michigan summer has the advantage of them all. Its landscape surroundings are those of an inland lake, one of the prettiest sheets in the west, and in this respect it could scarcely be improved. Nature has provided every facility for healthful recreation and amusement, including unrivaled boating and fishing, and the managers of the resorts make the most of their delightful location.

PINE LAKE.

One of the loveliest of all the many beautiful lakes that adorn this fair northern country is Pine lake. It stretches east and west some 20 miles. About five miles east it divides into two arms, extending as the crow flies, south to the distance of some 16 miles. Into the finger end of south arm flows the Jordan river, the famous trout stream. Pond Windmill park, see page 2 of the following graphic pen picture of Pine lake. Far away in the southwest for fifteen miles, stretches the placid, smiling surface of the lake, with its white and yellow sand shores, the contour of the hills in all its meandering curvature, the verdant ridges rise on every side from the shifting shore line, and hold the lake in their embrace of beauty, while rounded hill-tops bulge up in rapid succession across the rolling landscape, till hill, vale, and sky, green, purple and blue, blends together in the blended hues of the distant horizon."

AROUND THE COUNTY.

The surface of the county is every where rolling, and in some parts decidedly hilly. It is well watered and is generally covered with innumerable spring brooks of the purest water. There is some available water power, particularly on the Jordan and Boyne rivers. The soil varies from a light sandy to a heavy clay, filled with calcareous marlacy. The subsoil is of an varied character as that of the surface. Sugar maple, elm, beech, basswood, ash, hemlock, and cedar timber is found in great quantities throughout the county. The principal crops are winter wheat, oats, corn, hay, clover, potatoes, and root crops. The summer resorts at Charlevoix furnish an excellent market for all sorts of garden vegetables. All fruits do well, excepting grapes and peaches. The hardier kinds of apples are especially successful. Charlevoix county is of the northern extremity of the celebrated Michigan fruit belt. The cost of clearing averages from $25 per acre, although the wood produced, generally goes for the clearing. There are no government lands in the county. There were 34 acres of state swamp, 1,095 acres of primary school, 4,575 acres of agricultural college, and 42,285 acres of Grand Rapids and Indiana railroad land, subject to entry July 1, 1882. Unimproved lands are held at from $2 to $10 per acre, while improved farms average from $15 to $30, in the interior and from $25 to $100 near Charlevoix. The timber business is an important enterprise in this country. Wood, ties, frame-posts, hemlock bark, and logs are cut during the winter, and are shipped during the summer to Chicago, Milwaukee, Racine, and other lake ports. There are several saw-mills in the county, and an iron furnace at Ironton.

It is said that a citizen of Banks township, well up in official honors, sets an example to the growing generation hardly to be commended. On a certain Sunday he was seen digging potatoes, and at another time (on Sunday) load a game of base ball.

Leaves Charlevoix Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays, at 1.30 p. m. and arrive in Elk Rapids the next day by 11 a. m.

Mr. C. F. Gates, of Chicago, one of our popular summer resorters, is a co-partner in the welfare of the Congregational society of Charlevoix, and gave $82 worth of paint-oils, and through his influence among friends, the amount was raised to over $112. This is a most generous gift, and one to be appreciated for the society. May they live long and prosper.

Last Tuesday evening a number of the friends of Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Van Auken gathered at their new residence on Clinton street, and proceeded to make themselves merry, the occasion being the 25th birthday of Mr. Van Auken. A number of presents were made. An excellent oyster supper and other refreshments were provided by the ladies, which added much to the pleasures of the occasion. The party remained until a late hour, and all expressed themselves well pleased with their visit.

Mr. Stauffer has decided to put a saw mill and handle factory on his farm eight miles southwest of town. He is situated right in a section of country heavily timbered with a fine class of timber, peculiarly adapted to this kind of business, and only three miles from Horton's Bay, on Pine lake, which affords good shipping facilities for manufactures. He would like a partner in the business with a small capital. Such a man would find it to his advantage to address him at Carpenter, Emmet Co., Mich. Mr. Stauffer is the owner of an extensive amount of excellent timber on his own land.—Petoskey Democrat.

We recommend to the ladies of the churches here, the getting up of oyster suppers or socials in some convenient place near the business part of the village. The Central M. E. church in Lansing is located near the center of business, and is provided with a basement for prayer meetings, socials, etc. As often as once in two weeks a committee is appointed from the ladies of the society to solicit provisions, and prepare and wait on tables. An alphabetical list of names being prepared, the appointment of the committee is simply to designate a number, beginning with A, the number depending somewhat on their ability to provide, and this committee settle among themselves what shall be provided. They serve cold meats, baked beans, biscuit and butter, coffee, cheese, pickles, and all kinds of cake. This supper is given for ten cents, and is ready from 5:30 to 7:30 o'clock; being convenient to business, it is patronized by business men, clerks, mechanics and their families, and is fed by people generally, who want a good supper quick and cheap. These socials are known as "ten cent teas" and have become very popular, the receipts frequently being from twenty to thirty dollars. After supper, they take the evening for pleasure, and never fail to have a good time. The provisions are substantial but comparatively inexpensive, and being conducted by the ladies, leaves nearly all the gross receipts as a profit for the society. Hot coffee and baked beans make a supper to be relished by a working man at any time, and most any of them can afford ten cents, especially when it goes to the church.

Miscellaneous Marine News.

Lake Michigan is having a high old time these days.

One of our fishermen lost over $200 worth of nets during the late storm.

The steam barge Geo. L. Colwell arrived Sunday with a new mill for the Pine Lake Lumber Co.

The loss to the fishermen in nets, time, etc., cannot be estimated until the weather becomes settled.

The new revetment on the south side of the channel was considerably injured by the storm this week.

Wrecking tug Leviathan returned to Cheboygan from the scene of disaster to the schooner Rodolpus, and reports that she is a total loss. Her outfit was saved.

The tug S. S. Coe, of Milwaukee, equipped with steam pump etc., stopped here last Thursday night, on her way to the assistance of the schooner Lewis K. Clark on the beach near Cross Village.

The propeller John Otis brought in from Manitowoc, Wis., on her last trip, 80 tons baled hay, 10 tons bran, 10 barrels flour, and one and one-half tons of butter for the Pine Lake Iron Co.'s supply house.

The Sheboygan Transportation steamer Menominee, which has been running in weekly trips between Chicago and Grand Haven, made her last trip for this season last Friday. She will go into winter quarters at Manitowoc, Wis.

The schooner Rachel, which sprung a leak outside and ran to the Manitous, arrived in Chicago in tow of the tug Williams, of Manistee. Her outfit and deckload (the cargo is the same as last, she is leaking at the rate of ten inches an hour. She will go into dry dock.

The revenue cutter Andy Johnson is under orders to go to Mackinaw to meet the new government steamer recently built at Buffalo and intended for Mobile. The Poesenkill is acting as escort for the new steamer to Mackinaw and the Johnson will accompany her to Chicago. She goes down the Mississippi.

The steamer Red Bird left Charlevoix for Sheboygan, Wis., last Thursday. On her return she was struck by the tornado off Manitowoc Rapids, where she took shelter for the night. Monday afternoon she came cautiously creeping our harbor in the evening. Considering all the circumstances it was a quick trip.

The Manitowoc papers are laying in supplies. The season has been a bad one throughout and few vessels have made big money, still the number of new boats projected to be built this winter is as large as ever. They will be of the very largest size and of the latest design, and will be able to make more trips than will starve small boats out. Ex.

The tug S. S. Coe, of Milwaukee, which went on Friday to the relief of the schooner Louis K. Clark, on the beach near Cross Village, had received her, and started away but was obliged to let go again, and went to Cheboygan for shelter. The schooner Rodolpus, said three men, in cluding the engineer of the steam pump, were drowned.

A Milwaukee dispatch says the schooner Ashtabula, from Chicago to Escanaba, foundered three miles off North point, Sunday afternoon about 3 o'clock. The crew took to the yawl, and were picked up by the tug Starke Brothers, which was on her way to the schooner at the time she went down. The Ashtabula had on board 450 barrels of salt, and two tons of box staff.

Last Sunday afternoon the large three-mast schooner Elizabeth Jones, bound from Chicago to Buffalo with a cargo of 40,000 bushels of corn, run on the reef off Racine. A heavy south west gale prevailed at the time, and the vessel had lost her forward canvas. Both the cargo and the vessel are insured. She is out about three feet. Some of the cargo wet. The crew are all safe.

The new dock at Petoskey, as well as what was left of the old one, and the one at Bay View, were carried away Sunday night. The shore is lined for several miles near the bay with floating debris of all kinds, including household goods and merchandise from the warehouse on the city dock. The loss to the village is about $10,000, while the loss to H. O. Rose on the old dock and the Bay View society can hardly be estimated.

Perhaps one of the saddest occurrences in this region was the drowning of seven men at Petoskey Sunday, the following particulars of which we glean from the Grand Rapids Democrat of Tuesday: About 3:30 p. m. Mr. O. M. Chase, superintendent of the state fish hatcheries, with Mr. C. H. Brownell, assistant, and George W. Armstrong, foreman of the Petoskey hatchery, left Harbor Springs in a Mackinaw sail boat to return to Petoskey. The boat was manned by Moses Detwiler, former fish inspector in Canada, his two sons, Charles and George, and a nephew, George Detwiler, making seven persons in the boat. They were urged not to attempt the trip, as a terrible gale was blowing at the time from the northwest. When about one mile north of the new dock the boat was seen to capsize, precipitating the whole party into the water. The alarm was at once given and a volunteer crew of five went out in the yacht Coral to attempt a rescue, consisting of J. W. Cook, J. J. Atkins, Chester Carpenter, C. P. Hensley, and John C. Shirk. When about two miles out they passed the boat with two men clinging to it, but before the boat could be put about they lost sight of it and could not find it again and succeeded in saving themselves by almost superhuman exertions. The boat which the unfortunate men attempted to cross in, came ashore near Bay View, but no trace has yet been found of the bodies of the drowned, although the shore has been patrolled constantly up to the present time (10 p. m.), and the probabilities are that none of them will be recovered at present, as a heavy sea is running which makes an undercurrent from the shore.

South Arm.

Splendid autumn weather with occasional rain storms.

No more will Joseph carry the mail; it is now on the Wing.

Will Freeman came near getting drowned last Sunday while cruising on the Intermediate, but was rescued by Mr. H. B. Hipp.

Mr. McArthur visited friends in Jordan township last week.

A deer was shot in Echo, by Charles Spoles, weighing 216 pounds.

H. L. Page, of East Jordan, took a trip through the country last Sunday.

We are laboring under the impression that the report concerning buildings erected in East Jordan and South Arm are slightly (?) exaggerated or else building cases more there than at other places, which ought not to be the case.

CHRONICLES, CHAPTER I.

It came to pass in the province of Echo, in the days of Chester the king, in the third year of his reign, and in the tenth month of the year, that as Dimeon, chief man in the district, did lay upon his bed and sleep, that he did dream a dream; and this is the dream that he dreamed. That James Sale by name, did come into the land in casting in his account at the custom house of the district, and he so far gone astray that he had given securities to the district for $20 more than he thought. As Dimeon was looking at the cock-crowing, behold he was troubled and he said unto himself "What meaneth this dream? and what is the interpretation there of? I will arise and ask James. And straightway he goeth, and when James heard the dream, he said, "It is even so for as in dream is true and the interpretation is even according unto the dream." Therefore it came to pass that they called the other chief man of the district, whose name is George, and held a council, and agreed that it should be according unto the dream, but behold other men agree not therefore. But for the end of the matter will it not be found in the book of chronicles, chapter 2. F. A. N.

Chandler.

Mr. Benj. Burgess is visiting his parents in Shiawassee county and his nephew is doing his chores during his absence.

Mr. Samuel Hughes, who has been doctoring for a cancer, is not expected to live. The cancer is making rapid progress into his vital parts.

There are about forty hunters and trappers camping near C. A. Bloss's, in Chandler, and no doubt venison will take a tumble down in price.

Mr. Henry Crouch is at present sawing wood for Bucher & Co., in this town.

The young people of Chandler, had quite a lively time at the house Elisha Gallup, last Friday night, in the shape of a dance and supper. Joe Hattie was present also. Music was furnished by Upson and Pardee.

Mr. Eli. Bucher is seriously contemplating moving to Petoskey very soon. SCRATCH AWL.

Hayes.

Winter has arrived.

Thanksgiving—soon.

Everybody busy as bees.

It is a hard matter to find the bottom of the roads now-a-days.

Mr. Louis Brown, who has been in the south part of the state, the past few months, is visiting friends in Hayes.

That some of our farmers are bound to have good roads was indicated by the way they turned out to the "bee," near Mr. Murrys, one day last week.

Owing to the severe storm last Sunday, the people could not attend services at Fair Grove Sunday evening.

We do not profess to be a perfect master of orthography, but whose sense of the important offices spell Hayes, "Haz-a-s" we feel that we have a stray left to us. ZEKE.

Real Estate Transfers.

Reported for the Journal by Dennison Bros. real estate dealers.

The following is a list of transfers of real estate in Charlevoix county, where the consideration is $100 or over, for the week ending Tuesday evening, Nov. 15, 1883, as recorded in the office of register of deeds:

BY THE WASHES.

BY HERBERT E. CLARKE.

We stood for a little together,
The water kissing our feet,
Amend us glowed kind twight weather;
The morning and you were sweet.

I thought, as you stood thirty-dreaming,
"I was you that lighted the day;
And the water, glowing and gleaming
And hurrying ever away.

Vocal with brief light laughter,
As past you it fled to the sea,
Sighing, as I thought, for a word after
I think it agreed with me.

Flushed with the wind and glowing,
Silent you stood awhile,
Hair on the eyelids blowing,
Smiling a dreamy smile.

"The watching, there is a treasure,"
"A treasure," my soul replied;
"And the pain of it, and the pleasure, Sweeter than all beside."

And I saw the sweetest glitter,
What lurks like your feet,
And I crooned song, "Little mite be bitter,
Its bitter can make it sweet."

And laughed and frolicked around you,
Joined in frolicking you
And the merry sun kissed and crowned you
Queen of the morning blue.

Everything fair seemed to love you,
Seemed meant at your feet to fall;
And the talk, sinking high above you,
Sang you were the fairest of all.

And scarcely a word was spoken,
But our souls as each other spoke,
Till the dreamy spell was broken,
And we started and smiled and woke.

And so in the glorious weather,
In the morning kiss and gay,
Hoping to linger together,
Happily wandered away.

A NIGHT'S BATTLE.

BY ELLY M. CURRY.

Without, the wind, sighing softly, lingered in the tree, lattice and at intervals brushed the windows with a faint spray of rain. Within, the shadows deepened—deepened from the corners, gradually closing in over all the central barrenness of the room and shielding the woman who had thrown herself despairingly across the bed.

She lay very quietly in the darkness; but it was the quiet of bodily exhaustion. She could still think, and her thoughts were a passionate multitude.

A month before, she had believed herself reconciled—aye, even content to walk the weary treadmill of linked days and hope no more. She had refused to cure if she grew round-shouldered as other girls, and pale and pinched from the routine of the dusky factory-room, from which she could only see the sweet sunlight creeping into the street along the foreman's stretch, and creeping out again upon the gray buildings opposite, where the afternoon shadow rose like a strong nestide. She had even striven to go cheerfully to her work morning after morning and to put into it what little heart was left her out of all the tragic past. She had learned to measure off the hours by certain infallible sounds of the city; at half-past 9, the bell ringing for the opening of the warehouses; at 11, the same bell for the closing; at 12, the newsboys, shouting the noon edition (at 1 she had a half-hour's noon-time); at 2, again the warehouse bell; at 5, the early evening paper (now the sensible shadow crept toward the window-sill); at 5 a later edition; and at 6 came the end of the long day, when the whir of machinery was done and the "hands" in the shipping-room back hushed their jargon and departed, when she, too, tired-eyed and with aching chest, might creep along to her lonesome comfortless lodgings.

What a starved, stunted existence toward the last here since she had come to the city! With what keen anguish she remembered the sweetness of the old, sufferer days, just forever! For, standing up to battle with the world, she found, besides, the awful, burdening recollection of a parent's disgrace. Death had come upon her swiftly, crushingly, that terrible night when her father had cut the knot of his dilemma—insolvency and betrayed public trusts—with a single pistol-shot and so—escaped. She had loved him too well to reproach him, dead, for deserting her—for not having prepared her, at least, to work. But all she being gone, she, too, had fled from the old town and flung herself into the whirl of the city. God only knew how hard it had been, and she so weak, so inexperienced! Had she been but pitied, as men fit their sons (but not daughters, alas!) with a profession, or even a trade! This, had been her only lament in darkest hours.

Nevertheless, she had found work at last; hard, unstorable, poorly-recompensed. For every working day, a single dollar wherewith to purchase food and shelter, clothing and cleanliness, peace and virtue, and the thousand trifles of life. Those who paid it, thought it an excellent price.

And all the stifling summer she had toiled on, silently, uncomplainingly, only at last to lose even this foothold, without wage or warning, at an employer's caprice.

That was a fortnight since—and ever since she had been hunting other employment. To-night she was penniless and in debt for rent.

She wondered what would happen now. Was it beggary or starvation? The river, or—a charitable institution? Of the two, she chose the river.

When the shadows had conquered, none one struck a match in the long, outer passage, and the hall gas-light alone through the transom. Still she lay silent and fatened to the beating of a hanger—patient and persistent—in another apartment of the great building. The sounds jarred upon her in fretful continuity. And she was so tired, so hopeless, that she rose but slowly when some one came knocking. She rose but slowly and lit the gas; she smoothed her hair wearily, and stood a second in thought. In the flash of unceasingly light, her figure was painfully fragile; her beauty—for beauty was not wholly wrecked—strange, awesome, with olive pallor, heavy-spotted and sharp-lined profile.

She opened the door, at length, and so stood face to face with a man whose bearing and attire bespoke prosperity. Less surprised than annoyed, apparently, she gave him scant welcome.

"Natalie!" he cried, impetuously, and, entering, seemed disposed to remain.

She hesitated a moment, then closed the door.

"Well," he began, assuming the room with evident comprehension, "How do you get along?"

"Very well," she answered, unwillingly.

"I'm afraid you're not glad to see me," he said, after a moment, as if chagrined.

She was silent.

He drew his chair to her side and spoke appealingly:

"Natalie, why do you hate me so?"

She answered sadly, with drooping head: "It is out of my power to hate, or like—forever."

"Nonsense!"

She lifted her face with a look o wonder and misgivings; and presently she questioned, as earnestly as had he himself.

"Why do you follow me about, Harvey Drew? It cannot be for old friendship's sake, for you were not friend then, but enemy."

"Enemy" is a strong word. I was sore because you preferred Hunt Pierce—that was all. A thousand pities it was that he taint be lost at sea just at the hour of your trouble—"

Her solemn eyes rebuked him ere her passion trembles words:

"Spare the dead, at least!"

He moved back his chair impatiently. "You were engaged to him, then?"

"Yes," proudly.

"Not married, though?"

"Married?"

"Oh, you might pardon the question. Remember I left the town before the trouble came. I am glad you were not married."

"Why?" she asked, unflinchingly.

He smiled in a quiet way, and said nothing.

She studied his face fearfully for a space. It was not ill-favored, with its fair coloring, fine eyes and regular features; it was rather pleasant, but for a curve about the lips—the same curve that she remembered knowing in the old days, when Huntley Pierce lover-head and gone. God help her! I had mistrusted, and counselled her against, this Harvey Drew.

"An unprincipled fellow," her betrothed had said. (Ah, how she remembered all his words.) "Were he sets his heart on having anything, he will go any length, step to my measures to secure it?"

As she studied his face, it seemed to her the lips curve grew deeper, more definite, and threatened a cancer, perhaps a snarl. She could hardly endure it. She lowered her eyes, and they were dazzled by the diamond blazing in his cravat.

Yes, Hunt had not trusted him, and Hunt had never been wrong and right.

She wished that he would go. Surely he must see that his company was distasteful. Why had he not understood? Why had he pursued her so of late? She wondered if he knew she had lost her place, and pitied her. But she did not ask his pity. She only prayed for his departure.

Perhaps he divined as much.

"You are going to send me away?" he asked, sudden faintly.

She grasped the nearest excuse.

"I have not yet been to my supper."

"Come right along with me."

She wondered if he would force her to absolute rudeness.

"Why," he burst out, sharply, "what is the matter? You won't even be friendly. Don't you suppose I know what a struggle you are having, and all about your financial state? You are too proud altogether, and I—I want to help you."

He lowered his voice, and made a step forward as if to embrace her.

She recoiled, trembling with rage.

"If you have come to insult me, there is the door. You may go. Do not make me hate you!"

Her scornful eyes blazed upon him until his face flushed. He took a step as if to leave, and at oath escaped him. Then he turned, laughing lightly.

"I like your sauce. You are worth winning, Natalie, and—you have misjudged me. I meant no harm, believe me."

She answered with dry incredulity, "Don't do it again."

He waived the remark, and went on: "I am going now, but listen first to what I have to say. I always loved you—you know it now, I'm sure. I've thought a great deal about marrying you—especially of late, because I knew what hard times you were having, and how pleasant I could make life for you."

She averted her face lest he note the scorn, the repugnance, she could not conceal, as his voice sank into an easy confidence.

"How almost it all seemed! Was he joking? She could not determine. In any event, it was the sheerest mockery; even though he really cared for her, she noted neither respect nor esteem, much less love him.

And what if Hunt could know? She shuddered.

"Please, please let it go!" she implored at length. "This is only the wildest fancy. I—I will not doubt your words. But it is absurd. Perhaps you are pitying me. Be certain, I can always sustain myself. I will be your friend, if you like. That should be sufficient, I think," concluding unkindly.

"But, you see, it is not. Ah, Natalie!" with a touch of tenderness, "if you knew how much I cared for you! But—we'll talk of it to-morrow. I see you want me to go. Good-night, dear." He turned abruptly and swung himself out of the door.

"Good-night," she said, after him, in bewildered tone, and turned it too much slowly, trying to reason some out of his actions.

It was grotesque, horrible, this notion of his. She centered it for one very truly sane! She fell into hysterical laughter. To marry him—despising him as she did! The wildness of hysteria passed away and left her sobbing quietly at her own desolation. That it should have come to pass that she must give a second thought to this man's words. Oh, it was terrible! And now her faced burned with a fever, and her brain was swimming with an uproar of sounds; above which she the banjo was distinct, fretting over one trilling, harsh-bar strain of a comic song.

Occasionally a sharp thought would pierce the mass—the thought of possibility—the query of whether there could be more torture than she now endured, even if she were to take him at his word. Surely, she could not be worse distracted. And if he fret and vex her by persistent following, he might as well "pay the piper." And she laughed again hysterically. The banjo-player was still beating his instrument in a mock-mad way, but the hours wore on.

Since wished she could find a good side of the matter. It would be a relief to discover some virtue in him. She knew that he was a clever business man and always prosperous. Still, she despised him.

Good heavens! Why keep on going over and over it? Why could she not dismiss it—and him, since he could never be aught to her? What was it she remembered hearing about a girl marrying a man to get rid of him?

As the lions wore on, the house grew still, the gas dared and the wind—a the high window sharply. It was growing colder without.

Sometimes she walked to and fro, sometimes she fell despairingly on the bed, always her face burning and her hands were icy and powerless.

She heard a clock strike twelve.

Perhaps he would not return; perhaps he had done this to revenge himself—to frame her hopes, knowing her distress, and disappoint them.

She felt the need of composing herself to rest, since on the morrow she must search anew.

The rent was due; cold weather coming on. Work was dear.

Merciful heaven! what longings, what anxiety!

Sleep? She dozed a little, despite the gnawing pain. Perhaps this was only an hour's sleep, since morning. Hunger and heartache.

The clock struck again over the silence—twice.

Why, then, did she still live? Why had she not died that night, when the pistol-shot seemed to pierce her own brain as it had pierced her father's? Why had she not died when news had come of her lover's fate? Lost at sea! Ah, lovers! Since she had once loved and should never love again, it mattered little what happened. Even had she not marry this man—if he come again, and were in earnest. He would possibly be kind. No; she would struggle no longer, she felt herself grown weakly plant. And the cure would be only death; the worst, save the best.

Aye, but if he took her he knew what he was taking; a soulless, worn-out creature, she endured him.

And yet, thousands of women had done infinitely worse.

She was moaning aloud, moaning as if in pain. Hopelessly her moans subsided to long-drawn sighs, as though after anguish had come relief. "She would say to him," she sighed, if he came again on the morrow, "that if—if he cared so much, he might take her."

And now she sat upright with blurred vision and dull murmurs in her ears. No longer suspense. No further uncertainty. Only a stupid weariness of mind.

The clock had struck four long since. The blue darkness was resolving into gray at the high window, for dawn approached. The room seemed stifling. She climbed up and knelt on the sill, raised the sash and looked out over the neighboring roof, panting for the freshness of the new day.

Yonder, from behind the great lake, should rise ere long the morning. Already a pale green flickered from thread to shield, and gradually grew golden, glorious, as the slow sun's splendor touched the sky line, and thrilled the tiny sparrows in their nestcote.

So musing, and gazing, she hardly felt the coldness of the air piercing her chest like steel; she only saw the sunrise, thinking how it would redden the waters as if yonder were paradise. And slowly out of these shining pressure she lay-and-by seemed to see advance his image—or himself, her lover—glorified, in shining garments, stretching imperious hands.

She gave a low, moaning cry as if in answer: "See! Ah see! I have been true! I have been true!" Then a cast veiled her heavily; vagely she knew herself falling.

The room was bright with another sunrise—a morrow when she opened her eyes and found herself lying bruised and cramped where she had fallen from the high sill. It was a great effort to arise. Her limbs were full of pain, sharp-lasting pain. It was long before she could straighten herself sufficient to reach up and extinguish the still-burning gas.

Yet there was an inward strength and a strange peace of soul.

When some one knocked she quietly unbolted the door; nor did she start or trouble to find it was Drew, calling early and looking surprised at her appearance.

"Are you ill?" he asked.

"No; I am—quite well,—and strong."

"Well, I only d'-opped in on my way to business—and to tell you—to ask you if I should come to-night. Some how I felt as if you treated what I said as a—joke. But I was not joking."

She looked at him very coolly.

"I thought it over last night," she said, presently. "I did not think you were joking."

"Well?"

"Well—I do not love you; I cannot sell myself—let it go—and I think you."

He was daunted at last; he stared, then flushed angrily.

"You may be sorry, Miss Grey," he said. "Good morning."

She flung herself upon her knees as he turned away, and gave a wild, sobbing cry.

"Think God! Thank God for temptation—and for the strength to resist—and to suffer?"

Was it the end? Whose brisk step rang up the lone hall? Who threw the door wider and, as he heard her, sobs, gave passionate utterance to a joyous exclamation?

"Natalie, my darling!"

She turned as if she dead had called her, turned with sudden face.

"Hunt! Oh, God! You are not dead!"

"Not dead, eh, my loved one!" and his arms received her; and she was safe.—Chicago Ledger.

The Bicycle.

The bicycle has ceased to be merely a costly plaything. It has become one of the great practical conveniences of life—a cheap substitute for a horse in full, or in part. So it is found to be in Great Britain, where the machines in use are estimated at scores of thousands.

In emergencies it can outstrip the horse, carrying its rider and necessary luggage from fifty to seventy miles a day with but little fatigue to the former, and of course none to itself. Every step on the wheel carries the person two and a half times as far as in walking. Moreover, the legs do not have to bear the weight of the body, and hence their strength is reserved for other purposes.

Says a writer in the British Medical Journal, "this is level the muscular exertion almost nothing; and in detail it is absolutely nothing; hence it is left for the inclined part of the road to real work. And hence, again, if the hill is steep, muscular power is saved, in that it is varied by a change into a pleasant walk to the top."

The number who now use the machine in the United States and Canada exceeds 12,000. Many tourists substitute it for the saddle-horse, and become thereby better acquainted with the country and its people.

A writer in the New York Medical Journal advises its use for sanitary purposes—the exercise being varied, well distributed and taken in the open air and sunshine. It strengthens the arms, broadens the chest, and developes the muscles of the back, loins and legs. It may be prescribed for nights when a horse-back-riding would be advisable. Further, no sport can be more antagonistic to the vice of drunkenness. To learn to ride one requires a steady head.

An objection has been raised to the bicycle that the usual position of the body, when driving it at full speed, compresses the lungs. This position can be avoided, by made only accidental. Air is the life of the lungs, and this bicycling gives them.—Youths' Companion.

Rapidity of Thought.

Some recent investigations relating to the speed of thought are thus summed up in the American Journal of Arts and Sciences: "Sensations are transmitted to the brain at a rapidity of about 180 feet per second, or at one-fifth the rate of sound; and this is nearly the same in all individuals. The brain requires one-tenth of a second to respond to orders to the nerves which preside over voluntary action; but the amount varies much in different individuals, and in the same individual at different times, according to the position or condition at the time, and is more regular the more sustained the attention. The time required to transmit an order to the muscles by the motor nerves is nearly the same as that required by nerves of sensation to pass a sensation; moreover, it passes nearly one-hundredth of a second before the muscles are put in motion. The whole operation requires one and one-fourth to two-tenths of a second. Consequently, when we speak of an active, vigilant mind, or one that is slow, cold or pathetic, it is not a mere figure of rhetoric, but an absolute and certain fact that such a situation, with varying gradations, really exists.

BELGIUM is the only country in Europe which, like the United States of America, is absolutely without censorship. A clause in the Belgium constitution of 1830 declares not only that the "censorship is abolished, but that it can never be re-established." Books and plays which could not pass the censorship in France may be sold and put in Belgium; and a comedy by M. Dobair now about to be produced in Brussels had been condemned and rejected by the theatrical censorship of Paris.

The Spaniards are a well-meaning people, but you can't expect very much of a people who spell "Hoop" with a "J."

Blotches.

My little boy was so badly afflicted with a humor that we had to confine his hands to keep him from rubbing the sores, which itched and discharged a yellow matter. We tried many remedies, but Hood's Sarsaparilla has wrought a perfect cure.—T. DEMMY, Mineral Springs, N. H.

THE KING OF THE COWBOYS.

A Man from the Far, Far West in the Bowery.

"I'm a bad man," he said, as he leaned up against the bar of the "Home for Tired Men" on the Bowery, and gave the thin barkeeper a look that made him quail. "Yes, I'm a bad man," he continued, as the boys came crowding up. "I'm from the West, the extreme West, where blood, hot blood, is spilled daily by men like me. Say, Jo," he said, catching the eye of a half man with a large red pimple on his nose, "did you ever hear of Big-Headed Jack?"

The tall man answered that he had heard of Red-Headed Mike, but the pimple on his nose turned a ghastly white, and he fell shaking into a chair as the Bad Man drew a revolver and remarked that this was no time for red-headed men.

"Perhaps some gentleman here has heard of Big-Headed Jack," he said, as he glared around at the boys, but a dead silence prevailing, he continued, "Big-Headed Jack was a tough man. He came to Rattlesnake Bend to take the town. He took the largest portion of it until he came to me. I'm a bad fellow, I'm a bad fellow. I've got a wagon-load of bad men under my belt, I've killed six men in the regular way, in self-defense, and I've killed a lot of men in the ordinary way, in cold blood. I've shot at a link to a man's humanity the boys had pulled without being a scab.

"Give me something powerful, boss, something that will make me feel as though the sun had exploded in my head, the prairies on my nose again. Ah, Jo, a reckless dare-devil. Give me something powerful to soothe me."

"I suppose you have seen a good deal of life out West, haven't, sir," said a pale man in the rear.

"Sir, I have been hard-burned and raw. Devastation and horror have found me in their midst. Men in the West, the Extreme West, call me the King of the Cowboys."

A shudder ran through the crowd, and the tall man with a red pimple on his nose disappeared through a side door.

"And yet," said the Bad Man, musingly, "I was once a quiet, unassuming lad, knowing nothing of crime.

"Say, dad, send a large-bonded boy along himself through the door for enough to reveal a mouth extended from ear to ear in a general smile. "Ma says you won't know anything for a week if you don't come and carry them down right off. Yes, I'm better, drop that pistol and come mighty quick. She's waitin'."

The King of the Cowboys looked around with a sickly smile. A very old light glimmered in the eyes of the barkeeper. The Bad Man got through the door first, and the thin barkeeper, with a look of great relief, followed him.

"Gentlemen, I'm sorry I've disturbed your festivities, but I was forced to do it in order to check the flow of blood from the patient after the nocturnal repast is over. This has saved the lives of many guests and the popularity of Cape May is just booming in consequence.

"MALVINA" wants to know how Mr. Peabody, the philanthropist, pronounced his name. Well, "Malvina," here in America he was called Peabody, with the accent on every syllable, broad and plain, but in England the averaged things by simply calling his name "Pay."

THE Spanish have a proverb, "The man who stumbles twice on the same stone is a fool." You may be something very profound in that, but we fail to see it. We can't see why on good stone, that will outlast a dozen lifetimes, isn't just as good for a man to fall his stumbling over, as a great expensive collection of miscellaneous stones, so widely scattered that a tourage agent couldn't keep track of half of them. The Spaniards are a well-meaning people, but you can't expect very much of a people who spell "Hoop" with a "J."

HIGHER EDUCATION.

A Couple of Brooklyn Girls Try to Get Onto It.

[From the Brooklyn Eagle.]

"My dear girl," said one young lady to another on Fulton street, "will you go with me tonight and hear Prof. Stone lecture?"

"Who is he? and what will he lecture about?"

"Oh, he's lovely, a Boston man, and is going to lecture on the Higher Education of Women." Ma says it will be very instructive, and pa says its only for a lot of old shrivelers, and when pa and ma talk like that I know its something worth hearing."

"Is it about that awful Tenkubury?"

"Oh, my, no; its about Columbia College, and ma says—

"How nice," interrupted the other. "Wonder if he'll sing my class song. Cousin Ned is a Columbia boy, and just sweetens he sang more funny songs. Did you ever hear them:

"I wish I were a bit, oo-pah-a-moo,
I would swim the Isis and Euphrates and cross."

"It's too cute for anything; and then there was one beginning—"

"No, no, dear," said the intellectual young lady: "its about admitting young ladies into this college. Ma says—"

"Why, goodness me, Minnie, Cousin Ned told me all about the entertainments, and how they danced and flirted; all this at the college, and this Mr Stone pretends that no women have ever been admitted."

"But, Nellie dear, he means the admitting of women into the college as students."

"Oh, that! well, think my stars! I've graduated, and don't want ever to hear of books again. It makes my head ache now—ram, cram, cram; but my dress was lovely. Did I ever show you our badge? It's two sweet-clover enamel crossed and a gold star below."

"Ma says that so women should vote, and only by higher education can women gain strength to throw off the yoke."

"What yoke?" queried Nellie, innocently.

"Oh! I don't know; they are always having it out over some opposition, ma says it was bad her way, need would be home tying knots in twice-twenties, you know. Pa ma says that weed is as lofty as guzzling beer till sodden, and then pa turns up his nose and ma cries, and I don't hear any more about Morgan Dix or higher education that night."

"Speaking of yokes, Maie, reminds me of a real lovely Medieval thrill and gown. The yoke was Irish point, and trimmed—"

"Oh, Nellie, please don't mention dresses now. Ma says that we are on the eve of a mighty upheaval; that we are to demand redress—"

"Oh, Minnie, you giddy thing, telling me not to talk about dress, and here you go—and that makes me think. I'm going to fix that old cashmere into a cotta, and make it with a long polonaise—

"And if we go to-night we'll hear about O'Donovan Rossa. He's another hero, as pa calls all these women's rights men."

"Is he from Boston, too?"

"Oh, no. He's the man that brought over the Bartholdi statue and Cleopatra's needle."

"Where on earth did you pick up so much information, Maie?" said Nellie, looking an admiring glance on her friend's new hat.

"Well, one can't help listening," said Maeie, with a superior smile, "and ma is always talking and pa can hold his own, so I get the benefit of all their conversations. I get all the religious and higher education from ma, and politics and dynamite talk from pa."

"But you used to be always talking about art and culture and tone; now—"

"Oh, that's old. Ma says that was first a passing fancy, but this higher education is the thing now. Will you go to-night?"

"Would love to, but am going to the opera with Cousin Ned. Good-by, dear; tell your ma I'm coming to see her soon," and the young ladies separated, each impressed with the idea that she had spent a very profitable half hour.

Trouble Among the "Nashville Students."

Harry B. Thatcher is manipulator of "colored vocalists," and his present venture is termed the "Original Nashville Students." Among the artists whom he employs are Walter S. Tipton and Nellie S. Tipton, two vocalists of the deepest dye. These lyric artists are employed at the munificent salary of $9 a week each, and are expected to grind out the most soul-starving, old-fashioned southern plantation songs upon a diet which that amount of bacon will buy. The was good enough for them when they left the cotton fields of their native south, but when they had eaten at some of the country hotels of Illinois and Indiana they began to see starvation staring them in the face. They demanded a raise, but Manager Thatcher wouldn't "see them" and merely mentioned the fact that he held their contract to sing for him at schedule rates until June. Then they were mad. They said they'd strike and walk home on the tow-path. That alarmed Thatcher and yesterday he applied to Judge Jameson and was granted a temporary injunction restraining them from singing with any other company.—Chicago Herald.

Fun With Bees.

Swarming season approached and Mr. Roberts made ready for his apiarian harvest by preparing guns and conveniently placing tin pans, bells, horseshoes and other instruments of music likely to compose and delude a swarm of bees on taking French leave. The bunch of bees were some ten or twelve feet from the ground, and the object was to land them safely within the hives. A serious difficulty here met Mr. Roberts, to wit, how to bring the gun in proximity with the bees and retain a shot. Necessity brought forth a solution in the person of "Blind Phil," a colored man on the place, who is nearly or quite blind. "Here, Phil, come here," said Mr. Roberts. "I want you to hold this large gun up and a bunch of bees, while I climb the tree and scare them in. And without unnecessary or unnecessary delay, he seized Phil, and placing him directly under the bees, put the large gun on top of his head, and directed him to stand fast. Then mounted, Mr. Roberts then ran up the tree with the nimbleness of a cat squirrel, and, reaching out, hung himself on a limb, and commenced beats to scare them off, letting them fall in lumps in the open box on the ground beneath below. Sometimes a wad of bees would miss the box and strike Phil on the shoulder, which made him restless. "Stand firm, Phil," said a voice from above, "and bees will not sting you. If a bee finds out that you are afraid of him, he will sting you certain. Just let him know you are not afraid, and there is no danger," remarked Mr. Roberts, by way of encouragement.

"Ouch, golly! I'm stung for sumfin! Where's Marse Roberts. I'm quit doing dis bees!"

"Stand still, you chicken foot, you! I'll scare bees from all up! Who ever saw a bee?" Just then an old lineal king bee—searched from Phil's back—alighted on his neck, and Phil commenced moving, but Mr. Roberts spoke so the king work from above. Suddenly, however, the bees seemed to realize that it was that was disturbing them, and about forty lesser-in-fellows pop on Mr. Roberts simultaneously, and he slipped his lasso, and let himself down with a crash upon the open box. With a whoop and a kick sideway, Phil got upon his feet and out, followed by a cloud of bees. He forgot his blindness, and went he knew not whither, striking the garden palings, broadside and leaving three panes with the ground. The lower chicken left coming to the chicken yard. He, in silence until the cyclone blew over. Debreed. In fine no actions. Roberts was fully explained. In fact, he was quite a hero. Around the house Phil's name was Legion. Around the garden he was called Scotch Mist. Around the yard he was Chicken Scatter.

Health in Michigan.

For the week ending Nov. 3, 1883, the reports to the state board of health, Lansing, indicate that intermittent fever and bowels considerably increased, and that measles, intermittent fever, and remittent fever decreased in area of prevalence.

At the state capital, the prevailing winds during the week ending Nov. 3, 1883, were southwest, and, compared with the preceding week, the temperature was higher, the absolute humidity was greater, and the day and the night ozone considerably more, and the relative humidity less.

Compared with the average for the month of October in the preceding six years typhoid fever, remittent fever, and diphtheria were considerably less prevalent, and consumption, intermittent fever, diarrhœa, and whooping-cough were less prevalent. October 1883.

For the month of October 1883, compared with the average of corresponding months for the 3 years, 1879-1882, the temperature was lower, the relative humidity more, and the absolute humidity and the day and the night ozone less.

Including reports by regular observers and others, diphtheria was reported present during the week ending Nov. 3, and since, at 21 places namely: Antwerp, Bridgeport, Coopersville, Detroit, Eagle, Fenton, Grand Rapids, Lansing, Linden, Mattawan, Mt. Pleasant, Negaunee, Newark, Pierson, Sanford, Shaytown, Southington, Union, Union City, West Bay City, and Wyandotte; scarlet fever at twenty-five places, Adrian, Alnesville, Burr Oak, Chelsea, Clayton, Colon, Crystal, Delta, Detroit, Fair Haven, Free Soil, Glenwood, Ingersoll, Kalamazoo, Lowell, Lansing, Mackinaw City, Manton, Northport, Pokagon, Salem, Sherman, Sunfield, Sumpter, and Weldon; measles at twelve places, Adams.

Nasby.

A correspondent of John Swinton's paper solemnly says: I have not seen Nasby in New York for some months. There is an idea fellow for you. He can work harder and steadier, lush at a demijohn and a type-writer, than any other fellow. He can do the two-pair stairs, unwinded. He can do the articles manificed in his side companions. His method is to hire a whole section in a Pullman, have the curtains drawn and the table set up, and proceed to business with the type-writer on top of the table and the jug underneath. He takes a drink to a page, and his eagerness for the jug makes him rush off the page at a very lively gait. For some years past he has been traveling abroad getting material for a history of the world. It will be sold by the cord. He has made a great deal of money, and through prudently buying his liquor at wholesale and selling it to himself at retail, he has saved up a fortune by saving the balance. He is short, fat, and fifty, and he smoke fifteen cigars when he can get seven of them for a quarter.

The fact is gradually dawning upon the average statuari mind that the temperance question is going to play the deuce, with the party in power next year. The Coldwater Republican and Allegan Gazette unite in declaring that the party ought to be defeated if it does not adopt prohibition as one of its cardinal principles. On the other hand, the Lansing Republican strenuously asserts that the party must stand by the license system and hid the "prohibition fanatics" go to the d—l if it wants to succeed in the future. Altogether, a sad lack of harmony is apparent among the brethren.

In the highest and holiest type of wife love there is always a large proportion of mother love, that kind which finds deeper pleasure in watching over, shielding, guarding, and warding off trouble from him in whom is centered a woman's fondest affections than in being waited over and shielded herself. To watch and nurse a woman's holiest work, and to be pampered, petted, and kept from care and responsibility until she becomes the most useless thing on earth—a helpless baby in a woman's form.

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.: HARBOR AND SUMMER RESORTS.

Charlevoix, the county seat of Charlevoix county, is a flourishing village of about 1,800 inhabitants, located on both banks of Pine River, between Round Lake and Lake Michigan. The citizens show a commendable pride in the development of its industries, the care of their homes, the religious and educational culture of their families, and the general attractions of the place. Nearly all branches of business are represented. The industries most necessary to the future success of the community, and most likely to be prosperous, are a gristmill, a dairy to deliver milk at the door, a cracker bakery, and any of the various mills for manufacturing hardwood lumber, including handles, wooden bowls, chairs, agricultural implements, and farm wagons. Among the attractions are two summer resorts, which are annually visited by thousands of people. The climatic advantages are unexcelled, and they also have passed one or more summers at these resorts, recuperating their strength and securing a new lease of life, are most enthusiastic in their praise of the place. Sufferers from hay fever and asthmatic difficulties find here a sure relief, and that class of summer visitors are rapidly increasing, as the benefits they receive become known. The shores of Pine Lake and Lake Michigan afford an excellent bathing place. The privileges for boating and fishing cannot be excelled by any other locality. In their season, lake trout, black bass, pickerel, perch, and herring abound in the waters adjacent to the village, while the gamy speckled trout, the fisherman's delight, make the cold waters of the Jordan and Boyne rivers, as well as those of several smaller tributaries of Pine Lake, their favorite haunts. No rivers in the lower peninsula are as famous for their choice trout as the Jordan and Boyne. The scenery from any point of view on Pine Lake is one of surpassing loveliness.

ERRORS OF YOUTH.

A GENTLEMAN who suffered for years from Nervous Debility, Premature Decay, and all the effects of youthful indiscretion, will, for the sake of suffering humanity, send free to all who need it, the recipe and direction for making the simple remedy by which he was cured. Sufferers can cure themselves at a trifling expense and no exposure. Address, in perfect confidence, JOHN B. OGDEN, 42 Cedar St., New York.

Notes and News.

The sale of two cent stamps at the Traverse City office during the month of October was double the average sale of the old three centers in any preceding month in the history of the office.

The suit brought by Gates & Fay, a prominent lumber firm of Bay City, against Henry Gamble, involving $25,000 worth of pine land in Ogemaw county, has been tried in the circuit court for that county, before judge Green, and just decided in favor of the defendant.

Right on the heels of the Marquis of Lorne's letter on "Canadian Home Rule" which, approves the present plan of government, comes the announcement from Winnepeg that the people of Manitoba are tired of Dominion rule, and that a formidable movement in favor of secession and annexation to the United States is being organized.

O. M. Allen proposes to take a hand in celery raising that will count. He has purchased of Patrick O'Brien 145 acres of low land north of the village, paying $6,000 for same, it is said $2,000. He will prepare the land for the purpose of raising celery. It is watered by three streams and otherwise admirably adapted for this purpose.—Kalamazoo Telegraph.

Old sailors say that if the wind is in the south when the sun crosses the line (as it was this year) there will be a prevalence of southern winds for the following six months. That must mean not only an open winter but a mild one. Taste it in your hat, and when the snowdrifts come up to your chin and the mercury gets down into the thermometer's boots, just go for the old sailors.

There are about 650 tanneries throughout the United States, and the commissioner of immigration has sent to the proprietors of each one, a circular calling attention to the many advantages offered by Michigan for the establishment of tanneries. In nearly all of the northern counties of the lower peninsula, and in much of the upper peninsula, there are large tracts of hemlock, and much or most of it is contiguous to the railroads.

Capt. Ward chartered the old Keweenaw to take a load of freight to Marquette about ten days ago, and while she was hauled down in St. Marie's river last Thursday she ran on a rock and sprung a leak. She was finally gotten off and will undoubtedly be turned into a barge during the winter. In her time she has been a splendid boat though always a very slow one, and has been exceedingly lucky. She will make a good tow barge.—Cheboygan Democrat.

Those who think that because the Leviathan is idle a great deal of the time she is not making money evidently do not know how much a wrecker gets when she does catch on to a job. It cost over $6,000 to pull the Pennsylvania off and a Detroit, and we are creditably informed that the Leviathan is over $16,000 ahead so far this season, and may earn $30,000 yet. These wreckers are about as bad as pirates when they catch a vessel in distress.—Cheboygan Democrat.

Uncle Josiah is a terrible pill for the republican papers, and they have moved heaven and earth to find something to charge him with that would stick. Up to this time all they have been able to say against him is that he can't spell very well, he rides on a 500 mile ticket given him by the F. & P. M. R. R. on account of his immense shipments of lumber over the road, and pardons criminals out of Jackson at request of prominent republicans. It is mighty hard for the organs to realize that a democratic governor has come to stay, but it is a fact.—Cheboygan Democrat.

The other day a lady 84 years old visited a store in Saginaw and bought a handsome stove. She had not more than disappeared on a trot around the corner, when her daughter aged 40 years, came in and bought the mate to the stove her mother had just purchased. She had not been gone more than half an hour when her daughter, only just 19 years old, visited the same store, and she also bought a stove. The curious part of it was that neither knew that the other intended to buy a stove at that time and place, and when they all met in the evening the explanations were just too awful for anything.

Secretary Teller will, in his forthcoming report, declare that the government has habitually violated its obligations with the Indians. He says the government now owes to the different tribes fully five million dollars. A Washington dispatch reports him further as follows: "There is due and unpaid to the Sioux alone for school purposes, under treaty of 1868, over $1,000,000. By that treaty the United States agreed to support a school for every thirty children, which it has not done. This was part of the consideration to the Indians for relinquishing their land, and Mr. Teller holds the money it would have cost is honestly due the nation for school purposes. Again, there are 2,500 families who, under the treaty, should have received a cow, a yoke of oxen, and $100 worth of tools, because they have settled down as required, but none of these things have been given them because congress failed to provide the means."

The republicans are welcome to all the "comfort" they may be able to extract from this year's returns. Virginia has repudiated Mahone and his bargain with Arthur, and wheeled back into the democratic column. New Jersey is democratic to the tune of 7,000, and Maryland is unbroken in its fealty to the democratic flag. Pennsylvania has been regained by the Republicans, but no one looked for a different result there. New York went democratic by 18,000, the loss of the legislature arising wholly from the intermeddling of Cleveland. Massachusetts elected a republican governor by a majority of less than 9,000, but the democratic vote shows an increase of 40,000 over the vote for Hancock. The gains this year have all been on the democratic side.—Detroit Evening Journal.

A war of extermination is being waged against the wild deer of northern Michigan. Every train from the north is freighted with the carcasses or saddles of from three to a dozen of these beautiful and inoffensive animals. Hunters inform the Courier that the forests are fairly alive with parties in pursuit of deer, not only from this but other states. The weather thus far has been unfavorable for preserving slaughtered deer, and in many instances only the saddles are saved, the remainder being left to rot upon the ground or to furnish meals for other wild animals. It's no exaggeration to assert that unless the legislature of Michigan comes the rescue with some practical legislation to prevent this slaughter, that in five years there will not be a deer left alive in the forests of the lower peninsula of Michigan.—Saginaw Courier.

We always like to give due credit to farmers everywhere in the Grand Traverse region, and while our interests are wholly in this county, it would be unjust and foolish to run down other counties in favor of our own. Frank Crothers, who now resides near East Jordan, Charlevoix Co., was formerly a resident of this county, and when he lived on this side of the bay we naturally inquired as to how he was getting along. He was somewhat reticent at first in regard to his own productions but finally confessed that he had raised 425 bushels of oats on 81 acres, from 17 bushels of seed; that he had this season cut on his place about 74 tons of hay; that six onions selected from a wagon-load, if his raising, by a minister, weighed 10 pounds and 1 ounce, while an editor got 6 that weighed 9½ pounds; also that a pea vine, from one pea, taking, of course, all the main branches, measured 43 feet and yielded 42 pods averaging 3 peas to a pod, and was for some time on exhibition at a newspaper office in that county. As we have never had occasion to question Mr. C.'s veracity we accept his statement as perfectly reliable. Those not so well acquainted with him however, may require vouchers, but he will no doubt cheerfully refer them to the minister and editor referred, and everybody knows that a minister cannot lie, and also that an editor can lie, but wont.—Kalkaska Leader.

Up to 1850, ships could be built in this country nearly or quite as cheap as in Europe, and at that time threefourths of our foreign trade was carried by American vessels. But in 1852 when a general protective system was inaugurated, with duties which fell little short of robbery, it became practically impossible to build ocean ships in this country, on account of the duties on lumber, cordage, iron, steel, and other materials, so that the citizens of free America found themselves in a humiliating position, in which it was illegal to buy ships and impossible to build them. After twenty years of such protection, what was the result? In 1881, twelve per cent of our exports were carried in American vessels, and eighty-eight per cent. in foreign vessels. Of both imports and exports, eighty-five per cent. were carried in foreign vessels and only fifteen per cent. in American vessels. The number of vessels plying between the United States and Europe in 1881, was 6210, of which 555 were steamships. Of the sailing vessels, nineteen per cent. were American, while the little frozen kingdom of Sweden had twenty-two per cent. Of the steam-ships, eighty per cent. were British, while the United States had four solitary steamers and no more. That is the logical, as experience has shown it to be his practical result of protection.—Charlotte Leader.

THE JOURNAL

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - MICHIGAN.

MRS. HEEBER, who was divorced at Erie, was the fifth member of the family to perish that way. They believed they were doomed by a curse uttered by an ancestor in Bavaria.

WHEN a young couple were being married in St. Louis the other day, the church-bell tolled, and a coffin and mourners came up the aisle as they walked down. Outside, in place of their carriage, was the hearse. So, all together, they had a somber time of it.

A MORMON settlement in Idaho is five miles long, extending from Clifton to Oxford. It is called Stringtown, and the homesteads are so taken up that the residences of the homesteaders are within 300 feet of each other, and the farms are mere strips of land from 250 to 300 feet in width. The land was taken up in this manner to give every settler frontage on the public road.

STANLEY, the explorer, introduces all the travelers he meets with in the wilds of Africa to the natives as his sons, in order that they may proceed with safety. Recently an explorer came along with a colored servant, and Stanley was asked how he came to have two sons of different color. "Oh, that is the son of my old wife, not the new one," he replied, as he pointed to the negro.

THE score of convicted murderers in California cannot be hanged until the Supreme court has decided a legal point in the new constitution. They were convicted on "information and belief," instead of on indictments presented by the Grand Jury. The lawyers who drafted the new constitution held that this was in conflict with the Federal constitution, and the United States Circuit court, to which a case was appealed, took this ground.

SLAUGHTER HOUSTEY, of Lexington, Ky., paid $5 for the front door-sill of the old court-house of that place when the building was torn down. It is of stone, and is prized by Bassett Beauman Henry Clay and Aaron Burr stood upon it when the latter asked Clay to defend him, and he pledged his honor that he was innocent of an attempt at a Western conspiracy. Receiving the pledge, Clay appeared in Burr's defense, but afterward declined to speak to him when he found out that Burr had lied.

MR. TALMAGE is quite right. He says of the Mormon business: "James Buchanan's administration adjourned it to Abraham Lincoln, Lincoln's administration adjourned it to Andrew Johnson, Johnson adjourned it to Gen. Grant, Gen. Grant to Rutherford B. Hayes, Hayes to Garfield, and Gen. Garfield adjourned it to President Arthur. President Arthur, no doubt, would like to adjourn it to himself for another term, and then hand it as a vexatious legacy to his successor."

ADAM FORPAUGH, who was well-known in Sussex county, New Mexico, has sold a third interest in his late find for $13,000. While prospecting he found his haystack on fire, his prospectors' glass having focused the sun's rays upon it. As the haystack contained six pounds of powder, he dropped it and got out of the way. It fell into a crevice, and a large mass of rock was taken up. Adams turned mournfully to gather up what might be left of his effects, and found a vein of silver; that the explosion had exposed to view.

ONE of the newest things under the sun is the "Correspondence University." The Secretary of this novelty is Prof. L. A. Wait, of Cornell University. It is an association of eminent instructors in various branches of this country and Great Britain, whose object will be to give instruction in all subjects which can be taught by correspondence, not taking the place at all of existing educational institutions, but supplementing them with instruction for persons who from any cause whatever are unable to attend higher schools of learning. The nearest approach to a precedent for such a system is the Chautauqua plan of Dr. Vincent.

SELMA (Ala.) Times: Down the river from Benton, at Durand's bend, is a noted burying-ground of ancient prehistoric race of wonderful stature. When down there in February last, Dr. Pierce collected several parts of human skeletons, from which he deduced the opinion that the adults of this mysterious race were from six to eight feet in height, and well built in proportion. Among the Doctor's collection was an inferior maxillary bone containing a full set of teeth in a perfect state of preservation. The teeth differed some what from those of the Anglo-Saxon race, in that the molar or jaw teeth were bicuspid. The skulls, however, had none of the animal cast in any particular, being round and massive, denoting great brain power.

MONEY was urgently needed by a church at Blandford, Mass., and a committee, with the pastor at his head, devised a novel scheme. A challenge was sent to a number of young men at Westfield to come out and hunt squirrels all day, and at night eat a supper in the church, the party which had killed the least game to pay $1 each for all the meals served. To the surprise of the church members who had joined in the hunt, the marksmen from Westfield lost them; but the Springfield Republican is authority for the charge that when it came to a count, a number of squirrels that had been shot several days before were fraudulently introduced, so that the church came out financially victious.

THE number of wealthy members of Congress increases. Col. Ingham, of Massachusetts, is one of the new members who will entertain elaborately next winter. He inherited great wealth. Washburn, of Minnesota, has rented Don Cameron's house, and will give lavish receptions. Of the new Senators nearly all are rich. Bowen, of Colorado, is a mining lord. Sabin, of Minnesota, went from Connecticut twenty years ago, and is now very rich. Dolph, of Oregon, is a thrifty corporation attorney. Colquitt is one of the best-to-do men in Georgia, and Gibson, of Louisiana, inherited wealth. There are not many poor men left in the Senate. Count out Blair, Frye, Kenna of Florida, and Eddleberger, and the rest are accounted rich.

ACCORDING to the Washington critic who watched the two brothers at a restaurant, Senator Sherman breaks his bread into small bits and nibbles at his potato. The General takes a half pill in his hand, dashes an ounce of butter over it, and quarters it with his mouth; he halves a potato in its jacket, and, with one movement, adds butter, pepper and salt. In talking the General gauges his voice to the interest in his subject, and can be heard across the room. The Senator is cautious, and looks up adroitly beneath his eyebrows. The Senator eats like a hundred man. The General stabs his meat with his fork as if to say "You're my meat, and I'll eat you alive!" If annoyed, he hacks right out in a deep bass voice. The Senator only smiles. His smiles are hearty, though, and he enjoys that which amuses him.

THE vitality of the German Emperor, says a London journal, is a source of unceasing astonishment and admiration. He is now well on his way to 87—13 years older than his predecessor, "Old Fritz," when that monarch's tough constitution broke down under the weight of years and the cares of Government—and his life has been one of the most wearing activity. Yet he was on horseback Saturday, despite the weather, for three hours, and yesterday he was busy all day in discharging various formal functions of royalty. In favor of this marvelous and sustained vigor it needs the Emperor's own words in his touching address to the Fourth army corps to remind the world how close he necessarily is to the end of his extraordinary career. "It was a joy and honor to me," he says, "to see the army corps once more. Probably it is the last time. At my age one makes no plans." Yet the event which the Emperor looks so steadfastly in the face will make the greatest chances, perhaps in his foreign and certainly in the domestic relations of his empire. By no career of our time has the immense in the personal taking the place at all of existing educational institutions, but supplementing them with instruction for persons who from any cause whatever are unable to attend higher schools of learning. The nearest approach to a precedent for such a system is the Chautauqua plan of Dr. Vincent.

GOSSIP FOR THE LADIES.

An Idle Idyl.

Just then upon a golden flower
A butterfly alighted,
And waved its wings about as though
It exceedingly delighted.
"Ah, you're fearful here now. The day
May rise in storm and tempest,
And all the flowers will be bent and whipped,
They found such a lot of bumps.
She style caught it in her hand,
And while it gently fanning,
He beautifully approached and gave
Her a most delicious kissing.
"How curious a thing," the bee I go,
"The gam of flying 'round
A French beauty every where,
Of beauty as its wingless."
"Ah, yes, totally, I'm sure I free,
I'm will give you pleasure
Long as I live," she said, and soon
Off flew the silly treasure.

"Behold! how nature grows the grass,"
He murmured, "Soon the grapes
Will come," when on his way there fell
A sassy-legged creeper.
"Ah, ha! I'm glad I'm a bee," he said,
"And to the garden I needed it,
"A horrid caterpillar! Oh,
He shudder'ring cried and smashed it.
"Ah me! oh what then could you see?"
The spider. "The wretched cuddle!
I was of some bright butterfly
A daughter or sister." —Margaret Eytinge.

Ideal Marriage.

The best and purest girl, she who holds the highest ideal, cannot be sure of making true marriage unless she has been taught the sacred laws of her being, and unless she knows to a certainty the character of the man who offers her his love.

Ideal marriage is not one-sided. The man must be striving toward perfection as well as the woman, and of this she must be certain before she takes the marriage vow.

As the first important factor is the possession of health, so the first of the possession of knowledge—knowledge of the laws of life, of what material life is in all its phases, of its possibilities, its dangers, and its sorrows, as well as of its joys.

How few men understand women! How few women understand men! And yet no man or woman ought to marry without each first knowing the whole life of the other.—Harriet K. Shattuck.

Mrs. Carlyle.

Mrs. Carlyle failed to reach happiness because she had ambition without fame, and intellect without a career, and was too self-conspicuous and proud to be content with a subordinate part in life. She ought to have considered that her existence was really of no importance to the universe; but her husband's works had power to send the world on its path of progress with mighty tangential force, and to drive a current of new life into the heart of the century. He was necessary to humanity; but she was only necessary to smooth the path of his soul traveled. In this line of duty lay the beautiful mission of a loving wife, and in this she ought to have found happiness; but she only thought of the small annoyances that lay in her own path, and pronounced herself "miserable"—though holding the proud position of wife to the greatest man of the age? Yet she too was as well as her nature would permit; but egotism or self-worship nor sex, the glory through life and death, that she made her "miserable" resulted more from her own disposition than from her husband's temper. Had she married the village schoolmaster, she might have been happier. A keen, clever, homely Scotch woman, with her sharp tongue and her broad Scotch accent, would have ruled the parish admirably. This shrewd have been her destiny; but Carlyle raised her to eminence as his wife, gave her station and dignity in the great capital of the world; and in return she darkened his fame, gave his name to the scoffers, and chilled the enthusiasm that would have raised memorials to his honor.—Lady Wilde, in London Queen.

The Shocking Conduct of a Summer Captive.

Her aristocratic manner and rich, elaborate toilet seemed somewhat out of place in the plebeian surroundings of the Fifth avenue stage, New York. Drawing her skirts about her she retired as far as possible into a corner seat and gazed persistently out of the window. On the opposite side sat a neatly attired young man with carefully waxed mustache, very white hands and an air generally suggestive of the clergy. He glanced at the fair vision in the corner from time to time in a reproachful manner. She looked furtively at him from beneath her lashes, and finally decided that he rightfully belonged to the army of summer martyrs that had laid their hearts at her feet, she concluded to end his misery by recognizing him.

"You are very kind to remember me," he said.

"Oh, no," she replied, with an air of polite reserve, as she tried to explain, "I recall perfectly the pleasant occasion of our last meeting."

A few commonplaces followed and, emboldened at his success, the gentleman said gravely to her, "I have a pink-tinted card."

"I hope you will permit me to call upon you again, I shall be happy to serve you."

She glanced at the card, a wave of color swept over her face and drawing her veil she jerked it down, and confronted out of the stage with the proprietary of a butter base ball. The address upon the card read: "Lift finger, chiropodist. Corns and bunions extracted without pain or loss of blood."—New York World.

Light Ahead.

The girl who at 18 can walk five miles, or ride ten on horseback, or row a boat, or eat something more than a scrap of toast for her breakfast, is not very likely to be a neuralgic invalid at 30 nor a chronic invalid at 45. Equally the woman who recognizes her own individuality makes its strength and its beauty in every way a blessing and a boon to her house and her husband, her children and her country. There are those of the gentler sex who do not know what they really do wish for, who are aloud in glittering generalities and deplore the degeneracy o. the masculine portion of humanity, condemnatory in adjectives which make them blush with shame for the women who say them as well as for the men to whom, against whom the cries are sounded. Now, if maternal love is what all the world believes it is, if it has heights yet unattained, depths yet unfathomed, and tenderness which may work new miracles in the physical and spiritual life of men, if these things be true, and they are true, there is a new light ahead to shine on that very misty question of woman's place and woman's work. Poets always say beautiful things about woman; the most romantic of men get enthusiastic in response to the toast to her honor which always follows a festal dinner. A woman likes the praise of men, but she need never fear ceasing to reverse it. If she always labored spiritually, and therefore physically, physically, and therefore spiritually—she will only raise their standard of admiration nearer the plane that means health and happiness to both.—Inter Ocean.

Athletic Girls.

The blush of health is on the cheek of the twelve year-old fashionable girl of the metropolis, writes the Belle from New York. The pretension is that it was put there by years of physical training during the summer vacation, that she has played lawn tennis, pedestrianized and equestrianized to such a degree that the ruddy hue is truly native of rich, rushing blood. As a matter of fact, it may have been painted on with a brush. I am told that the sale of rouge has suddenly increased, and that pearl powder is correspondingly a drug in the market. It is not more than a year ago—nay, not so much—since gaunt, pale cheeks were considered desirable. Even plump and very healthy creatures whitened their cheeks and shaded with black under their eyes, to make themselves look like Camille. Now their model is the rosette milk-maid. No longer is it fashionable to be strong. Adipose tissue is despised and muscle is excelled.

"Feel that," said a friend whom I met in a parlor after her season out of doors.

She put my hand on her arm, midway between the elbow and the shoulder. The skin was as smooth and white as ever under a single thickness of lace, and the roundness was charming.

"Grip hard," she commanded.

I clasped the arm with both hands. Then she slant her flat and drew it slowly up to her fair shoulder. Under my hands rose such a bunch of muscles as I had never felt before, except when I was a boy and I used to pinch a calf in a walk. This girl had been rowing daily all summer. The palms of her hands are calloused, and she has to wear gloves a whole size bigger than she used to, but she is clean all the same. She doesn't lift so much as a cup of tea without measuring to bring up that muscle; and I actually saw her writing a letter and making the biceps show through the light sleeve of her dress as easy smoke of the pen.

"And look at this," she said, as we were together in her boudoir. Wiat she was proudly called my attention to was the fact that, in walking across the room, the action of the muscles in her calves was visible on the surface of her stockings!

"What a pity you're not going to dance in the ballet, instead of in ball-room," I remarked.

"You are only envious," was her retort.

"Not a bit of it," I replied; "I haven't any desire to be an athlete. Besides, you won't be able to keep your muscle through the winter."

"Won't I, Clara Bellow?" and she led me into an adjoining object. "There's what will do it, me guys!"

Perhaps some of my readers wish to cultivate their muscle, and so I will tell how to make the apparatus she showed me. You can also do it yourself. The requirements are two pulleys, two eight-pound window weights, a strong cord and a strip of plank with two holes in it. The cord must run through the holes in the plank and support the weights. The exercise is obtained by pulling at the ends of the cord. You are to assume all sorts of positions, so as to bring the whole muscular system into play. There isn't a great amount of fun in it. Indeed, I should say that raising a washboard would be a delightful diversion compared to it, but fashion makes slaves of us, and someone or other for evermore will be grinding from dumb-bells to a rowing-machine—is the thing now for my lady's chamber.

Won't He Laugh.

A little grandson of Mrs. Andrews was attempting to build a wooden vessel with a knife, when he looked up to her and said:

"Grandma, does God see everything?"

"Yes, my son," she replied, "God is everywhere and sees every act of our lives."

"Well, by jingo," said the boy, "won't he laugh when he sees this stick."—Carl Pretzel's Weekly.

MR. SPURGEON, the London preacher, being asked whether a man could be a Christian and belong to a brass band, replied, "Yes, I think he might; but it would be a very difficult matter for his next-door neighbor to be a Christian."

Ladies of Seville at a Bull-Fight.

Charles Dudley Warner's humorous account in the Century of a fashionable bull-fight at Seville describes the ladies in attendance as follows: "The ladies of Spain, except in some frontiers towns in the mountain regions, have laid aside the national costume, and dress according to the dictates of Paris, preferring even the French fans to their own decorated with the incidents of the bull-fight and the serenade. In Seville, the black lace mantilla is still worn at church, and to some extent in the street; but the hat is the cover of the new fashion, more's the pity, and the high combs have gone altogether. I do not know why a woman, even a plain woman, should be so utterly confusing in a mantilla, thrown over a high comb and falling gracefully on the shoulders, stepping daintily in high-heeled shoes with pointed toes and moving her large fan with just the mechanical air so accurately calculated to wound but not to kill. But the ladies assembly I saw only one or two in formal costume; the mantilla and the high comb, with the short petticoat, brilliant in color. Nothing could become, and it makes one doubt whether women's strongest desire is place, and whether it is not better to follow the fashion, when we see a white nation abandon such a charming attire.

"But the white mantilla is its proper for a bull-fight, and every lady was there. It was a little odd to see ladies in the open light of a brilliant, cloudless day, and in the glare of the bull-ring in full as it is called yesterday, of the bull-ring; but the creamy white mantillas softened somewhat the hard outline, and gave to the faces of the young ladies a harmony of subdued splendor. What superb Spanish lace, flexible, soft, with a silken luster, falling in lovely folds that show its presence yet exquisitely overnight figures, such as I and seen and flower the creation of dainty fingers! Such work as this is such a tone and fineness, in such large quantities, sweeping from the hand to the train, is scarcely to be found in the shops nowadays. These were ladies—great great-grandmothers, handing yellowing, and growing rich in faded cloaks worn only on state occasions, and now brought forth to make a bull's holiday.

"We spent a good deal of the waiting time in scrutinizing the packed seats for beautiful women, and I am sorry to say, with barely a reward adequate to our anxiety. I am not sure how much the beauty of the women of Seville is traditional. They have good features, fine eyes, an expression of repose and security. And the fan, the mantilla, the high comb of coquetry, give the empressement to those who have to be wooded. But the Seville women have usually sallow, yellow complexions. Perhaps the beauty of the type is destroyed by cosmetics, for there was not a lady at the bull-fight who was not painted and powdered. This gave an artificiality to their appearance en masse. Beauty of color was very rare, and still rarer was that animation, that stamp of individual character, luminous in the play of expression, and sprightly and charm in any assembly of American women. The handsomest women in the ring were not numerous enough to make any impression on the general mass, and yet the total effect was the reverse here, the artificial color, the rich toilet, and the agitation of fans was charming."

The Consumption of Gold.

The consumption of gold for other than monetary purposes in Europe, America and Australia has more than quadupled in thirty years, and has quite trebled in twenty years. It is more than five times what it was half a century ago. The great mass of gold which has flowed from the mines has been absorbed in the manufactures and luxury of the times which have swallowed up the flood of gems, gems in volume beyond any former precedent, from the diamond fields of South Africa, and increasing prices will be quite as likely to whet the appetite for both as to check it. Five-sixths of the current production of gold is absorbed in the arts and manufactures in the Western world and in British India. A part of the remaining sixth is lost in the wear of coins and by fires, shipwrecks and forgotten hoards. What is left to increase the stock of gold money in proportion to the increase of population, exchanges and wealth of the world? It is possible that the production of gold can decrease. It is also possible that it will decrease as it actually has been decreasing for many years; but there is no uncertainty about the consumption of gold, which is sure to grow with the growing opulence and luxury of the world. It has trebled within the past twenty years, and it only doubled within the next twenty years it will exceed the production, even at the extreme rate which it attained when the California and Australia outburn sent its highest point.—*Sonthe N. CHARLEVOIX, - MICHIGAN.

IN North Branch, Sullivan county, N.Y., everything was ready for the wedding but the bride backed out. Thereupon the groom went off and got drunk. A few days later the girl made up her mind she would go to the altar, but then the groom relented. Then she took a drunk.

THE Secretary of a London bank recently got away with £100,000 of the funds of the institution, and the Directors, in a circular to the shareholders, say "The Board can only regret that just at the close of what would otherwise have been a prosperous year this incident should so sadly prejudice the results."

WILLIAM ANDERSON, an old farmer living in the suburbs of Saco, Me., has in his cellar nearly fifty barrels of wine. He will not drink it, sell it, give it away, or throw it away. As he made it and hoped, its sale would not only conflict with the State laws, but with national ones, and the property keeps growing in quality every year, to the exasperation of Mr. Andrews' fellow-citizens. Some of it is already more than twenty years old.

IN YORK and Brooklyn (ny), armed with hatchets and hickory broomhandles, go to be seen dodging about the alleys. They are cut and kitten ankles, and they sell the pelts and heads to furriers and pullmers. The pelts are sold for about five cents each, as 3 cents for common yellow and black cats, 4 cents for large kittens of the same variety, and from 5 to 7 cents for Maltese. Nights and Sundays, expects are the best times to go out cutting.

A GOOD-NATURED lady has just convicted an army officer of conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman, and sentenced him to be dismissed for marrying a woman with whom he had been living without marriage. Up to that said he conducted as an officer and a gentleman would be been fully up. He also standard army morality; but an attempt to repair a wrong and to live decently is intolerable. The court-martial—we hope—will be ordered. These thus are not marriages. Those thus married already shall live. The rest shall keep as they are."

GEORGE Q. CANNON told to a reporter in Washington that he feared the Mormons would be compelled to "go to the religious." This remark was intended exclusively for the ears of the Eastern people. Cannon preaches on entirely different doctrine in Utah, and his addresses there are urgent appeals to the members of the church to be more wives so that they can have a higher place in glory." Mr. Cannon also denies that he is a candidate for the office of President of the church. Everybody who knows anything about Mormon affairs knows that Cannon is the actual de facto head of the church to-day, and that Taylor is only an automaton in his hands.

DR. CHARLES C. BEATTY, of Stoghenville, Ohio, has a peculiar method of deposing of his wealth. At Bad, he generously set apart one-tenth of his income for the cause of Christianity; but when the financial revulsion of 1837 swept widespread distress he resolved that one-fourth should go to religion and charity. After this, in view of the fact that, as he says in the written pledge found since his recent death, the Lord had blessed him peculiarly "beyond what he had ever expected or deserved," he made a covenant never to alter the principal of his fortune beyond $70,000, and that all above this should be given away. Accordingly, the value of his estate is $92,000, and the aggregate gifts amounted to $550,000.

THE Chronicle, of San Francisco, says that with the recent local census returns for that city, and says that the population is nearer to 300,000 than 230,000. It bases its calculation on the fact that the returns show that the average number of inhabitants to a dwelling is 6.86. It is preposterous, it says, that San Francisco, with 30,000 Chinese huddled together by hundreds, in a city filled with large hotels and boarding-houses, and where comparatively few large dwellings are occupied by a single family, should only have an average of 6.86 persons to a dwelling, while cities like St. Louis, Brooklyn and Cincinnati are represented to have respectively averages of 8.15, 9.11, and 9.11 persons to the dwelling. San Francisco should try the St. Louis plan to increase its population. Let it take a school census and "see" the directory.

SENATOR LOGAN says of his recent interview with Sitting Bull and his fellow-Indians: "Why, I saw the soldiers of one of our unmounted soldiers which had been cut, flesh and all, from his face, dangling to the pipe of one of these Indians, and his pipe was passed around as the pipe of peace. I say to you that I don't want to talk about any policy which—but I won't say it." Many thousands of people are like Gen. Logan. When, for instance, they see such a Chief as Benita, who killed Judge McCrone, outraged and murdered his wife, killed their daughter and probably killed their son, strutting up and down on a Government reservation big as a bed, fed by the Government, protected by the Government and armed by the Government, they are not disposed to accept the Israelbread view of the Indian question.

TOM THUMB'S little widow was exhibiting recently in Cincinnati. She was interviewed and said: "I was a baby at home I could not remain there. The General and I lived together twenty years, and in that time were constantly together. He was no one except for a few minutes at a time. With us it was not like it is with most married people, where they are often separated for long periods, and thus become in a measure accustomed to being alone. I could not be alone, and, as I feel more at home when I am before the public, I thought it would be better for me to appear in public again. Some people think it is strange that I appear again, and especially upon the stage, but they do not understand how it is with one who has been before the public as long as I have. To remain at home after such an active life, and especially without the General, was too much for me."

THE Chicago Daily News says: Just why the author of the story called the "Bread-Winners" should want to maintain his incognito is not plain, but this is a fancy which quite often takes possession of story-writers. In this case, however, the effort at secrecy is very ineffective, it being about as clear that Hay is the author as it is that some one has written the Bigelow papers. Hay was the private secretary of President Lincoln, and gained a certain insight into social life which is of service to him in this work. Later he married the daughter of a great iron manufacturer in Cleveland, and through this connection he has had ample opportunity with the details of the iron trade and the lives of iron-workers, which he uses to marked advantage in his story, where more or less connected in politics and thrown in the company of public men, here and there, his pictures of the local politicos are strong, if exaggerated, and he makes this knowledge count with the rest.

NEW YORK Herald: The great tidal wave caused by the Java earthquake was propagated to the Pacific coast of South America. At Talcahuano, Chili, the ocean rose, Aug. 28, two feet above high-water mark, and the day after earthquakes were felt in San Salvador, Colombia and Ecuador. Alarming detonations about the same time were heard in all the towns of the Bogota plateau, while at Manaba, Ecuador, troopes were turned out to meet the supposed enemy. This record will enable seismologists to ascertain the extent of the disturbance caused by the Java earthquake. Almost simultaneously with the Andean earthquake stocks and the Chilian tidal-wave the ocean rose on the California coast, as reported by Prof. Davidson, Aug. 28. In the West Indies an extraordinary tide rose in the harbor of St. Thomas, at 7:30 p.m., Aug. 27. As the tides at St. Thomas seldom go above twelve inches, and that of Aug. 27 rose three and one-half feet, and was followed on the 30th by a heavy earthquake shock, there can be little doubt that this disturbance was the result of the terrible commotion in the Sunda straits. If to the same agency be attributed the disturbance tidal-wave which visited our Jersey coast, Aug. 28 and 29, it would seem that the agitation extended to all the oceanic areas around the globe, forty degrees on both sides of the equator.

THE LITTLE FOLKS.

To a Japanese Baby.

You due ill in you dowcase, where twinkle
The arrangement for a frame tiny eyes,
Strange trees stand it; dimness beautable
The dark flying leaves.

Tip-cordon and bangle and fan-tails
Can see outside wide window you view;
And yonder, the snow-crested mountain
High up in the blue.

Big, benighting your baby-eyes nearer,
Where slumbers the still-watered moat,
Where the lotus-flower—as a mirror,
The blue-dome—floats.

Your face is as brown as a berry,
In outline as round as a nun;
Black all as a crow, wanderlity merry,
Sunny down to your nose.

Your head like a fairy's is shaven—
How droll! no a hair can any mod,
Except the tuft, twice as a raven,
That's curled behind.

Around your form stiff flatter
Fantastic and trifle—and "things"
You seem like a gorgeous butter
Fly, resting its wings.

You're well made to teach us and tumble;
All thanks, though, the Gods, that we only
Need change, to make grown folks grandsire—
Nonsense, "Tis a boy!"

Your world is so simply and sunny,
So pleading and quaint and entreat—
No wonder your pious lucy grows funny,
But never can cry.

We love you, Fable Bib-a-bone, dearly,
Though at you have never to know;
We know you if you dumped of fare—merely
The mirror life pulsed Thee.

What Aunt Adopted.

"Mother, can't we adopt a baby?" Mrs. Walters looked up in astonishment at the question. Little 6-year-old Bob was standing in the window drumming her brown hair blown about her rosy cheeks by the wind.

As there was a small boy in frocks nearly two years younger than Anne, and a pair of twins sleeping in the cradle, the question did seem needless.

"Adopt a baby? Why, my dear, people only do that when God has not given them one," said her mother. "I could not possibly take care of another baby."

"But I could, mamma. I'd just everything. Mary Longcliff's mother has adopted one, and Mary says it is the cunningest little thing!"

"But we don't need it, for we have more than other people—two dear little babies," said her mother, kindly, seeing how much in earnest she was.

"Well, I know that, but can't we adopt something?" asked the child, anxiously.

"Yes, you find some poor little motherless kitten—a yellow one would be best, cause yellow kittens are mostly all drowned." This was Bob's advice. Bob was 9 years old, and a great teaser.

"Don't want that. I can get lots of cats without adopting them," said the child.

"Well, a lion or a goose lion; to being something of a goose yourself, you will know what to do with it."

"But I want something that thinks," said Anne, after a moment's thought.

"That's not a thinking thing the Lowells have got," said Bob, pausing in the act of tilting a chair. "It looks like a roll of cotton wool dressed up with a cell."

"But it isn't. It can just scream," said Anne earnestly.

"Oh! I'll give you a dear little pig that can squeal beautifully," said Bob.

"Make him stop, sometimes," cried Anne, her eyes full of tears. "He's teasing me, and I do want to adopt something."

"Adopt me," said Bob. "I'd make you a tame boy sure."

"I don't want you. I've got you already," said Anne.

"Oh! I'll give you a dear little pig that can squeal beautifully," said Bob.

"Make him stop, sometimes," cried Anne, her eyes full of tears. "He's teasing me, and I do want to adopt something."

"Adopt me," said Bob. "I'd make you a tame boy sure."

"I don't want you. I've got you already," said Anne.

"Oh! my dear, whom could you adopt?" asked her mother, kindly. "You already have father, a mother, sisters and brothers, uncles and aunts—"

"Oh, I know now!" cried Anne. "Why, I cannot any grandmother! Why can't we adopt one of them?"

"Well, we might, if we could find a crazy old lady wondering about and looking for some one to adopt her," said her mother, laughing, while Bob fairly danced with fun at the idea.

"I see such a bad thought, said Anne's mother, when she had got over laughing. "Perhaps Aunt Betsy will consent to be adopted for a few months."

"Splendid!" ejaculated Anne. "Can't we go for her right away? It will be fun—to have a grandmother in the house."

"Do it will, and perhaps papa will drive over to Lexington tomorrow and see what she thinks about it," her mother replied.

Aunt Betsy was the children's greatest, and, as Anne expressed it, plenty of fun to be a grandmother. She lived with a step-daughter, and her son had borrowed what little money she had, on interest.

The son's wife was not an "adable" person, and Aunt Betsy's presence in law a great burden. There was one other son, whom people called wild and "good-hearted," a wanderer in California.

Anne's mother knew that her dear old aunt was unhappy, and had long been thinking of asking her to the house for a visit.

Anne's idea of "adopting a grandmother" gave rise to much laughter, and her mother resolved to offer the old lady a home. No objection was made to this plan, her son made himself easy about the money he owed, by paying his rent, and troubling it much no further.

It was indeed delightful to feel that she had a home where everybody was kind and attentive, a pleasant room with her books, her knitting-work, her darning-basket close to her hand while flowers and vases and pictures made the walls beautiful. And there to feel that she was the adopted grandmother of a dear, lovable, laughing little child.

Everybody but Anne called her Aunt Betsy; to Anne alone she was "grandma," and the old lady enjoyed the distinction.

Anne took her under her own special protection—she gathered flowers for her, threaded her needle, took her hand as they went to church, and sat close by her in the pew, taking pains to let everybody know that she was her adopted grandma, feeling rather excitant over the fact that she herself had provided this luxury for the family.

Aunt Betsy repaid her fondness with interest. She dressed dolls, and cut whole, though rather hideous, families out of paper. She built height little stockings and mittens, and kept a store of sugar-plums, to which Anne had free access.

Her granddaughter's little rocking-chair sat on the other side of the fireplace; so close was her companionship that Bob called them "our grandmothers."

It was not long before the son, who had borrowed her money, failed. But Anne, for the first time second emotions, declared that she would make haste and grow up, so that she might keep school and take care of grandma.

But long before she was old enough to take such a burden upon herself, her father died, and there was some fear that the adopted grandmother would seem be homeless.

But God had seen the good deed done, and it happened that Mary Ann, in this trial time, was enabled to be the good genius of the stricken family.

Every few years the poor wanderer, away in California, who was sometimes rich and sometimes poor, would wake up to a sense of his neglected duty, and send his mother considerable sums of money.

These she had been enabled to save, and on the day after the funeral astonished the grief-stricken widow by journing her board into her lap, amounting to more than $500.

"You have been kind to me in my more heartless," she said, her sweet old face as radiant as that of an angel; "now it pleases the Heavenly Father that I be help you in your trouble." But this was not all.

One day, when the money was nearly gone, another letter came, stating that Aunt Betsy's son had just secured a valuable claim, and that as soon as he got rich enough he was coming home to take care of her and of the little girl who had adopted her.

Anne laughed over the letter. "He thinks as a little girl," she said, "and I am almost 15; I guess he won't want to adopt me when he sees me."

"I don't know about that," said Aunt Betsy, with a smile and a cunning little twinkle of Anne's mother.

Grandma still kept her place. Sometimes matters went well and they had plenty, and again it seemed as if want was ready to stare them in the face. Aunt Betsy was still their friend and counsel, and, when the times were at their worst she always said that they were going to mend, and sure enough, they did.

There never could be a cloud so black that the cheerful old lady did not see a sunny somewhere.

"God is a great banker, and don't you worry," were her always consoling words.

At last came a large, thick letter directed to Aunt Betsy in a clear, clerky hand. It was from Allen, the son, no longer poor Allen, and was full of papers, which it took a lawyer to understand and unravel. The important one that the boy had sent money enough to keep his mother from want all the days of her life.

Drafts and Government bonds were inclosed in the amount of $10,000, which, on her death—the interest being sufficient for her simple wants—was to go to the little girl who had adopted her, when her own absent one was so thoughtless concerning her comfort.

This was enough to keep them all comfortable, with Bob's help; for Bob was now a stout young fellow of 20, with a capacity for making money.

Anne, who had contemplated the pleasure of earning something for herself until she was 18, shared in the triumph over the result of her childish transaction.

"I guess you are glad now, sir, that I adopted a grandmother in place of a kitten, or a lion, or a duck, or a pig."

"I am," cried Bob; "it was a jolly idea; I am also glad that you adopted her in place of any little thing that thinks and screams awfully, as we already had two babies in the house. But girls do have sensible notions once in a while."—Mrs. Mary A. Denison, in Youth's Companion.

Washington Workingwomen.

A lady told me she said high wages and gave better hours than any one she knew, but she could not find a good household servant. I inquired her wages and hours. "Twelve dollars a month and two hours out of the 24 of a week, except on washing days and Saturdays." Forty cents a day for from thirteen to fifteen hours hard, uninterrupting labor, requiring taste and skill! What abiloshed, intelligent man in this country would look at it? The lady did pay good wages and give good hours as the world goes. We need expect no higher estimate of its sagacious in halt. It is a perfect glutton, feeding in all of its three stages of growth, but, especially, in its perfect state, on the larva of mosquitoes and other obnoxious insects. In the water, as a larva, it is very active, and a great feeder, and not much more prepossessing in appearance than when it issues to spend the remainder of its life on the wing.—Exchange.

Cattle Ranching in South America.

The native ranchers of South America are, as a rule, an amiable and quiet race, whether creole or half-breed; their wants are few, their tastes simple, and their views insignificant. They breed vast families of children and are indigent, though somewhat whimsical, parcels and masters. However rich they may be in their flocks, they are generally poor in purse, for they kill or sell their stock only to meet their needs. A ranch in the South American plains is said to be worth not so much money, but so many head of cattle, and it is his pride to sell to the count.

He keeps a regular census of his herds by perforated boards, into which eggs are stuck. Some ranches have their walls almost covered with these boards, and the master will keep peeping them up as if he was engaged in a game of cribbage with nature, and constantly winning. As a rule, each peg represents a single animal. We only found one ranche where the count was kept with pegs for the thousands, the hundreds and the single heads. This ranchero had spent some years in Trinidad in his youth, and was regarded by all who knew him as an exceptionally advanced and brilliant man; yet he could only write his name in printed letters, and could not read written letters at all.

There are, of course, upon the plains men who breed cattle with some intelligence and energy. These are educated natives or foreigners. With them the business is scientifically pursued; they have their regular singlering seasons and make all they can by the trade. Their houses, though constructed on the general plan of all tropical or subtropical dwellings, are paved and furnished, kept cleaned and filled with comforts.

Beside the house is always found an extensive corral, or pen, walled in with strong posts. Here the cattle to be slaughtered and those kept in the neighborhood of the ranche are confined. In front of the corral is the slaughtering place. This is simply a couple of posts to which the doomed bovine is hauled by a rope, the kinder legs to have its throat cut. You can scent a slaughtering place before you see a ranche. At killing time you can further distinguish it at a distance by the buzzards hovering overhead. The buzzards appear with the dogs for the offal of the butchery, and they always make running fights over it between them.

At slaughtering seasons a sort of mosquitoes grounds of bamboo frame, constructed out of poles, tied together with thongs of rawhide, rises around the ranche. It is here that the beef is dried or "jerked." After the animal has been slaughtered the hides are pegged out on the grass to dry, a wooden peg being driven through each corner of the hide to keep it from shrinking. The meat is then cut into strips; salt is well rubbed into it and it is thrown upon the frames to dry in the sun, the old folks and children of the ranche being kept busy driving the flies away. It is. When it is dry, jerked beef is as black and as tough as rubber. It can be boiled sufficiently soft to eat, but it is serious eating at the best.

Cow hides were formerly a dead loss to the rancher, but of late years they, too, are preserved for sale. The horns and bones are left where they may happen to fall, unless the rancheros is particularly hard-up, when they are placed into a heap out of the way, until a time they become a monumental monument to the business of the place. There are to be found perfect mounds of this kind, which, in the course of years, become covered with a deposit of earth and dressed in grass until their original character can only be discovered by digging into them. In one instance of Vancouver an entire lake has been filled up with bones from the surrounding ranches, and is now a dry basin sown with gleaming skeletons, the aspect of which is indescribably indecent to every one but those who are native and to the manor born.—Alfred Trumble, in American Agriculturist.

Dragon Fly.

Everyone is familiar with the dragon fly or "devils darning needle," for the youthful mind is filled with terror by stories of the satanic deeds of sewing up mouths and eyes credited by nurses and grandmothers to this brilliantly colored and ferocious looking insect. These stories that make the truant child tremble, have made no strongholds them in the rapid flight of these ug

THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

Ben. Butler was defeated in Massachusetts, but he has a mighty following in that state, and will have in the nation if he allows himself to become a third party candidate for the presidency next year, as seems probable from his recent utterances. The Chicago Herald says that in a recent interview, "in response to an inquiry if he should retire from politics he is reported to have said: 'No, sir; so long as there are labor interests to be conserved and anti-monopoly principles to be maintained, I shall continue the contest on those issues.' Some time ago Butler remarked on the possibility of a third party and a third candidate next year. This would look as if he has an idea that the new party is forming and looking to him as its Moses. Ben may be heard from next summer as a disturbing factor," and may be the means of giving a republican victory next fall.

There is at least one republican official in Michigan who deserves a monument for honesty and justice. John D. Shull, of Lansing, was elected alderman of the second ward of that city, and after serving some time a change in business affairs made it necessary for him to resign, and a special election was held to fill vacancy. At the close of the last quarter an order was drawn on the treasury in his favor for something over $30 for salary. Mr. Shull returned it to the council requesting that it be used toward defraying the expenses of the election, and stating also that his resignation had not only caused the extra expense to the city, but that he had not been a regular attendant at the meetings of the council for that quarter, and had not therefore fairly earned the salary. Such action is not common among public officials,—most of them would put it down in their pockets, and wish the sum was larger.

Butler did not "red there," but his performance in Massachusetts, take it all in all, was a more creditable piece of political work than any done by the democrats elsewhere. He has nothing to blame himself for in the way of blundering, which is the case with the democratic managers in other states which balloted on Tuesday. He made the best campaign in the country, got to the polls more of his available votes, and kept the party solider and more enthusiastic than any one of the blundering managers of democracy elsewhere. He is perfectly justified in saying, as he does in a dispatch to the Pittsburg Gazette, "When a man has increased the democratic vote from 112,000 to 152,000 in three years, is there any need for an answer to your question what my program will be." He would rather have his big vote of 152,000 than be elected by a vote of 134,000 as he was last year. There was no reserve in the battle of Tuesday. All the forces on both sides were in the field, and, as Butler says, he has had all the enemy out "and measured them." They outnumber him only a little over six per cent. If he can gain 5,000 of them in the coming year he can carry the state next November. He will not be very likely to do that, but, if he makes as vigorous a campaign in 1884 as in 1883, he will give the republicans of Massachusetts all they can possibly do at home to defeat him. They cannot afford to make a single mistake. He will not be a candidate for president, but he will run for governor again next year, and still continue to be a thorn in the side of Beacon Hill, and a nightmare to George Frisbie Hoar.—Evening News.

Bogole's Passes.

The Detroit Post and Tribune, the Lowell Journal and other republican papers have lately been making a great racket over passes alleged to have been issued to Governor Begole on account of his office. The Detroit Evening Journal of Thursday prints the following interview with the governor on the subject:

The Journal reporter asked the governor if he had read the articles published by the Post and Tribune of Sunday last, which charged him with riding on free passes.

"Yes, I have looked it over!"

"Does it do you justice?"

"Hardly, sir! I don't care to say much about it, except that I have never ridden a single mile on a pass when on official business."

"You see I am largely interested in the lumber business, and we do some $30,000 worth of shipping a year over the F. & P. M. R. R. There is no particular agreement to do so, but the company gives me, as they do other large shippers, a book of passes—the "little red book" spoken of—and it is this matter my letters printed in the Post and Tribune refer to.

"I suppose I do nearly 3,000 miles of travel in a year in connection with my business, and when I am doing such traveling I use those 'red book' passes. I think I have less than 100 miles of my last book left now. I have never talked with but one railroad man in regard to passes, and that was Dr. Potter of Saginaw, to whom my letters were addressed. As a general thing I don't care to take much notice of partisan attacks, but since so much has been said about the matter, I have determined to make a clear statement of the whole thing. I spoke to Mr. Stephenson about it before I left home, and it is already partly prepared. Until that is published I dont care to say anything about the matter further than that I have never traveled a mile on a railroad pass when on official business as governor."

Crop Report.

The Michigan crop report for November, published by the secretary of state, includes returns from six hundred and five townships, three hundred and sixty-four of which are in the southern four tiers of counties. In these counties the wheat crop for 1883 weighs ninety-four per cent of full weight, or somewhat less that 56½ pounds per measured bushel. The acreage seeded to wheat this fall if 91 per cent of the average seeding in 882, and compared with the vitality and growth of average years, the condition is 88 per cent.

Compared with 1882 there is a decrease of 31 per cent in the area of clover seed harvested, and 38 per cent in yield per acre.

The potato crop is less than fourfifths as large as in 1882.

The condition of cattle and sheep is slightly below the condition one year ago.

Owing to the dry weather at seeding time, wheat was generally sowed late, and the top is small and the ground only partially covered, although the plant seems healthy. Wheat is going into winter in poor condition.

At the time reports were made only a small portion of clover seed was hulled.

Wheat reported marketed by farmers in two hundred and fifty-seven elevators and mills during October is 1,290,713 bushels. The total number of bushels reported marketed in August, September and October is 3,810,970.

Charming Hospitality of the Dutch Boers.

When a traveler arrives at a habitation, he alights from his horse, enters the house, shakes hands with the men, kisses the women and sits down without further ceremony. When the table is spread, he takes his place among the family without waiting for an invitation; this is never given, on the supposition that a traveler, in a country so thinly inhabited, must always have an appetite for something. Accordingly, "What will you make use of?" is generally the first question. If there be a bed in the house, it is given to a stranger. If none, which is frequently the case among the graziers of Graar Reynet, he must take his chance for a form, or bench, or a heap of sheep-skins, among the rest of the family. In the morning, after a solid breakfast, he takes his sopie, or glass of brandy, orders his slave, or Hottentot, to saddle the horses, again shakes hands with the men and kisses the women, wishes them health, and they wish him a good journey. In this manner a traveler might pass through the whole country.

By Numbers.

The contractors on one of the railroads down East, finding it impossible to keep track of the Italian laborers by their unpronounceable names, fell upon the plan of numbering them. The number of each is painted in plain figures on the seat of his pantaloons. Before beginning work in the morning, at noon and again at night the men are formed in line, and the foreman passes in the rear of them and takes down each number, in order to ascertain who is present, as well as who is absent. The plan is beneficial in two ways—the men are easily recognized, and they are also kept from sitting down too much for fear of rubbing out the figures.

A Famous Dueling Ground.

The Weehawken ground is hard to identify now; a monument put there a few months after Hamilton's fall caused so many other duels by the spirit of competition it inspired in boys and fools that the Jersey people broke it down in 1820, though the slab upon it, which is about three feet by two and a half, remains in possession of a member of a family. Oliver H. Perry fought a duel on or about the same spot with Marine Capt. Heath in 1818. Decatur was Perry's second; the following year he fell on the dueling ground of Bladensburg. Perry threw away his fire. Alexander Hamilton's son fell on this spot two years before his father, in a duel where he was, if possible, more the aggressor than his father; young Hamilton and Gen. Hamilton were shot in nearly the same portion of the body, on the side just above the hip. Aaron Burr had fought on the same ground, four years before he killed Hamilton, with the latter's brother-in-law, John B. Church, for slandering him; Church's bullet went through Burr's coat. De Witt Clinton fought John Swartwout on or about the same dueling ground the year before Hamilton was killed, and shot Swartwout, who was Burr's strongest henchman, twice in the leg, and even then Swartwout wanted another shot, and Clinton had literally to leave the field without completing the satisfaction demanded. The Swartwouts were frequently at Weehawken as principals or duelists. Isaac Gouverneur was killed in 1815 by the Hamilton mechanism. In 1816 a grocer and a British officer fought a duel there in sight of a perfect circus of boats on the river and spectators on the rocks, and the grocer was shot dead; the grocer's brother, a few years afterward killed the Captain's brother. An editor named Graham was killed on the same spot in 1825 on account of a dispute at the card table. Several other persons were fatally or dangerously wounded at Weehawken.—New York Tribune.

Children's Compositions.

The latest revelations of infant genius brought forth in the composition class are found in the small American citizen of African descent, who, on being required to write a short "specimen-ball" on "Winter Sports," brought forth: "We see the Sports walking down Baltimore street every pleasant day in winter." A young candidate for Congress, of the superior race, down in Virginia, tried his hand at the subject given to the higher class—"Enterprise," and read aloud the following: "Enterprise is a good thing. Columbus enterprised America. If Columbus hadn't done it we should be nowhere, for nobody knew anything about America but the Indians, and they wouldn't tell."—Crete (Neb.) Literary Notes.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally. It acts directly upon the blood and the mucous surfaces of the system. Price 75c. For sale by Dr. Crouter.

News Brevities.

Jos. Hyland is working at his new dock this week.

Our merchants are getting in full stocks of winter goods.

Last Friday and Saturday were fine, warm winter days.

Last week closed the season for the Clara Belle on Pine lake.

Dr. G. W. Crouter and family returned home last Friday.

The tug L. S. Payne is out for repairs at Campbell's ship yard.

Geo. Keyes, of Boyne Falls, was among our callers on Tuesday.

Motto of Boyne Statesman: "In God we trust"—all others cash.

It is reported that W. T. Addis, of Bay Springs, has made an assignment.

The Eaton gang are busy cutting and preparing a full and complete history of the Grand Traverse region, and the Herald has secured the manuscript, and will publish it as a serial during the coming winter. It will greatly increase that paper's already large circulation and importance in northern Michigan.

Those who love to dance should not forget the firemen, at Lewis' hall next Thursday evening. The boys are trying to perfect arrangements to give the best entertainment for the money ever given in Charlevoix, and they deserve the solid support of our citizens. None of us know what cold night we shall need the services of these same "fire boys."

Mr. Mitchell, civil engineer, of Ludington, has arrived, and will superintend the removal of the obstruction at the mouth of the channel. A wrecking tug from Milwaukee is daily expected for the purpose of removing the wrecked B. Parsons. Mr. M. will also look after repairing the damage to the revetment. He states that the damage done is much less comparatively than at any other place on the lakes.

Mr. W. F. Orrell informed us on Thursday of last week that he received a letter from Mr. B. Saltenstall, of Chicago, requesting him to look after his cottage on the point opposite the Belvedere house, and that on going there he found that the cottage had been broken into and ransacked. Mr. O. did not know whether anything had been carried away, and will not until he hears from Mr. S., after comparing a list of articles found with what was known to have been left there. Mr. O. stated at the same time that one of the cottages on the south side had been broken into and ransacked in a similar manner.

During the past summer there has been considerable strife between the Pine lake boats in the matter of speed, and frequent races have been had with various results. One between the Clara Belle and North Star resulted in a slight advantage to the latter, and this was circulated and boasted by the up-lake people as showing the superiority of that boat over the Clara Belle. Last Friday, however, the Clara Belle put even and decisively to rest, leaving the North Star one-half mile behind in a fair race of two miles. This naturally makes our boys feel pretty good, and when navigation opens next spring it is safe to predict more of the same sort of excitement.

Historical Society.

This society met at the parlors of Mrs. E. H. Green on Tuesday evening and the following program was presented:

Vocal duet, by Mrs. E. H. Green and Miss Esther Buttons.

Paper by Dr. Preston; subject: "Efforts to secure peace prior to the rebellion."

Mrs. G. S. Thomas and Miss Abbie Bennett rendered a piano duet, which was considered a rare treat.

After an intermission, W. A. Smith favored the audience with a fine tenor solo.

Miss Maggie and Master Fred Green rendered a piano and violin duet, followed by a recitation by Mrs. Bradley.

A vocal duet by Miss Abbie Bennett and Mrs. Ella Smith, and a piano solo by Mrs. O. D. Wood, closed the exercises of the evening.

The society will meet next Tuesday evening at the parlors of the Fountain City house.

A change for E. M. Clark's advertisement was made too late for this issue—look for it next week, and then at the new goods which it will announce.

The school board advertise for sealed proposals for furnishing wood for the schools. Bids received at the office of J. Milo Eaton, director, until next Wednesday, 28th.

To keep pace with the necessities of the times, the Charlevoix Iron Works are erecting a brass furnace, and will soon be able to turn out work in that metal in a satisfactory manner.

John Connor & Co. are fitting up a cozy little room for the sale of boots and shoes. John will continue to pound away in the little back room, and guarantee work that will wear.

Two nights up with a sick child, and an all-night run of job work is not conducive to excellence and promptness in every department of newspaper work, as we find by experience.

The next meeting of the woman's Christian Temperance Union will be held at the home of Mrs. L. E. Allen on Friday of this week, at 3 p. m. A cordial invitation is extended to the ladies.

Reports from the southern part of the state indicate that the blizzard there was far more severe than here, in that it was colder and froze harder, in addition to the severe wind and snow storms.

Mr. W. H. Hurlbut is building a dock in front of his lot near the site of the old plank mill. This lot has been intended as the site for a grist-mill, and we hope to see one built there before the close of another season.

The circuit court convened on Tuesday, with 26 cases on the calendar. There was but one jury case tried, and the calendar was completed and court adjourned at 9:30 Wednesday evening. The proceedings will appear in next week's JOURNAL.

A late letter from F. W. Hallaway, of the Redpath lyceum bureau, Chicago, reports business booming with them. Mr. H. spent several weeks in our village last summer, and went away with a good opinion of it. We shall expect him again next summer.

The body of Moses Detwiler, drowned at Petoskey on the 11th, has been recovered. The body of Mr. Moody, one of the number drowned off the schooner Lucy J. Clark, near Cross Village, a week ago, was also found washed ashore near that place last Sunday.

J. Milo Eaton's brush handle factory is cushioned and ready for occupancy. He has just received the bill for the machinery, which will doubtless be received and put in place in good time. When started, this will make a valuable addition to our manufacturing interests.

A large force of men are at work on the walls of the new planing mill, and a week or two of good weather will so far enclose it that another blizzard will not entirely stop business there as the one last week promised to do. Mr. See is crowding business as fast as possible.

Rev. Mr. Iddings has selected as the subject for thanksgiving sermon at the M. E. church next Thursday, "The Model Republic." He would like to see our business men generally by aside their labor, during the hour of service at least, and properly observe the occasion.

The JOURNAL has in progress various maps and illustrations of Charlevoix and surroundings, to be used for advertising purposes, which are expected to surpass in accuracy of detail and beauty of finish any other work issued. More will be said when they are finally ready for public criticism.

Next Sunday morning Rev. Mr. Iddings, at the M. E. church, will discuss the question, "Is there a hell?" Text: Luke 16:23. The plan of the remarks will be laid in the fact that there is a law of the natural world by which each experience, pursuit, and object has a dark and foreboding side.

Last Sunday night fire destroyed the store of W. F. Emjery & Co., of East Jordan, in which building were also located the Enterprise printing office, the post office, and telegraph office. Emjery & Co.'s goods were insured for $4,000, but the printing office was not insured. In the latter place all books and accounts were lost.

C. R. Bellinger has just finished for Chas. Swallow a handsome 14 carat gold ring, with agate set, that will apparently stand lots of banging, and last a life-time. The work was all done here, both cutting the stone and manufacturing the ring from the raw material. Mr. B. is prepared to do this kind of work for all who may come.

Summed up, the lake disasters during the week just past amount to forty-six vessels wrecked, forty-three lives lost, and $800,000 worth of property destroyed. That is a ghastly record for one storm, and it suggests need of more rigid inspection as to the seaworthiness of lake vessels and the skill and efficiency of those who sail them. There is something wrong somewhere. The elements are not solely to blame for all that loss of life and property.

The Detroit Evening Journal has adopted the new railroad time, and its two o'clock edition is hereafter to be designated the "fourteen o'clock edition." The change is carried to every department of the paper. The railroads are so much a factor in business that the new method will doubtless soon come into general use.

Andrew Walker shot a large deer last week, weighing about 180 pounds. J. L. Reigle, supervisor, is busy making out the tax roll for his township.

A certain man living in Chandler says it is enough to make a boy leave home, rather than to live in single cussedness. Brace up young man and come to the front like a little captain.

The oyster supper and dance at William Gallop's was a success, there being about thirty people present. The music was furnished by Upon, Pardee & Co.

There are a great many trying to kill deer, but very unsuccessful thus far, there being only one killed in the town so far as we know.

THE FIGHT AT THE FORD—A LEGEND OF THE WAR.

On Hooker at eve he wild Rapidan's verge,
Like the shimmer of sunset fare smitten away
From the swift-flowing waters that back in its course
Till the shadowy gloom clasts the portals of day.

While the opaline tints slowly fade from the west,
And the voices of nature are hushed and serene,
Then I fancy I see from a fair vista that thrills
Every chord of my heart as I gaze on the scene.

'Tis a spot in whose tranquil repose one may dream
And forget for a season the tumults of life,
Yet it smacks in its space where hosannahs have
Have been cast in the vortex of vengeance and strife.

There grim legions opposing in combat were drawn,
And the greensward was strewn with the shattered and killed,
In the light that raged fiercely from midnight
to dawn,
When the river ran red with the blood that was spilled.

Then the cannonades were dead, and the victors remained
But to gather the wounded and bury the dead
Of friend or of foe, while sweet Mercy complained
The sad hearts that before by Destruction were held.

But ah, few all were gone from the Rapidan's side,
Where was gathered the terrific harvest of death;
Save one, lay apart in the rushes, whose name had died
As he lay by the river-marge gasping for breath.

In the canes he upheld none more noble than he Who in camp for his comrades, nor whiteness to show
How a brave heart could suffer with never a moan.

Though he uttered no plaint his and fate to bewail,
There came one in the beauty of maidenhood's prime
From her home just across the Rapidan stricken vale
To weep o'er the scene of War's merciless storm.

While the gentle girl grieved for the heroic she found
Yet he moved, as if tied by a bond from on high,
To the drift where yet living, but prone on the ground,
Was the form of the soldier so youthful to view.

Though the soil of the battle begrimed his was now
Though unshaved was the wound that bled
in his side,
With that grit that rocks not of person or place,
Signal, she unshrin to do what she might ere he died.

Quick with water caught up in the sash she had worn,
From the river that smiled on the dent wind
it flowed,
She laved and refreshed the young soldier tortured,
Till his eyes were returned with a wonder that glowed.

"Art thou come from yon heaven, sweet angel
below?
By the green his faint voice found the language to sear

Miss Wickersham's Romance.

BY M. C. FARLEY.

It was an old, old house, Teddy looked up at the many gabled, moss-grown roof, and the faded red-brick walls with feelings of both anger and sorrow.

He was the only heir. In the natural course of events Wickersham farm and the old ivy-grown mansion, built in Colonial times, would be his own, providing he did nothing to offend his aunt, the present incumbent.

Teddy groaned inwardly at the recollection. For two and twenty years Miss Wickersham had been a mother to him. If some people declared that Miss Wickersham had no heart, and was proud and overbearing in disposition and hard to please—her nephew at least had never been made to feel that side of her nature until now.

Some six months previous Maj. Willis had returned from Europe with his daughter, and settled down quietly at Fern Fields, a trouble-down old manor house, which report said was all there left to him of the once great Willis fortune.

The Major had lived abroad the better part of his life. His child had been born on a foreign land, and his wife was buried there. Still, for some unknown reason, he had gathered together the remnants of his once splendid fortune, and, coming home to Fern Fields, was one Miss Wickersham's nearest neighbor.

From the very day of the Major's return to the home of his boyhood, Miss Wickersham had predicted she would ignore him. Fern Fields, she said, was nothing to her—she wanted nothing whatever to do with the people who lived there, and continued her nephew, upon pain of her displeasure, never to have the slightest intercourse with the Willis family. All went smoothly for a short time, when, in some inconceivable manner, Teddy and the Major's daughter chanced to meet, and Ted fell head over heels in love with her at first sight. What was his consternation to find, upon acquainting his aunt with the turn of affairs, that she suddenly flew into a violent passion and ordered him never to speak to the young lady again. It was all very easy for Miss Wickersham to execute such a command, but it was simply impossible for Teddy to obey it.

There were stolen interviews and long walks by the riverside, and many an hour was spent in company with the Major himself, when Ted found it impossible to investigate the young lady out of doors. Of course there could be but one ending to the affair. Recklessly Ted proposed, was accepted, and the Major gave them both his paternal blessing.

Proud and happy the young man went home to his aunt and told her plainly what he had done, not doubting but that she would accept the inevitable, with tolerable grace at least, when she found it was to be. But he was upsetted at her manner.

"If you marry that girl, Teddy, not a cent of my money shall you ever have!" screamed Miss Wickersham at the top of her shrill old voice. "I detest the whole family, root and branch, and there shall not a dollar's worth of my property ever go to benefit one of them in any way if I can help myself, and I guess I can."

Teddy's face fell. It was a bright, handsome, young face, framed in with a lot of yellow hair that was his aunt's especial pride—though she was too much overcome with rage now to pay any attention to his good looks.

"Aunt to think, she west on, in her thin, high-quivering key, "that of all persons in the world, you should select Nellie Willis to be your wife. And you know very well, Teddy, what my opinion is of the Willis family—a poor, proud, shiftless set, to make the best of one."

Teddy grew very red.

"If rumor is true, Aunt Wickersham, you did not always rate the Willis' at such a low figure—particularly the Major," retorted he, indignantly.

The only pink that yet lingered in Miss Wickersham's delicate old face turned suddenly to a vivid scarlet. She choked, and hesitated an instant.

"This from you, Teddy," said she reproachfully.

Directly he had the grace to feel ashamed of himself.

"Forgive me, aunt" he cried. "I am a brute."

"Say no more," said she coldly, mentioning him to leave the room, the delicate color in her face having now faded entirely out, giving place to a dull, leaden hue, not pleasant to see.

Once alone, she went to a foreign cabinet that stood in one corner of the apartment, and, unlocking the drawer, took therefrom a small parcel.

"It seems strange how the folly of my youth yet clings to me in my old age," she mused, bitterly, turning the package over in her still white and shapely hands.

"I will burn these things. Perhaps forgetfulness will come the more readily," she addressed the fire, kneeling the parcel, and dropping a bunch of withered roses into the blaze.

Still, she hesitated, a thousand memories of a bygone time, struggling through her mind, and a strange moisture dimming the brightness of her proud, dark eyes.

"She would only break his heart," she cried at last, impatiently. "Her are coquettes, all—father and daughter alike. Teddy shall not have his life spoiled by her—like the false daughter—of an unworthy parent."

An instant later and she had drop the little packet into the grate. There was a sudden light puff and a strong perfume from the burning roses, filled the room. The parlor door was thrown open. "Maj. Willis," announced the servant. The room seemed to swim around her, for a moment. She could not have been more astonished to hear a clap of thunder from a clear heaven.

A feeling of anger brought back her usual self-possession.

"So what am I indebted for this visit, Maj. Willis," she asked with freezing politeness.

"To be frank—various causes. I am here, primarily, in behalf of the future well-being of one young people," replied the Major, bravely.

"If you are trying to negotiate a marriage between those two, you may as well know, first as last, that I shall never consent to it," said Miss Wickersham, ignoring the fact that her visitor was still standing, hat in hand, before her.

The Major bit his lip.

He glanced critically at his elaborate bonbons, as she, too, rose to her full height and confronted him, her face pale, her eyes flashing, and her white ringed fingers tightly clasping the edge of the old cabinet he remembered of yore.

It was thirty years since he had entered that house for the last time, as he supposed. He was a young man then, gay and handsome, and very much in love indeed, with the angry lady before him. Thirty years, was a long time, and yet, how well he remembered—yes, the smallest detail of the room. Nothing was changed now, he thought with a critical smile, save himself and the little old lady who so ungeniously received him. Unceremoniously the Major fetched a deep sigh.

It was evident that, if Miss Wickersham had unhappy memories of the long ago, the doughty Major also had a few that were not so pleasant as they might have been.

"It seems a great pity," said he, recalling himself with an effort, "that two young lives should be made miserable because of a mere whim. I called to—to speak to you about the settlements I shall make my daughter on the occasion of her marriage. I am not rich, still she will have no mean dowry."

"We will not discuss the subject of your daughter's marriage, as it concerns me not the slightest. I have this to say. If my nephew persists in making Miss Willis his wife, I shall execute a will cutting him off with a paltry dollar. My determination is unchangable."

There was the least little tit of an angry sparkle in the corner of the Major's eye.

"Miss Willis will not marry for money," said he, quietly shifting his position a little, and resting his elbow on the low mantle piece. "My daughter's happiness is my only consideration."

Miss Wickersham noticed—indeed she could not well help it—what a fine looking man the Major was, in spite of his fifty years. Her heart throbbed a trifle faster as she thought of days long gone past.

"But for her dear sake," continued the Major, "I should not again cross the threshold of this house, Rebecca."

"That is like a man," retorted Miss Wickersham, with biting sarcasm. "But I let it pass. My nephew is a man, and will undoubtedly do as he likes in this matter."

The Major heaved a little more heavily on the mantle piece, his elbow in dangerous proximity to an old, discolored plaster bust of Franklin. He recovered it as casually, and then turned with a jump for the last time he had looked upon it—thirty years before.

"I shall be sorry to have Ted lose his inheritance for my daughter's sake," said the Major, presently, putting his hand to his eyes as if to shut out the sight of the room, and the memories it recalled. "But there seems to be no help for it. This being the case, perhaps it might be as well to bring this interview to a close."

Miss Wickersham bowed stiffly. Cold, proud, relentless, she stood there waiting for him to go.

"I might argue to no purpose with the Sphinx," thought the Major, as his hand down forcibly on the mantle.

The next instant the plaster cast topplied over and fell crashing against the old-fashioned brass andirons, and lay shivered in a hundred fragments on the floor.

Miss Wickersham gave a little hysterical shriek and flew to the rescue.

Cursing his carelessness, the Major stooped down to help gather up the pieces.

Could he believe his eyes? Right there, with unbroken wafer, was a letter he had himself written, long, long ago.

Miss Wickersham picked it up wondeingly, as she saw her own name on the face of it.

"It is strange how this note ever came in here," said she, breaking the seal slowly.

The Major had not gone soldiering all these years to no purpose. His military experience had taught him wisdom and not only wisdom, but patience as well. So he waited quietly until she finished reading the yellow old love-letter.

Cæsar's Dream.

A queer old Dutchman by the name of A. H. Cæsar, who lived in Albany, used to come to our part of country (Lawrence county, Ind.), buy cattle and drive them to New Albany and Louisville. On a certain occasion he bought some cattle of Ari Armstong, who lived some eight or ten miles from Bedford. Cæsar, in taking away his drover, let one of Armstrong's calves follow the cattle off. Armstrong used the Dutchman and made him pay a very big fine for the calf. Armstrong being a member of the church and a very wrathful farmer, the old Dutchman lang power, had few friends, and could scarcely speak English so as to be understood, it was an easy matter to get judgment. After this, it appears that Armstrong sold the Dutchman some mules, and on delivery swindled old Cæsar out of $150. Cæsar said Armstrong, and, seeing how he fared in his former suit, he employed one of the best attorneys at the bar of the bar, who took a great deal of pains to have justice dealt out to his client. Cæsar was not so big a fool but what he could see the prejudice in favor of the rich Armstrong, but he gave much out his case in spite of the prejudices, and Armstrong was obliged to pay over the $150. Cæsar wanted to rebuke the court and the church for trying to shield a rich man; so, on meeting a neighbor of Armstrong, whom he knew would tell Armstrong, church and court, he said:

"What you thinks, Mr. Tamschill? I built a team. I team I been dead already, but I go straight to Barabise. Mr. Olossie Beter come and say: 'Who lex here a wheel bar for sale ilies?' Uml I say: 'Yohanine Atan Haller Cæsar, cattles-buyer for Ni Albany.'

"What do you want, Mr. Cæsar?"

"'Te be amplored be your vinge.' Only goes right in to get my vinge. But Mr. Olossie Beter say:

"'Stop a lot, Mr. Cæsar, we haf a charge to you.'

"Mr. Olossie Beter bring der big spook and look him up unt rent out lent:

"I tel Ari say:

"'Ari Armstrong, rich farmer, cattle raiser and member of the church fon Lawrence county, steal mules from Cæsar wort $150.' What you thinks o dat, Mr Olossie Beter? He say:

"'Oh, dat's all right; walk right in, Mr. Armstrong.'

"I say, 'Tunder and blixen! How is dot, Mr. Olossie Beter?' Chinese Finger Nails.

The Chinese are very inconsistent in their talk about the dignity of labor. Once a year the Emperor and chief noblemen at his court go into a field and plow up a few furrows, while the Empress raises cocoanuts of her own to set a good example to their subjects. At the same time they allow the finger nails to grow to an extent that incapacitates them for labor of any description. It is considered a sign of great gentility, and a remarkable amount of time and talent is expended in polishing and sharpening them. When they have reached a few inches in length, they are inclosed in silver or gold sheaths, and turned backward at the elbow for protection. One gentleman in Shanghai has grown his nails to the length of eighteen inches. The woman, as is well known, have their feet bound from the time they are born, and when they are grown the exceedingly small feet make them hobble around by their maids, so useless have they become! I have seen women whose feet were only three inches and a little long.—Shanghai letter.

THE STEAM PLOW.

When and Where Invented, How Constructed, and Where Used.

An apparatus for steam plowing was first patented in the United States Nov. 19, 1855, by E. C. Bellinger, of South Carolina. It was not received with sufficient favor by farmers or capitalists to encourage the manufacture of the machine. In England, Francis Moor took out a patent as early as 1763 for an engine to plow, harrow, and do other farm work without the aid of horses. Several other attempts at inventing a steam plow were made, but all to no practical purpose, until 1840, when a Mr. Pratt patented a steam-plowing apparatus, employing two engines stationed on opposite headlands, and drawing plows by means of endless chains or ropes. An improved form of this machine was patented by Mr. Boothroyd, of Mt. P., in 1862, which is said to be the first that was ever worked successfully in the fields. Alexander Miles made improvements on Mr. Boothroyd's machine in 1869 and 1870, still the practical results were insignificant until in 1874, when John Fowler, jr., of Dublin, brought forward an improvement on the plans of Bellinger, Pratt and others, since which time numerous changes and additions have been made, and steam plowing has gone into extensive practice on many of the leading estates of great Britain and in the East and Old Worlds, and the steam plows being now in use in England alone.

Many attempts to invent a successful traction engine for steam plowing have been made.

The plan called cable traction, invented in part by Pratt, in part by Bellinger, and improved by Fowler, has been operated with greater success than any other. It consists of a single locomotive engine, of from twelve to fourteen-horse power, with a windlass near the boiler, around which passes a single steel-wire cable, which, by means of hinged clips, lays hold of the cable with a grip proportioned to the strain. This continuous cable, twice the width of the plot to be plowed, runs around a sheave, or pulley-block fastened to a self-acting anchor placed on the opposite side of the field from the engine. This "anchor" consists of a low truck or frame, with six wide sharp, disk edges, which cut so deep into the soil that it will not drag when the traction is applied. A hoisted with stones, or some other weight, on the middle of this frame, keeps it from tilting when the implement is applied to the plows. A sheave on the truck gives motion to a drum which with by another cable attached to a plow, and in the direction in which the furrows are to be sinewed each other, and the two ways ploughs, one on the headland on which the engine is placed, and the other on the headland on which the anchor is placed, are so arranged that they will always be in the proper relative position to each other, so that when the set-screw and the plow frame is at work the opposite set is carried, ready to be put in the set. The plow frame is loaded from one side of the field to the other, between the engine and the movable anchor, by reversing the action of the windlass. It is capable of turning from two to eight furrows at once, according to the power of the engine and lightness of the soil. The amount of ground plowed by such a machine varies from three to eight acres per day of eleven hour gang, according to depth of furrow from four to twelve inches in inches. An eight-furrow gang will do twice as much work in a day as a four-furrow gang.

Two various reasons seems to owing a slow growth of steam plowing in use in the United States, but it is probable the disadvantages of this mode of turning up the soil will not long prove a bar to improved draft become better understood, and other changes transpire, it will go into successful operation in a time not far distant.

HE GAVE IT AWAY.

The Thrilling Story of an Abstruse Boston Gas Meter.

(From the Boston Courier.)

He was trying to sell the stranger his house and lot, and, after the prospective purchaser had wandered through the attic, and nosed around the kitchen, and poked into the closets, and rattled the windows to see if they were tight, and smelled of the cistern water to see how much dead cat it would assay to the gallon, the owner of the property took him down into the cellar, which he had spent all night in whitewashing. The meter, which was stuck up on a shelf in one corner of the cellar, attracted the stranger's attention.

"How much does your gas cost you a year?" asked he.

The householder gave a knowing wink, poked the stranger in the ribs, and said:

"You don't look like a man who would give the thing away, and seeing as you're going to buy the house anyway, I don't mind telling you. It don't cost me a cent."

"It don't?" said the stranger, with evident surprise.
